Two Documents Signed

LD111053 Budapest Domestic Service in Hungarian 1000 GMT 11 Jun 86

[Istvan Kulcsar report from the press center at the Budapest Hilton Hotel -- live]

[Excerpts] The Budapest session of the Warsaw Pact Political Consultative Committee has ended. This morning's closing session was chaired by Nicolae Ceausescu, head of the Romanian delegation. The session heard a report by Marshal Kulikov, commander in chief of the Joint Armed Forces. The heads of delegations, participants in the meeting, then signed two documents.

The first is a communique on the session's work. This communique notes with anxiety that the international situation has become more tense as a result of an increase in the arms race. The Warsaw Pact member-states call on the other side -- that is, NATO -- to give an answer to the initiatives made by the USSR and the other socialist countries, especially the one projecting the elimination of mass-destruction weapons by the end of the 20th century. The Warsaw Pact member-states come out in favor of dialogue in general and the continuation of the Geneva summit dialogue is particular. The also support detent. The main task of our age, according to the Warsaw Pact member-states, is the halting of the arms race, and to this effect they are prepared to cooperate with all willing states on the broadest possible basis. The Warsaw Pact member-states are preparing for this autumn's meeting in Vienna of the European security conference in a constructive spirit. Naturally, European issues were given particular emphasis in the work of the session.

The second document signed today is an appeal to the NATO member-states and to all other countries; they are urged to reduce armed forces and conventional weapons in the whole of Europe. The document will certainly be published today.

REAGAN SAID 'TO IGNORE' USSR ARMS PROPOSALS

LD120918 Prague Domestic Service in Czech and Slovak 0800 GMT 12 Jun 86

[Text] One of the main points in President Reagan's news conference in Washington yesterday was the recent announcement that the United States intends to withdraw from the non-ratified Soviet-U.S. treaty on strategic offensive arms limitation, SALT II. The President yet again accused the USSR of violating the treaty. Answering a journalists' question, Ronald Reagan refused to admit that it was the United States that had violated SALT II many times by rapidly developing new offensive nuclear weapons of mass destruction, including his well-known star wars project. The U.S. President made it known that both he and his government will continue to ignore the USSR's constructive disarmament proposals.

ZHIVKOV HAILS ROLE OF GENEVA CONFERENCE

[Text] Sofia June 10 (BTA) -- Mr Todor Zhivkov, president of Bulgaria's State Council, highly commends the useful role of the conference on disarmament in Geneva as the only forum of multilateral talks in this vital area of international relations. In a message to the representatives of the participating countries in the conference's summer session, Mr Todor Zhivkov emphasises that Bulgaria's attitude to this forum is determined by the exceptional importance she attaches to disarmament in the settlement of the global problems facing mankind today. The Bulgarian head of state is of the opinion that the achievement of new political thinking, the political means and the dialogue is the only way out today which would secure the future of human civilisation. He arrives at the conclusion that the salutary choice can be made solely by all states together, irrespective of their geographical position, degree of economic advancement or socio-political system. Making a correct decision requires realism, boldness and will for action. It requires a sense of responsibility, a constructive approach, a readiness for reciprocal compromises, reckoning with the legitimate interests of the peoples' security, writes Mr Todor Zhivkov in his message to the conference on disarmament in Geneva.

The Bulgarian leader notes that for years on end, certain quarters have been running a pointless arms race and have been stockpiling mass destruction weapons, and recently they have been going ahead with the implementation of their exceedingly dangerous plans for turning outer space into another possible theatre of waging nuclear war. Without being too nice about the means, they are seeking to thrust their will on other nations and to impose their supremacy on the world from a position of strength. This political line is in drastic contradiction with the efforts towards solving the fundamental problem facing all peoples: safeguarding their independence and strengthening peace and security. This noble goal is also pursued by the U.S.S.R.-proposed all-embracing system of international security, Mr Todor Zhivkov emphasises. Bulgaria's State Council president says that the new "spirit of Geneva" should be further developed and infused with tangible content. He thinks that not only the Soviet Union, but the other side, too, should display political will and preparedness for concrete steps.

In his message, Mr Todor Zhivkov lays emphasis on the considerable attention which Bulgaria pays to her interrelations with the Balkan states, which is expressed in her efforts towards turning the Balkans into a nuclear- and chemical-weapon-free zone and in standing by her proposal to sign bilateral agreements with all Balkan countries which would contain a good-neighbor relations code. Another initiative, which is recalled, suggests that the Balkan states draw up and sign a treaty on the ecological protection of the peninsula and adopt an address on this matter to all countries and peoples in Europe.

Mr Todor Zhivkov believes that the conference agenda should assign the highest priority to the question of the suspension of all nuclear weapon tests and of negotiating their ban. The Soviet moratorium on all nuclear blasts, declared nearly a year ago, is conducive to the search for a mutually acceptable solution, the Bulgarian head of state emphasises. Another important task is to reach efficient agreements on curbing and halting the arms race on earth and its prevention in outer space. And, last but not least, the message says it is to be desired that the conference should bring its work on the prohibition of chemical weapons to an early and successful completion, as it has made substantial progress over the last few years. In conclusion of his message, Bulgaria's State Council President Todor Zhivkov wishes the participants in the conference on disarmament in Geneva the strength and good will they will need to achieve success in solving the exceedingly important problems on their agenda.

BULGARIA'S GOTSEV SPEAKS AT STOCKHOLM MEETING

[Text] Stockholm, June 10 (BTA) -- Mr Lyuben Gotsev, deputy minister of foreign affairs of Bulgaria, made a statement at the first plenary session of the 11th session of the Stockholm Conference on Confidence-Building Measures, Security and Disarmament in Europe which was opened here today. Mr Lyuben Gotsev pointed out that the most important characteristic features of the current situation are the new, bold and in many aspects unprecedented proposals of the USSR and the Warsaw Treaty in all spheres including nuclear, space and chemical weapons as well as well as conventional weapons from the Atlantic to the Urals. The stands taken by the socialist countries in Stockholm are also constructive and flexible. Unfortunately so far not all have responded with the reciprocity necessary at such talks.

Despite the fact that only weeks remain until the end of this stage of the conference -- September 19 -- Mr Lyuben Gotsev stressed that there exist enough possibilities for achieving considerable results. And instead of holding debates on whether the future agreements would be sufficiently material or whether they would be an unsufficient minimum, it is necessary to direct the efforts to the speeding up of the editing of the future final document.

The success of the talks in Stockholm, the Bulgarian deputy foreign minister pointed out, would give an impetus to the fruitful work of the forthcoming meeting in Vienna of the countries which participated in the Helsinki conference. By way of conclusion, Mr Lyuben Gotsev said that in compliance with her abilities, Bulgaria will contribute to the successful end of the talks in the Swedish capital, as well as to the future development of the CSCE process, including to the positive start of the meeting in Vienna.

CANDIDATES MEET CONSTITUENTS, ADDRESS ISSUES

Mladenov Stresses Foreign Policy

AU040805 Sofia RABOTNICHESKO DELO in Bulgarian 23 May 86 p 4

[Excerpts] The forthcoming elections are a great political event, which mobilizes the Plovdiv Okrug's working people and gives meaning and content to their deeds.

The optimistic balance and inspiring prospects included in the documents of the 13th BCP Congress are the political platform of the Fatherland Front's candidates. This was pointed out at the 22 May pre-election meeting of the constituency of the 201 Plovdiv election district with the candidate for the Ninth National Assembly, Petur Mladenov, member of the BCP Central Committee Politburo and minister of foreign affairs. The meeting was attended by Ivan Panev, first secretary of the BCP Plovdiv Okrug Committee.

Petur Mladenov pointed out that foreign policy occupies an important place in the election platform. He pointed out that the world situation is tense and alarming. Standing on overtly hostile anti-Soviet and antisocialist positions, the U.S. political and military leaders and their Western allies provoke an arms race unprecedented in its scope and quality -- especially a nuclear arms race -- and are trying to change the balance of power in their favor. The Pentagon is not satisfied anymore with the earth, water, and air, so it concentrates on space now. The actions of the White House increase the danger of an annihilating nuclear war, the speaker stressed.

The USSR and the other countries of the socialist community confront the militaristic and adventurist policy of imperialism with their consistent policy of peace and peaceful coexistence between states with different social systems.

The People's Republic of Bulgaria fully approves and warmly supports the broad peace offensive of the Soviet State. The program on creating a comprehensive system of international security, promulgated by the 27th CPSU Congress, is a bright manifestation of high humanity and an example of political realism.

Extending the defensive military-political alliance of the Warsaw Pact member-states is convincing evidence of their determination to further defend the achievements of socialism and the cause of peace, Comrade Mladenov pointed out.

He assured his constituency that Bulgaria will further make its contribution to strengthening the unity and the unity of action of the fraternal countries in the common struggle to overcome international tension, stop the arms race, progress towards disarmament, liquidate the hotbeds of tension, solve all disputed issues through negotiations, and radically improve the world political situation.

The 13th BCP Congress confirmed the party course toward elevating comprehensive cooperation and coming together with the USSR to a new level, and ever closer integration and production sharing with the fraternal socialist countries, the speaker said. This course obtained new and powerful impulses at the meetings and talks of Comrades Todor Zhivkov and Mikhail Gorbachev; they outlined new strategic trends for Bulgarian-Soviet cooperation and coming together. Petur Mladenov stressed the special significance and scope of the tasks related to implementing the long-range program on developing economic and scientific-technical cooperation between the People's Republic of Bulgaria and the USSR until the year 2000. He pointed out that bilateral relations with the other countries of the socialist community will be elevated to a new and higher level.

The People's Republic of Bulgaria attributes a special significance to its policy in the Balkans. Our country will continue to work to strengthen peace and security, confidence and good-neighborliness, and develop understanding and cooperation in the region. The People's Republic of Bulgaria supports the development of the Balkan states multilateral cooperation in certain areas, in which there exist common interests. However, we have repeatedly stressed that complete political, economic, and cultural cooperation can be implemented first of all on a bilateral basis.

Further on, he stressed active political and cultural relations and mutually beneficial cooperation with the countries of Asia, Africa, and Latin America. The minister of foreign affairs pointed out that we attribute a great significance to our relations with the countries that have embraced the socialist orientation. In accordance with the principles of peaceful coexistence, our country strives to develop equal and mutually beneficial relations with the developed capitalist countries.

Bulgaria makes a constructive contribution to the activity of many international forums and organizations, first of all to UN activity. Our country was elected once again a member of the UN Security Council, the organ which has the main responsibility, within the UN framework, for protecting peace and security.

Dzhurov Outlines Stance

[Text] Etropole, 21 May (BTA) -- Today the people of this dynamically developing region of our homeland voiced their desire to create and live in peace and to steadfastly follow the April general policy of the party at an election meeting with the people's deputy candidate for the 321st Etropole District, Army General Dobri Dzhurov, member of the Politburo of the BCP Central Committee and minister of national defense.

The people will meet the forthcoming elections with significant successes in economic, political, and spiritual construction. The technological and technical renewal that has begun in the region's enterprises, primarily the copper extraction industry, medical services, and the textile industry, is also a good basis for socioeconomic construction during the Ninth 5-Year Plan period.

Nikolay Dyulgerov, first secretary of the Sofia Okrug BCP Committee, took part in the election meeting.

We will be holding the forthcoming election at an exceptionally responsible time for our country, for the socialist community, and for the whole of mankind, stated Comrade Dobri Dzhurov in his election speech. The responsibility stems from the great historic and fateful tasks set by the 27th CPSU Congress and the 13th BCP Congress and from the times in which we live.

The people's deputy candidate dealt in detail on the decisions of the 13th BCP Congress and on the strategic course that the latter has outlined for building the developed socialist society upon the basis of the scientific and technical revolution. He emphasized that this course is aimed at accelerating the rates of our economic development, at utilizing to the maximum all intensive factors, and at developing on this basis the advantages of the socialist social order and socialist democracy in order to meet ever more fully the material, social, and spiritual needs of the people.

We are approaching the coming elections with a feeling of pride in the comprehensive successes in building socialist Bulgaria, the speaker emphasized.

These successes are inseparably linked with the historic April 1956 Plenum of the BCP Central Committee. The facts and figures on our achievements during this period are impressive.

The political platform on which the Fatherland Front is approaching the forthcoming elections is based on the decisions of the 13th BCP Congress, he said. It was stressed that the reorganization of both the base and the superstructure of our society, which is necessary in order to fulfill the great tasks the congress has set, has already begun. The aim is to create optimum conditions for the development of science and scientific-technical progress, for the speedy application of their achievements in practice, and, on this basis, to accelerate the country's development.

Comrade Dobri Dzhurov spoke of the main directions in which efforts will be aimed in order to solve the high tasks and goals that have been set. He pointed out the need to increase the rates of development, to restructure our economy, to make efficient use of the existing raw-material base and create a qualitatively new raw-material base, to radically renew the investment process, and to accelerate the transformation of the whole of the scientific front. Special attention was paid to the further improvement of social policy.

It was stressed that in order to successfully solve the high tasks and goals set, it is necessary to greatly increase the role of the subjective factor -- of the administrative, economic, party, trade union, and Komsomol organs and organizations -- and of every leader and executive figure, and to further improve their style of work and leadership. The need was pointed out for the eradication of inertia, old habits, poor discipline, and a low sense of responsibility, outward show, and bureaucratism.

The speaker dealt with certain aspects of the international situation. We are living, working, and building the developed socialist society in an exceptionally complex, contradictory, tense, and dangerous international situation, he said. At the end of the 1970's and the start of the 1980's the reactionary circles in the West adopted a policy of confrontation, of total opposition to the Soviet Union and the countries of the socialist community, and a furious anticommunist campaign. The United States and the NATO countries are implementing dozens of programs for the development [suzdavane] of new weapons of monstrous destructive force. The latest provocation against mankind is the "Strategic Defense Initiative" announced by Reagan, by which the United States is extending the arms race into space. As well as arming and armed provocations, the imperialist circles are conducting a true psychological war against the peoples of the socialist community. After the "Antonov case," the accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power station has now been utilized as a motive for continuing the malicious propaganda.

In contrast to the policy of imperialism, aimed at confrontation, the Soviet Union and the states of the socialist community are putting forward a policy aimed at halting the arms race, reducing international tension, and creating a climate of good-neighborliness and mutually beneficial cooperation. Up to the present, over 110 proposals have been made in this direction, Comrade Dobri Dzhurov pointed out. The expanded peace program was also worked out in the documents of the 27th CPSU Congress, while the congresses of the fraternal parties, including our own 13th congress, made a contribution towards it. However, unfortunately not a single one of the proposals put forward by the USSR and the Warsaw Pact member-states has been accepted. This is forcing the Soviet Union and the other socialist countries to constantly take measures to strengthen the defensive capacity of every country individually and of our community as a whole.

In conclusion, the orator pointed out that the essential elements for solving the exceptionally responsible and historic tasks in all areas of our life are dynamism and acceleration.

The 27th CPSU Congress, the 13th BCP Congress, and the congresses of the other fraternal parties have made calls for dynamism in action.

Every one of us should start from such positions, said the speaker, when he determines his place and role in fulfilling the decisions of the 13th BCP Congress. The guiding principle should be the requirement for everyone to fulfill his obligations with a high sense of responsibility. He voiced his confidence that the electors of the Etropole electoral district would not spare their strength, labor, energy, knowledge, and experience and would make their own worthy contribution to the fulfillment of the party's instructions.

Expressing his gratitude for the high trust placed in him, Comrade Dobri Dzhurov called on everyone to show up at the ballot boxes on 8 June and cast his vote for the party's Leninist April policy, for the cause of socialism, and for the further flourishing of the fatherland.

The people's deputy candidate was given concrete commissions connected with the social construction of the region -- the building of new schools, reading rooms, and automatic telephone exchanges.

Palin Assesses Tasks

AU061023 Sofia NARODNA ARMIYA in Bulgarian 5 Jun 86 p 3

[Major Blagomil Banov report: "Meeting with Constituents"]

[Text] "I would consider it a great honor if I should be elected by the voters of this heroic and industrious region as deputy to the Ninth National Assembly," Colonel General Velko Palin, head of the BCP Central Committee "National and Social Security Department" and candidate for the National Assembly from the Radnevo 339th election district, stated at an election meeting held at the House of Culture of the "Maritsa East" power supply plant workers. Col Gen Velko Palin pointed out the achievements of the miners, electric power workers, and agricultural toilers of the region and of the conurbation. Radnevo is one of the power supply centers of our country. There is no doubt that at the forthcoming elections the inhabitants of Radnevo will vote for the implementation of the 13th BCP Congress decisions and for the further prosperity of socialist Bulgaria.

The speaker dwelled on the peace-loving foreign policy of the BCP and on the role of our country in transforming the Balkans into a nuclear-free zone, into a zone of peace. However, under the conditions of the increased danger of nuclear war, which are provoked by the aggressive policy of the United States and its West European NATO allies, the consolidation of the economic and defense power of the socialist community member-states is becoming increasingly important. That is why one of the primary tasks of our party is to improve the combat readiness and the training of the Bulgarian People's Army.

Col Gen Velko Palin reassured his voters that he will do everything within his power in order to accomplish the constituents' instructions assigned to him.

Col Gen Velko Palin also met his constituents in the army detachment in which Officer Georgi Ivanchev is serving.

[Text] ONLY A FEW DAYS REMAIN UNTIL ELECTION DAY, WHEN THE BULGARIAN VOTERS ARE CALLED TO VOTE FOR THE CANDIDATES OF THE FATHERLAND FRONT.

THE PROGRAM ADOPTED BY THE REMARKABLE 13TH BCP CONGRESS FOR THE FURTHER, ACCELERATED CONSTRUCTION OF A MATURE SOCIALIST SOCIETY IN OUR COUNTRY AND FOR THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE COUNTRY DURING THE NINTH 5-YEAR PLAN PERIOD AND THROUGHOUT THE PERIOD UP TO 2000, HAS BECOME A POLITICAL, ECONOMIC, SOCIAL, AND CULTURAL ELECTION PLATFORM FOR WHICH THE VOTERS WILL VOTE ON 8 JUNE 1986.

This platform marks the entire election campaign, which was organized by the Fatherland Front under the leadership of the BCP with the most active participation of the Bulgarian National Agrarian Union, the Bulgarian trade unions, the Dimitrov Komsomol, and other social organizations, as well as movements. The work accomplished during the election campaign once more demonstrates the people's strong unity and cohesion, rallied around the banner of the Fatherland Front; it demonstrates their loyalty and devotion to the BCP, as well as their firm resolve to implement the party plans.

THE NATIONWIDE, CONSTITUTIONAL, AND EQUAL ELECTION LAW CREATES PREREQUISITES NOT ONLY FOR DIRECT VOTING ON ELECTION DAY, BUT ALSO GUARANTEES OPPORTUNITIES FOR THE PERSONAL PARTICIPATION OF EVERY CITIZEN IN THE PREPARATION OF THE ELECTIONS BEGINNING WITH THE SELECTION AND NOMINATION OF CANDIDATES UP TO THE ANNOUNCEMENT OF ELECTION RESULTS.

ON THE BASIS OF THE DEMOCRATIC PRINCIPLES ON WHICH OUR ELECTION SYSTEM IS BASED, AS REGARDS THE ORGANIZATION AND PROCEDURE OF THE ELECTIONS CARRIED OUT BY THE PEOPLE THEMSELVES AND UNDER THEIR CONTROL, PUBLIC MEETINGS ARE BEING HELD THROUGHOUT THE COUNTRY. NEARLY 2 MILLION PEOPLE ARE PARTICIPATING AND 73,000 ELECTION COMMISIONS HAVE BEEN ESTABLISHED WITH A STAFF OF 421,225 MEMBERS, WHO REPRESENT ALL SOCIAL GROUPS OF THE POPULATION, AS WELL AS THE PARTY AND SOCIAL ORGANIZATIONS AND MOVEMENTS.

The people's political confidence in the BCP and in the people's government was specifically expressed, in particular, in the selection and nomination of candidates for the National Assembly. The leadership of the Fatherland Front, as well as the other sociopolitical organizations, accomplished considerable work and accomplished this task with a great sense of responsibility. After careful evaluation of the activities of former people's councillors, mayors, and jurors, the respective Fatherland Front committees were submitted numerous proposals by basic, territorial party organizations, by Fatherland Front district and village committees, and by Komsomol and trade union leading bodies.

With the coordinated efforts of party and Bulgarian National Agrarian Union [BZNS] leading bodies, as well as of various other social organizations, movements, and creative unions, a realistic evaluation of the candidates' suitability was ensured. NEARLY 40,000 MEETINGS, WITH THE PARTICIPATION OF APPROXIMATELY 3 MILLION VOTERS, WERE HELD TO DISCUSS AND NOMINATE THE CANDIDATES FOR NATIONAL ASSEMBLY DEPUTIES, PEOPLE'S COUNCILLORS, AND MAYORS IN THE ELECTION DISTRICTS; THESE MEETINGS WERE CHARACTERIZED BY LIVELY ACTIVITIES AND MASS PARTICIPATION OF THE VOTERS, BY WIDE PUBLICITY AND POPULARITY.

TAKING INTO CONSIDERATION THE REQUIREMENTS AND CRITERIA OF THE GREAT GOALS MAPPED OUT BY THE 13TH BCP CONGRESS, THE FATHERLAND FRONT NATIONAL COUNCIL, FOLLOWING THE UNANIMOUSLY EXPRESSED WISH OF THE POLITICAL AND SOCIAL ORGANIZATIONS, ADOPTED THE UNIFORM LIST OF THE FATHERLAND FRONT FOR THE CANDIDACY OF 400 NATIONAL ASSEMBLY DEPUTIES.

WITHIN THE SCHEDULE ENVISAGED BY ALW OVER 75,000 CANIDATES FOR NATIONAL ASSEMBLY DEPUTIES, MAYOR, AND JURORS WERE NOMINATED AND REGISTERED.

At the election meetings, which proceeded in a calm and businesslike atmosphere, the voters justly and strictly evaluated the qualities of the candidates. They supported nearly all candidates proposed by the Fatherland Front. Nevertheless, we must point out, THAT DURING THESE DISCUSSIONS 330 OF THE INITIALLY PROPOSED CANDIDATES WERE NOT ACCEPTED. THIS IS A NEW DEMONSTRATION OF THE STRENGTH OF PEOPLE'S DEMOCRACY, OF THE DEMOCRATIC CHARACTER OF OUR ELECTION SYSTEM.

This democratic system of selecting candidates for the National Assembly enabled us TO INCREASE THE SHARE OF THOSE DIRECTLY ENGAGED IN MATERIAL PORODUCTION, THE CREATIVE INTELLIGENTSIA, YOUTH, AND WOMEN. MORE WORKERS FROM THE INDUSTRIAL SECTOR, THE BUILDING SECTOR, AND AGRICULTURE; MORE SCIENTISTS, ARTISTS, AND CULTURAL FIGURES; MORE DISTINGUISHED PUBLIC FIGURES; AND MORE PEOPLE OF DIFFERENT GENERATIONS ARE NOW INCLUDED AMONG THE CANDIDATES FOR PEOPLE'S REPRESENTATIVES. The names of the candidates for National Assembly deputies, for people's councillors, mayors, and jurors, who have already been registered, have been annonced and submitted for public assessment. This once more reveals ONE OF THE STRONGEST FEATURES OF OUR SOCIALIST DEMOCRACY -- THAT EVERYONE SHOULD KNOW AND BE WELL ACQUAINTED WITH HIS FUTURE ELECTED REPRESENTATIVE, TO WHOM THE PEOPLE WILL ENTRUST THE COUNTRY'S ADMINISTRATION, AS WELL AS THE MANAGEMENT OF CONURBATION SYSTEMS, AND INHABITED SETTLEMENT.

The whole country is involved in lively political activities today; our election platform is being discussed. At numerous meetings and rallies the registered candidates are explaining the party and state socioeconomic policy; they are elucidating the problems awaiting solution in the respective okrugs, municipalities, and settlements. Successes and shortcomings are being assessed in a sincere and frank dialogue. The style and methods of the work accomplished by the poeople's councils, the mayors' offices, as well as by the leading and executive cadres of these councils and offices, are being evaluated and recommendations are being submited for greater response to the people's needs and requests, as well as in connection with overcoming negative phenomena.

AT THESE MEETINGS AND RALLIES THE PEOPLE'S VOICE RESOUNDS STRONGLY THROUGH THE ASSIGNMENTS THEY SUBMIT TO THEIR FUTURE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY DEPUTIES. THESE ASSIGNMENTS, WHICH ARE WELL THOIUGHT OUT IN ADVANCE AND ARE COORDINATED IN REGARD TO THE POSSIBILITIES OF IMPLEMENTING THEM, REPRESENT A SYNTHESIS OF THE PEOPLE"S WILL, WHICH THROUGHOUT THE ENTIRE TERM OF OFFICE OF THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY will and must represent a source of grewat social information for the people's councils and their organs. The people fully support the decisions of the 13th BCP Congress, as well as the introductory and closing speeches delivered by Comrade Todor Zhivkov at the congress. The election meetings once more expressed our people's total approval of the established, long-term economic strategy for the new quality improvement of our economy on the basis of the achievements of scientific-technical progress, their approval of the comprehensive intensification and dynamic development of production, their approval of a 3-3.5 times increase in national income and in social labor productivity by the end of this century.

Along with this, the people have raised topical questions connection with the comprehensive, social services, with town development, health protection, and education, as well as with the consolidation of the Bulgarian family in its reproductive function, and in connection with the construction of a material base for recreation, physical culture, tourism, and so forth.

The party's and state's peace-loving and humanitarian foreign policy enjoys nationwide approval. Our country's stand in favor of peace and in the struggle against the aggressive policy of the imperialist forces, which are trying to disrupt the existing military balance and to take advantage of super-rearmament, is consistent. The People's Republic of Bulgaria follows its internationalists line with unrelenting zeal, a line aimed at developing and comprehensively consolidating economic and political relations with the socialist countries and, above all, with the Soviet Union. Our country is striving to transform the Balkan peninsula into a model of peaceful coexistence of states with different social systems, into a model of cooperation and understanding.

This unswerving policy of peace and good-neighborly relations constantly enhances the increased prestige of the People's Republic of Bulgaria. This policy is inseparable from the constructive plans of our country and at the forthcoming elections, this policy will once more enjoy the wholehearted support and approval of the entire people.

The Bulgarian voters also fully support the peace-loving policy of the CPSU and the Soviet Union, which was specifically expressed in Mikhail Gorbachev's declaration, in the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress, as well as in the ensuing proposals submitted by the USSR -- to liquidate nuclear weapons, to free mankind from the nightmare of self-destruction, as well as to build up a world, free of wars and weapons. The Bulgarian people gladly welcome the most recent Soviet initiative to extend the one-sided moratorium on nuclear arms tests up to 6 August 1986, which is the 41st anniversary of the first nuclear bomb droped on Hiroshima by the United States.

This evaluation and the support of the voters represent a great testimony to the realistic approach and humanitarianism of the Fatherland Front political platform during the forthcoming elections.

THE CANDIDATES OF THE FATHERLAND FRONT ARE ALREADY KNOWN. THE ESSENCE OF THE VARIED POLITICAL AND ORGANIZATIONAL ACTIVITIES HITHERTO ACCOMPLISHED CAN BE DEFINED IN THE FOLLOWING TERMS: FOR THE SAKE OF THE PEOPLE'S HAPPINESS, FOR THEIR FURTHER PROSPERITY -- ELECTION DAY MUST BECOME A UNIQUE DAY OF FESTIVITIES AND CELEBRATION.

ALL BULGARIAN CITIZENS -- WORKERS, PEASANTS, TECHNICIAN, ENGINEERS, CIVIL SERVANTS, AND SCIENTISTS; MEN AND WOMEN; YOUNG BOYS AND GIRLS -- MUST BE WELL AWARE OF THEIR OWN RESPONSIBILITY TO SOCIETY FOR THE CONTRIBUTION THAT THEY ARE OBLIGED TO MAKE TO THE IMPLEMENTATION OF THE COMMON CAUSE, TO THE ACCELERATED EXPANSION OF SCIENTIFIC-TECHNICAL REVOLUTION IN OUR COUNTRY. THE UNDERSTANDING THAT PERSONAL HAPPINESS AND POROSPERITY CAN BE ACHIEVED ONLY THROUGH COMMON DEVELOPMENT AND PROGRESS IS A POWERFUL FORCE AND A GUIDING LINE IN OUR SOCIETY. WITH EVEN GREATRER ENERGY, WITH EVEN MORE INITIATIVE AND PERSEVERANCE WE MUST WORK TODAY FOR THE IMPLEMENTATION OF THE 1986 SOCIOECONOMIC PLAN. WE MUST STRUGGLE AGAINST VIOLATIONS OF WORKING DISCIPLINE, OF STATE AND TECHNOLOGICAL DISCIPLINE. WE MUST ENGAGE IN A STRUGGLE FOR AN EFFICIENT USE OF MATERIALS, FOR THRIFTINESS, AND FOR GREAT QUALITY, AS WELL AS FOR A REDUCTION OF PRODUCTION COSTS AND FOR AN INCREASE IN SOCIAL LABOR PRODUCTIVITY. THERE IS NO DOUBT, THAT ON 8 JUNE, UNDER THE BANNER OF THE FATHERLAND FRONT, ALL VOTERS WILL VOTE FOR THE HAPPINESS AND PROSPERITY OF THE BULGARIAN PEOPLE, FOR THE ETERNAL AND INDESTRUCTIBLE BULGARIAN-SOVIET FRIENDSHIP, FOR THE CAUSE OF PEACE AND SOCIALISM, FOR THE FURTHER SCIENTIFIC-TECHNICAL AND SOCIOECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT OF OUR COUNTRY, FOR THE COMPREHENSIVE PROSPERITY AND UPSURGE OF OUR BELOVED FATHERLAND -- THE PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF BULGARIA.

HUSAK RECEIVES SOCIALIST PARTY PRESIDIUM

[CTK report: "Appreciation of Activity and Support"]

[Text] Prague -- Gustav Husak, CPCZ Central Committee general secretary, CSSR president, and chairman of the CSSR National Front Central Committee, yesterday [22 April] received at Prague Castle the Presidium of the Central Committee of the Czechoslovak Socialist Party, headed by its chairman, Bohuslav Kucera. In his statement Bohuslav Kucera, chairman of the Czechoslovak Socialist Party [CSS] expressed full support for the program of the 17th CPCZ Congress, which the CSSR has received as the common program of the entire National Front. He acquainted Comrade Husak with CSS activity, particularly the results of the activity of its organizations and members prior to the 17th CPCZ Congress and in preparations for elections to the representative bodies. He also briefed G. Husak on preparations for the Ninth CSS National Conference in February 1987. In conclusion, he assured Comrade Husak that the CSS will lead its members toward effectively contributing to the acceleration of the socio-economic development of our society, this being also the best contribution to consolidating peace.

Comrade Husak highly appreciated the fact that the CSS has expressed unambiguous agreement with the program of the 17th CPCZ Congress and is granting it full support. He stressed that the acceleration of the CSSR's socio-economic development can be achieved solely through high-quality and efficient work of all working people. In this context he reviewed the share of CSS members and organizations in developing the working initiative and civic involvement in honor of the 17th CPCZ Congress and stated that the Communist Party feels sincere respect for this approach and also counts on it in the future.

He then spoke with appreciation of the CSS participation in the activities of the National Front, within the framework of which the effort of the total majority of our people is united in the socialist construction work, in the implementation of the citizens' political rights, and in the satisfaction of their multilateral interests and needs. He underscored that, in connection with the exacting tasks of the next 5 years, and on a long-range basis up to the end of the century, the significance of the National Front and of the organizations rallied in it will further increase, since it would be impossible to ensure the further dynamic development of our society in the way set down by the 17th congress without deepening the socialist democracy and without the creative initiative and active participation of the broadest people's strata in the solution of state and public affairs.

Comrade Husak then spoke of the most important domestic-political event of the coming period -- and the general elections to representative bodies -- and he expresed the conviction that the preparation and course of these elections will represent the all-popular start of the creative, enterprising,and conscious implementation of the election programs of the National Front. In conclusion, he dealt with certain topical international issues. He stressed that Czechoslovakia resolutely supports the Soviet Union's peace program and its new initiative for limiting conventional armament and armed forces in Europe, submitted by M. Gorbachev in Berlin, and that it regards them as a realistic path toward disarmament and toward creating a comprehensive program of international security.

The meeting, which was held in a friendly atmosphere and with a full concurrence of opinions on the discussed issues, was attended by Jindrich Polednik, CPCZ Central Committee secretary; By Lubomir Prochazka, CPCZ Central Committee department head; and by Frantisek Salda, head of the CSSR President's Office.

ARMY REGULARS, RESERVES CONDUCT FIELD EXERCISE

[Text] Bohemia June 10 (CTK) -- Regular and reserve troops of the Czechoslovak People's Army have demonstrated high preparedness combat mastery and resolve to fulfil demanding tasks in the defence of the socialist homeland and the whole socialist community in a recent exercise. The tactical exercise, in mountainous and wooded terrain of a military exercises zone, was aimed at improving and consolidating the habits of commanders, staffs, political workers and members of the Czechoslovak People's Army in directing and carrying out transfers over a long distance and waging active and continuous combat activity in complex conditions.

At a meeting at the close of the exercise, attended also by representatives of the joint armed forces of the Warsaw Treaty member states, Colonel-General Jaroslav Klicha, chief of the main political administration of the Czechoslovak People's Army stressed that the tactical exercise successfully fulfilled its aims. It confirmed the preparedness of the troops involved to fulfil the tasks of contemporary combat in difficult terrain and weather.

In the complex international situation, members of the Czechoslovak People's Army thus convincingly demonstrated their readiness to reliably safeguard the socialist construction and peaceful life of the Czechoslovak people. The tactical exercise proved the growing political, moral, and combat preparedness of the army.

RUDE PRAVO REBUTS U.S. CHARGE'S LETTER

[Editorial article: "Who Makes Reasonable Dialogue Difficult" -- quotation marks as published]

[Text] Mr Carl W. Schmidt, charge d'affaires ad interim of the United States in Prague, on 5 June sent the following letter to the chief editor of RUDE PRAVO:

"I feel the duty to inform you that I was shocked by an article published in RUDE PRAVO on 19 May, presumably with the intention of explaining the recent bombing of the La Belle Discotheque in West Berlin. The publishing of that article in a prominent spot in the newspaper of the CPCZ Central Committee clearly shows that the views expressed in it have official support. Nonetheless, the article presents a churlish distortion and disinformation, which are an insult even to the most fundamental norms of journalism.

Just the opposite of what the article presents for belief, no respected international news organization had published information falsely accusing the CIA or some other Western organization of taking part in the attack. However, there exists very strong evidence connecting the Libyan People's Bureau in East Berlin with the La Belle attack.

Your "report" is particularly insulting because its publication in RUDE PRAVO, the paper of the Central Committee of the Communist Party, gives it official support. Since the article quoted the CTK, the participation of official Czechoslovak information media is actually doubly obvious. Permit me to quote the editorial published on the RUDE PRAVO's front page on 28 November 1979:

"Our media are agencies of the party, state, and public institutions which control them and to whom they are accountable for their activity." [The quote is distorted -- editorial remark]

Representatives of the United States as well as of Czechoslovakia often stress that our governments and societies are divided by great differences in views and attitudes. Our views on many things fundamentally differ. However, there is usually an endeavor somehow to inform one another about one's viewpoints reasonably, on the basis of factual information. The decision to publish that article, which does not contain any factual information, but only distorts and quite obviously falsifies facts, makes reasonable dialogue between our countries even more difficult. Therefore I demand that your newspaper publish a correction repudiating and disclaiming that lying and malicious article."

This is the full text of the letter, written in Czech. Mr Carl W. Schmidt complains in it about a report that actually was published in RUDE PRAVO on 17 May, on the paper's last page. To refresh the reader's memory, we recall it once more. It went like this:

"Beirut (CTK correspondent) -- The U.S. espionage center CIA was behind the explosion in a West Berlin discotheque on 5 April this year. This was reported on Friday by the leading Beirut newspaper AL-SAFIR with a reference to reliable Western sources.

The newspaper wrote that according to information the appurtenant FRG agencies received, the explosive was placed in the La Belle night club by a member of the American Army, who had contacts with local drug dealers.

U.S. authorities assert that they, allegedly, acquired 'evidence' about Libya's participation in this terrorist action, when they, allegedly, intercepted an appropriate radio message sent by the Libyan embassy in the GDR. However, in reality this report was sent by a certain U.S. Army sergeant from a car equipped with corresponding telecommunication equipment, AL-SAFIR said.

With a reference to the same sources, the daily reported at the same time that the United States plans further similar provocatory operations with the objective to create an atmosphere 'favorable' for a new aggression against Libya."

Let us take a closer look at what the U.S. representative mission accuses us of. We published an agency report, citing the Beirut newspapr AL-SAFIR. In journalism this is a usual practice, usual also in U.S. newspapers.

The U.S. Embassy is trying to lecture RUDE PRAVO on how it should or should not treat foreign political information. However, what matters is evidently not only the mode of information activity. The matter has a more profound background -- passing off black for white, the terrorist attack on Libya as an almost rightful deed. It was, to wit, precisely the terrorist action in the La Belle Discotheque which the U.S. Government made use of as a pretext for a brutal air raid on sleeping Tripoli and Banghazi.

As regards the CIA?

The fact that a serious suspicion that precisely the CIA stood behind the terrorist action in the West Berlin discotheque appeared in the Beirut paper -- and not only there -- is not difficut to comprehend. History -- both older and more recent -- contains a number of examples which certain U.S. circles literally ordered to serve as pretexts for aggressions. At the dawn of U.S. imperalism it was the sinking of one's own ship in the Havana Harbor tht was pretext for unlashing war against Spain. The "Gulf of Tonkin incident" was to give, and did give, Washington the "right" to barbarous extermination air raids on northern Vietnam. The Pentagon's secret documents, uncovered in their time, contained conclusive evidence of who the inspirers of similar international provocations are.

What, actually, is the purpose of the letter from the U.S. representative mission? There is not the slightest doubt about it. To advocate the policy of state terrorism.

The writer of the letter is concerned about a "reasonable dialogue," but it is more than obvious from the content of the letter that he is interested in a dialogue no more than those who recently committed acts of international terrorism and now international perfidy by trampling underfoot the Salt II treaty.

Mr Carl W. Schmidt really undertook an unenviable task -- to justify the CIA and the bombs dropped on Libya. A task entirely thankless.

PITRA CHAIRS SECRETARIES' AGRICULTURAL SESSION

["Z"-signed report: "On the Tasks of the State Plan in Agriculture"]

[Text] Prague -- A consultative meeting of secretaries of CPCZ regional committees in charge of party work in agriculture was held in Prague on Monday [9 Jun]. The session, which was chaired by Frantisek Pitra, candidate member of the presidium and secretary of the CPCZ Central Committee, was attended by the ministers of agriculture and food as well as the chairman of the Central Committee of the Union of Cooperative Farmers. The meeting discussed current tasks of party-political work in the agricultural-food industry complex in the wake of the 17th CPCZ congress and the course of action in implementing the conclusions of the third session of the CPCZ Central Committee. In this connection it stressed the need to adopt a more demanding approach to raising the economic level, of lagging agricultural enterprises, to be more consistent in bringing the measures of the system of agricultural management down to intra-enterprise collectives, and to improve the forms of labor organization and the system of incentives for final results.

The consultative meeting further dealt with steps to be taken in implementing the conclusions reached by the CPCZ Central Committee Presidium with regard to the tasks of the state plan in 1986, with supplies of foodstuffs of animal origin in the first half of the year, and with the outlook up to the end of the year. It was stressed that maximum attention must currently be devoted to the successful mastering of the second stage of the spring chores, especially to the quality of agricultural technology in sugar beet and potato growing, to the harvest of perennial feed crops, meadows, and pastures, and to comprehensive preparations for the grain harvest.

HONECKER CHAIRS MEETING ON ELECTION RESULTS

[Text] Berlin, 9 Jun (ADN) -- The Council of State of the German Democratic Republic met in Berlin on Monday for a session that was chaired by Erich Honecker, general secretray of the SED Central Committee and chairman of the Council of State. He dealt with the report by the Republic's Election Commission on the fulfillment of its tasks in the preparation and execution of the elections for the People's Chamber, the city assembly of Berlin, and the bezirk assemblies on 8 June.

Egon Krenz, chairman of the Republic's Election Commission, member of the Politburo and secretary of the SED Central Committee, stated that the elections were prepared and executed on the basis of the electoral law and the resolutions passed on the subject by the Council of State. The socialist principles on the management of elections laid down in the Constitution were consistently implemented. The Republic's Election Commission has declared the elections valid and passed the final result to the People's Chamber.

Erich Honecker paid tribute to the decision made in the elections by the GDR citizens as a convincing commitment to the continuation of the policy of the workers' and peasants' state, which is directed at the people's well-being, the strengthening of socialism, and the safeguarding of peace. The election results demonstrated again that the political-moral unity of the people and the cohesion of all parties and mass organizations working together in the National Front of the GDR are firmer than ever. This manifestation of the political will of the citizens of the GDR, the Council of State chairman stressed, is an important contribution to the further shaping of the developed socialist society and to the implementation of the peace initiatives of the Soviet Union and the fraternal socialist countries. With the decision made in the elections on 8 June and the high results achieved at the same time in the fulfillment and overfulfillment of the plans, even better preconditions have been created to attain the goals set by the 11th SED Congress.

The Council of State approvingly took note of the report by the Republic's Election Commission. He thanked the members of the Election Commission and its chairman, Egon Krenz, for the preparation and execution of the elections in accordance with the rules. The Council of State expresses best wishes to the newly elected deputies and replacement candidates for their future activity. "We are convinced," Erich Honecker said, "that you will stand up energetically, in proven and trusting cooperation with the citizens, for the further strengthening of our GDR, for the people's well-being and the preservation of peace."

The Council of State decided, in accordance with Article 62, paragraph 1 of the GDR Constitution, to convene the newly elected People's Chamber for its first meeting in Berlin on 16 June 1986.

In the subsequent debate, the following persons spoke: Wolfgang Heyl, deputy chairman of the CDU [Christian Democratic Union of Germany]; Guenter Hartmann, member of the Presidium and secretary of the NDPD [National Democratic Party of Germany] main committee; Hans-Dieter Raspe, member of the political committee and secretary of the LDPD [Liberal Democratic Party of Germany] central executive; as well as Erwin Binder, member of the Presidium and secretary of the DBD [Democratic Peasants' Party of Germany] party executive. They praised the unanimous election decision of all classes and strata for the candidates of the GDR National Front as an emphatic affirmation of the common will to further strengthen the GDR as a homestead of peace and socialism in the heart of Europe.

Egon Krenz, chairman of the Republic's Election Commission, emphasized that the preparation of the elections and the outstanding election result had been characterized by great confidence in the successful policy of the party of the working class, pride in things jointly created, and strong certainty in the ability to also tackle the new tasks. In this lively, popular discussion the realization of the resolutions of the 11th SED Congress had become the action program of the whole country. This was a convincing expression of the full democracy of the country in true freedom. This exceedingly impressive election decision for the election program and the candidates of the National Front showed the firm solidarity in which party, state, and people had tackled the qualitatively new stage of social development in the GDR as launched by the 11th SED Congress, Egon Krenz emphasized.

The Republic's Election Commission cordially congratulated the deputies of the newly elected People's Chamber, the city assembly of Berlin, and the bezirk assemblies as well as all replacement candidates, on their election. At the same time it thanked all those who through their responsible work had helped make the elections on 8 June such a success. It praised the work of the members of the local election commissions and election executives, the work of the hundreds of thousands of National Front volunteers and expressed its appreciation to the members of the election offices and local councils.

FRG BUSINESSMAN HOLDS TALKS WITH OFFICIALS

[Text] Berlin, 10 Jun (ADN) -- Kurt Hager, Politburo member and secretary of the SED Central Committee, and Peter Glotz, federal business manager, member of the SPD party executive presidium and chief editor of the magazine NEUE GESELLSCHAFT/FRANKFURTER HEFTE, met in the SED Central Committee building in Berlin today for a talk. In their exchange of views, which took place in an open and constructive atmosphere, the partners in the talk proceeded from the premise that safeguarding peace is the highest priority of the present time.

Everything must be done to prevent the SDI program, to end the arms race on earth, and to change the world-political situation for the better. Therefore, reason and realism should determine the shaping of the relationship between the GDR and the FRG. Everything must be done to shape Europe as a continent of peace, stable security, durable detente, and trusting cooperation.

Kurt Hager outlined the resolutions of the 11th SED Congress directed at further shaping the developed socialist society, with which the GDR is entering a new stage of its development. He stressed the importance of consistently continuing the unity of economic and social policy for the implementation of the spirit of socialism -- to do everything for the well-being of the people and for peace -- and noted that the GDR's economic strategy fully and completely corresponds to the challenges of our time. As far as the SED is concentrating on the organic connection between the results of the scientific-technological revolution and the advantages of socialism, the free development of the creative strengths of the person is being promoted, the results of the most modern science and technology and of the broad application of high technologies are being placed fully at the service of the working people and the raising of their material and intellectual standard of living, and extensive social security is being guaranteed for everybody.

This path is connected with increasing demands on all spheres of social life, on education and science, on art and culture, and on recreation and health care, and at the same time opens up inexhaustible opportunities for the further flourishing of intellectual life in the GDR.

The potential of socialism to extensively implement at an ever high level such basic interests of the people as their life in secure peace, full employment, meaningful work for their own good and the common good simultaneously, acquisition of the treasures of science and culture, guaranteed prosperity which is growing step-by-step, and care for the rising generations and the veterans of labor, is growing through ever closer cooperation with the Soviet Union and the other socialist states in science and production, as well as in all other areas.

We always proceed in all of this from the view that the most important issue, on the solution of which everything else depends, is elimination of the danger of war and preservation of peace, Kurt Hager said.

Peter Glotz, who outlined the SPD's domestic and foreign policy positions, emphasized that his part is facing up to the challenges of the stormily agitated times. Coexistence between states of different systems and alliances, which is supported by the SPD and without which there could be no security for the peoples and no survival of mankind in the nuclear age, is an expression of this. Responding effectively to the social consequences accompanying the scientific-technological revolution in the Federal Republic in the interests of the working people is a task of social policy that stands at the center of the new SPD program, which is currently being worked out.

With regard to relations between the two German states, which must concentrate on safeguarding peace, the partners in the talk noted that the Basic Treaty and the stipulation and agreements built up on it have facilitated the solution of a whole series of problems for the benefit of both German states and their citizens. These agreements now include the Cultural Agreement as well. Both sides expressed their expectations that the negotiations between government experts from the two German states on a framework environmental agreement will achieve concrete results very soon.

Kurt Hager and Peter Glotz agreed that, regardless of existing differences in the positions of their two parties on social strategy, philosophies, and ideologies, contacts for improving the political climate and confidence-building in East-West relations must be continued.

The talk was attended by Manfred Banaschak, member of the SED Central Committee, head of a department in the SED Central Committee and chief editor of EINHEIT; Hans Schumacher, responsible editor of the NEUE GESELLSCHAFT/FRANKFURTHER HEFTE; and Rainer Wagner, head of the office of the SPD federal business manager.

During their visit the SPD delegation visited the city center of the GDR capital. The guests visited Potsdam at the end of their visit. They had a talk there with Guenther Jahn, first secretary of the Potsdam SED Bezirk Executive.

Krenz, Glotz Discuss Peace

[Text] Berlin 9 Jun (ADN) -- Egon Krenz, member of the Politburo and secretary of the SED Central Committee, received Peter Glotz, federal business manager and member of the presidium of the party executive of the SPD and editor in chief of the magazine NEUE GESELLSCHAFT/FRANKFURTER HEFTE, for an exchange of views on Monday [9 June]. The talks centered on topical issues related to safeguarding peace as the key issue in the relations between the two German states.

In view of the dangerous international situation, the partners in the talk noted in agreement that it is important to initiate effective measures for limiting arms and disarmament, preventing the militarization of space, abolishing nuclear weapons, and overcoming confrontation through the expansion of mutually fruitful cooperation. A first step toward this is the abandonment of all nuclear tests, for which the USSR is providing a good example with its unilateral moratorium. Security in the nuclear age can only be guaranteed through each other. Therefore, it is necessary to discuss the arms control and disarmament proposals available in the framework of the negotiations in Geneva, Vienna, and Stockholm with a will for understanding and to reach concrete agreements.

Referring to Erich Honecker's talks with the SPD politicians, Willy Brandt, Hans-Jochen Vogel, Johannes Rau, Oskar Lafontaine, Gerhard Schroeder and Karl-Heinz Hiersemann, Egon Krenz reiterated that the GDR advocates a worldwide coalition of reason and realism with the policy of peace resolved at the 11th SED Congress. Every chance must now be used, in accordance with the proposals of Mikhail Gorbachev, to prevent the militarization of space, to liberate the world from nuclear weapons, and to reduce conventional armaments. The mandate for this policy was again convincingly confirmed by the people of the GDR with their decision in the 8 June elections.

Peter Glotz pointed out that his party comes out resolutely against the Federal Republic's participation in the SDI program. The agreement that was concluded is rejected by the SPD. The latest Soviet proposals on arms limitation and disarmament should be constructively discussed and studied. The SPD advocated that both the negotiating partners in Geneva should make all exertions to reach positive results, Peter Glotz said.

The partners in the talk evaluated the dialogue between the SED and the SPD on issues of arms limitation and disarmament as an important contribution to security and detente in Europe. They see in the joint political initiative of the SED and the SPD to establish a zone in Europe free of chemical weapons an important step in this direction, and expressed their satisfaction at the latest talks between representatives of the two parties on the establishment of a corridor in Europe free of battlefield nuclear weapons.

The talk in the building of the SED Central Committee was attended by Manfred Banaschak, member of the SED Central Committee, head of a department in the SED Central Committee and chief editor of EINHEIT; Gunter Rettner, candidate of the SED Central Committee, SED Central Committee department head; and Hans Schuamcher, responsible editor of the NEUE GESELLSCHAFT/FRANKFURTHER HEFTE; and Rainer Wagner, head of the office of the SPD federal business manager.

Peter Glotz and the persons accompanying him earlier had an exchange of views in the editorial offices of EINHEIT -- at whose invitation the delegation is visiting the GDR -- attended, as well as by its chief editor; by Otto Reinhold, member of the SED Central Committee; and other members of the editorial college.

[Text] Berlin, 10 Jun (ADN) -- At an international press conference in Berlin this afternoon, SPD Federal Business Manager Peter Glotz spoke about his talks in the GDR. Glotz, who is a member of the Presidium of the SPD Party Executive and chief editor of the magazine NEUE GESELLSCHAFT/FRANKFURTER HEFTE, said that he had been able to deepen already long-standing contacts. The basic concern had been to do everything possible to preserve and to expand where possible the level that had been achieved in relations between the two German states. Also, in view of the tense world situation we should do everything within our power, Glotz said, to maintain the relations that have been built up.

He pointed out that there had been agrement with his partners in the talks on important issues of security policy. In this connection he named the rejection of the U.S. SDI project for arms in space and the announcement of the U.S. abrogation of the SALT II treaty and the endorsement of a test ban treaty for nuclear weapons. "A test ban would indeed be sensible policy. The SPD believes that a relevant treaty would be the right and important thing," he stressed. With regard to further possibilities for practical disarmament measures, Peter Glotz noted the framework agreement worked out by the SPD and the SED for the creation of a chemical-weapon-free zone in Europe. This was a convincing example of how ways could be found to verify the observance of the relevant obligations of the partners to a treaty.

Glotz said he was impressed by the results of the GDR's economic policy. In the talks he had gained the impression that with regard to the combines, the performance contracts between industry and the Academy of Sciences, and microelectronics and other high technologies there had been many interesting developments in the GDR, which were obviously continuing even more strongly in the wake of the recent SED congress.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON VISIT BY GORBACHEV

[Text] Budapest, June 11 (MTI) -- On his way to Moscow from Budapest, Mikhail Gorbachev sent a telegram to Janos Kadar on Wednesday.

The telegram runs: "The comradely talks during my visit contribute to the further development of the comprehensive cooperation of the CPSU and the HSWP, and the Soviet Union and Hungary.

"The decisions and initiatives approved by the Budapest session of the Warsaw Treaty Political Consultative Committee indicate the efforts of our parties and countries to strengthen peace and security and promote the unity and cooperation of the socialist community."

Sarkany Commentary

LD111534 Budapest in English to Europe 1050 GMT 11 Jun 86

[Vera Sarkany commentary]

[Text] A very good atmosphere and concrete, substantial, and meaningful discussions characterized Mr Mikhail Gorbachev's visit to Budapest. The communique issued on the negotiations with Mr Janos Kadar underlined the identity of views in the assessment of every basic question of social development and international relations.

This concise evaluation is the result of a review of a multitude of social and economic developments in Hungary and the USSR. Mr Gorbachev said in Budapest: The Soviet party follows with attention and respect those efforts that are made in Hungary and the other socialist countries. He added: The Soviet people are pleased to see the successes of their friends and try to take over everything that can be used in the USSR. [last phrase as heard]

This approach is very different from the recurrent judgment in certain foreign media that is permeated with suspicion and stressing the disconcert between the two countries. On the other hand, it does not mean that the economic and social practice and the details of policy of the two countries have to be identical, or that the interest in one another should mean agreement with every detail of the other country's practice. Specific features and the differences of the conditions under which the two countries live are natural, and the exchanges of experiences will continue in the future. Mr Gorbachev says no one had guarantees against failures or mistakes in either country.

The talks in Budapest provided a opportunity for Mr Gorbachev and Mr Kadar to exchange views on concrete questions, as, for example, the more [words indistinct] between companies of the two countries, or the development of socialist democracy.

To work for the poeple is also the predominant feature of the current Warsaw treaty meeting and the foreign-policy activities of its member-states. As Mr Kadar said at the Csepel mass rally on Monday [9 June], Hungary highly appreciates that in the difficult international situation, when the other side is guided by uneasy stubbornness, the USSR put forward new and new [as heard] initiatives to reduce nuclear and conventional weapons. And Mr Gorvachev stressed the Soviet Union's appreciation for Hungary's efforts to further develop the Helsinki process.

USSR Friendship Praised

[Editorial: "Friendship That Provides Strength"]

[Text] Not only at the Central Committee conference table could one sense the atmosphere of mutual respect, confidence, friendship, and sound accord that traditionally bind our parties and peoples, but also in the streets of Budapest, through the many ways in which affinity for Mikhail Gorbachev was demonstrated, and in the spontaneous words exchanged with the welcome guest. The CPSU Central Committee general secretary's visit, already a significant event in our society, has also become an experience we all shared thanks to television, something which we are all pleased to remember.

In Csepel the Soviet guest was talking about a familiar atmosphere, one as familiar as the tasks and problems we all face today within the socialist community -- regardless of the particularities of individual countries -- as we work to accelerate social and economic progress. This combined effort to seek new solutions, and the associated exchange of experience and cooperation are advantages that could bring new aspects into our broad system of relations. It is not merely a question of our shared Marxist-Leninist principles, and the concurrence of our countries' interests and long-term goals; the fact is that the MSZMP's and CPSU's opinions also coincide with our present tasks. We also proceed from the same point as our Soviet comrades, from the point that, to use General Secretary Gorvachev's words; "We need more dynamism, more social justice, more democracy, in short, more socialism."

There is a sentence in the communique published on the talks between Janos Kadar and Mikhail Gorbachev which it is quite appropriate to mention separately. As regards the balanced development of wide-ranging economic and technical-scientific relations, including among other things the application of new forms of cooperation, "They greed that the Governments of the Ppoeple's Republic of Hungary and the Soviet Union would take the necessary steps to do this." Thus, the general secretaries' talks have also resulted in concrete agreements, apart from the principled agreement that is extremely important in itself, and the result of the concrete agreements will soon be able to be seen in paractice. Yesterday Janos Kadar stressed the following in Csepel: "We share a mutual conviction to further expand and raise the standard of bilateral Hungarian-Soviet cooperation in all fields, as well as with regard to international issues where we are struggling together for mutual goals -- improved conditions, lasting peace, and a peaceful future for mankind, free from deadly weapons."

It is of great signficance for us that precisely in Budapest General Secretary Gorbachev has introduced a few new proposals that will continue to broaden the series of Soviet initiatives for peace and cooperation which we definitely support and accept with approval.

One such proposal is the initiative for a world space organization as an alternative to "star wars," as well as the suggestion regarding the prevention of terrorist attacks on nuclear power stations, and the idea of the nuclear powers' jointly developing a new type of nuclear reactor. The fact that the Soviet leadership alsmost daily inundates the other side with new and positive proposals underlines all the more seriously it considers that the program we find in the report on the recent dialogues is an active program. "The two parties express their conviction that it is only the peaceful coexistence of states with different social systems that can guarantee a safe future for mankind." We cannot permit the positive opportunities for an agreement opened up by the dynamic efforts of socialist diplomary to remain unexploited due to the failure of the other side.

Cordiality and agreement are the two words with which official reports described the recent dialogues between guest and host. And we may also surely add that we are convinced that the visit and recent meeting of Comrade Gorbachev here will further increase the friendship between our peoples and provide new stimuli for extensive Hungarian-Soviet cooperation, and for the implementation of tasks concerning the acceleration of social and economic progress in both countries. Although this wll primarily be of advantage to our two nations, this issue is not only a bilateral Hungarian-Soviet issue, because it was Mikhail Gorbachev himself who reminded us that accelerating the exploitation of the enormous resources of socialism and putting them to the service of the working man "will at the same time mean the consolidation of the international positions of the socialist world system, an increase in its prestige and attraction, as well as in its influence on world events and on the struggle to prevent a nuclear catastrophe."

MICROELECTRONICS PROGRAM CONTINUES TO PROCEED

[Text] A press briefing about seven research and development programs supervised by the Ministry of Industry was held this morning. Over the past 5 years more than 13 billion forints have been spent on priority research and development programs. This has helped to solve central tasks, such as the acceleration of research and development in energy management, machine manufacture technology, telecommunications, pharmaceutics and crop protection agents, and microelectronics.

Speaking about the microelectronics program, Bela Balogh, managing director of the microelectronics enterprise, told journalists that its main goals remain unchanged. In the fire that raged in the factor on 26 May only a single -- though undoubtedly important -- part of the program was destroyed, and not all its achievements. The microelectronics program must be continued, but rethinking must also occur, and research and development must be accelerated, said the managing director of the microelectronics enterprise.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON PRECONGRESS CONFERENCES

Mokrzyszczak in Wroclaw 22 Apr

AU231952 Warsaw ZYCIE PARTII in Polish 7 May 86 pp 3, 4

[Report delivered by Wlodzimierz Mokrzyszczak, PZPR Politburo candidate member and Central Committee secretary, to the 22 April ideological-theoretical session in Wroclaw: "Anxious to Boost the Party's Strength"]

[Excerpts] The party discussion on the PZPR Draft Program has continued since last February. The ninth party program decided that a new strategic program is a condition for the party's ability to cope with the tasks of a new stage of our socialist development. This new program harks back to the declaration issued by the Polish workers party under the title "What We Are Fighting For," to the declaration issued by the unification congress, and to the one adopted by the conference of congress delegates under the title "What We Are Fighting For and Where We Are Going."

The PZPR Draft Program, which has been subjected to party and nationwide discussions by the decision of the 24th Central Committee plenum, indicates the strategic tasks of our country's development up to the year 2000, tells how these tasks should be accomplished, defines the theoretical foundations of socialist construction on the basis of the theory of scientific socialism, our experience, and the experience of the fraternal parties, indicates to the party and the people how to realize the interests and aspirations of the population and individual communities, and reconciles the national and class viewpoints.

The present discussion on the draft program has proved that people regard its main principles and lines as a good foundation for drawing up its final version and that it is necessary to carry out much programmatic and editorial work in order to single out the leading factors of the implementation of the program, to make many of its items concise, and to achieve a great cohesion readability, and clarity of the text.

I would like to devote some attention to chapter eight of the program on the PZPR's leading role in socialist construction. This chapter sums up our party's achievements in socialist construction, illustrates what has proved itself in practice, indicates the barriers and dangers that may deform party life and weaken the party's impact on society, and points to whatever produces new development prospects and new driving forces that are able to consolidate and stimulate the entire party.

The remarks, views, and demands put forward during the discussion on chapter eight have been prompted by one's anxiety to boost the strength, impact, and leading role of the party. Party members take the same line when discussing the congress theses and when attending individual talks, during which internal party issues continue to be addressed keenly and extensively. The precongress discussion on party issues is very rich and continues to produce many constructive proposals with regard to programmatic documents under preparation. However, the primary feature of this discussion is that it reveals the aspirations and expectations of party members with regard to improving the party performance and activity. It is important that the chapters that deal with the party in the final version of the programs and in the 10th congress resolution, which will detail tasks for the coming 5-year period, should correctly express these aspirations and expectations.

The most frequent demand raised during the discussion refers to the need to tighten the political, ideological, professional, and moral requirements placed on party members, and to improve decisively the quality of party ranks. The many views put forward prove that people now are aware of the fact that the party's authority among the people is primarily a product of the militancy of party members. During various Central Committee plenums, we have often stressed the need for competitive leadership. That is why the participants in the discussion continue to propose that party organizations should consistently appraise the attitudes and conduct of their members and assist them in promoting militant sociopolitical and vocational activities.

The discussion on improving the shape of our party and the mechanisms, forms, and methods of its functioning and activity is continuing and constitutes one of the most important elements of the preparations for the 10th PZPR Congress.

Kiszczak on Internal Situation

[Report on speech by Arms General Czeslaw Kiszczak, PZPR Politburo member and minister of internal affairs, at the 5 May precongress party conference in the Ministry of Internal Affairs, attended by Central Committee Secretary Jozef Baryla]

[Excerpts] Prior to the proclamation of martial law, when our situation was extremely serious because of possible fratricide, the disintegration of the state structures, economic ruin, and the surrender of our socialist achievements to rabid anticommunism, the functionaries and soldiers of the Interior Ministry were determined to defend their threatened fatherland.

We summoned enough patience, energy, and strength in this struggle, in which the concentrated attacks against our government went hand in hand with the attacks against our party apparatus by our political adversaries, who were inspired by the imperialist forces and centers in the West. These adversaries tried to demolish and weaken our apparatus and set it at loggerheads with itself.

Between 1981 and 1986 our security services liquidated some 1,600 illegal groups and structures and about 1,200 centers that printed and distributed illegal publications. They confiscated almost 700 printing presses and prevented the circulation of almost 5 million handouts and hostile publications.

In the past period we have been able to score great successes in combatting common crimes and defending public order. Our militia services have been able to stop the growth of crimes dating back to 1980 and to reduce it as of mid-1985.

In the past few months we have noticed that the line of the activities by intelligence-subversive centers continues to change. We have noted that ideological-propaganda subversion continues to be taken over by special services and that subversion funds continue to increase without break. For example, some NATO countries have now increased these funds 10-fold compared with 1983-84.

The structures of former solidarity which exist in the west and which actually act as links between hostile special forces and the underground in Poland, continue to be actively used in subversive activities.

The new thing in this connection is the progressive technical modernization of the resources for transmitting information and subversive data, which means that the merging of subversive and intelligence activities continues to be increasingly close. This can be seen among other things in the use of the same espionage techniques -- for example, the underground receives communications equipment that is typical for intelligence communications -- and in fact that subversive activities and those aimed at evaluating sociopolitical and economic problems have been mainly focused on the preparations for the 10th party congress.

Our domestic adversaries continue to act in line with the instructions and active support from the West. Our adversaries' antisocialist activities are aimed at destabilizing the country and weakening its security. This was going to be so during the recent May Day celebrations, but our adversaries failed to achieve their aims. Appeals for boycotting May Day were to no avail, more people attended the celebrations than last year, and no counter celebrations could be organized.

Our activities to defend the socialist system, to restore peace and order, and to consolidate the processes of renewal and of stabilizing the internal life of the state have been highly praised by the supreme party and government authorities on various occasions.

It is on us, on our daily service for the people, and on our comprehensive activities to strengthen our links with them and, especially, the workers class that society's praise for us depends.

Bednarski Address in Bydgoszcz

["Abridged version" of speech by PZPR Central Committee secretary Henryk Bednarski at the 7 May conference of the Bydgoszcz Voivodship PZPR Committee in Bydgoszcz]

[Text] A characteristic feature of the entire pre-congress campaign and of the talks on the draft PZPR program and Central Committee theses for the 10th party congress is the businesslike and constructive tone of speeches and the combining of general strategic problems with the day-to-day reality inside the country, in work places, and at individual work positions. A valuable characteristic of the Bydgoszcz talks has also been the realistic presentation of shortcomings and weaknesses, as well as the indication of ways out of the present situation. This conference has reviewed the region's preparations for the party congress. Party talks were an important feature of it; they enabled almost all party members to speak out. This has served to animate the party and remind it of the harsh reality, but has also turned our minds to the immediate future and brought to mind the strategic paths of action and our place in them.

The Ninth PZPR Congress lay down the need to establish a far-reaching party program, regarding this as a chance for changes in some of the party's paths of action and a way of defining a constructive way out of the political and economic crisis. The draft program has been worked out. It fires the imagination and directs one's thoughts to the future, encourages the seeking of alternative solutions, and lets everyone make life's choice.

When facing these ambitious tasks, we must make sure that the party is strong and fully able to lead and define the paths of changes. The prerequisites for this are good because the socialist renewal process is assuming a clear and irrevocable shape in Poland.

The members of the Bydgoszcz Voivodship party committee are also energetic joint creators of this process. This is evidenced by the changes in the consciousness, way of thinking, and behavior of most working people in the voivodship. It is also illustrated by the state and strength of our party and its increased influence over the workers class.

The goal we are aiming toward is to shape the kind of attitudes among PZPR members and nonmembers that permit our political influence to expand in accordance with the desire and interests of the workers class. From the entire voivodship party committee this requires a steady improvement of methods and forms of action, coupled with the consistent settling of working people's affairs.

Comrade H. Bednarski expressed appreciation for the type of work by the voivodship committee which illustrates close contact with society. He said that we should use the period separating us from the 10th congress in order to create the right climate for every worker or farmer to find support in the party. This involves the need to further consolidate the party's organizational ties with people who wish to perform social work, especially nonparty people. There is a need to employ the experience and social prestige of dedicated people who possess a rich array of knowledge and thought. These people should be close to the party and should support and enrich its activity.

The present campaign, H. Bednarski continued, cannot merely involve verifying the program theses and assessing our achievements since the ninth congress. Of no less importance for the country's successful future is a comprehensive analysis of each person's participation in accelerating economic and social development in the voivodship and in one's city, rural district, or place of work. When the time comes to act, however, we frequently look to others. Our duty is to counteract only those streams of discussion that express postulates. Economic growth trends have been restored, the quality of life has improved, we have consolidated the party ranks, and Poland's prestige in the world has grown. One of the most important changes is the further democratization of all structures of our social life. Every patriot and Pole desirous of the fatherland's socialist blossoming has the practical possibility of influencing the paths of the changes taking place. The status and importance of territorial and factory self-management bodies have grown, the people's councils are active, sejm deputies are cooperating with their voters every day, and consultations on all the most important decisions are held with all of society.

That is why we must view the Draft PZPR Program and 10th congress theses that have been submitted for general social pre-congress discussion in the light of our own place, role, and participation in implementing the programmatic plans for the country's further development.

The voivodship conference ends one stage of talks on the party program. We cannot end by simply summing up the conclusions that have been presented. Now we need a full mobilization of forces and joint energy. We should create a climate of practical activity and adopt an attitude that encourages the complete performance of the accepted tasks.

Porebski at Military Meeting

AU280501 Warsaw ZOLNIERZ WOLNOSCI in Polish 14-15 May 86 p 2

[Captain Marek Sieniawski report: "Tackling and Solving the Most Difficult Tasks"]

[Text] Addressing the precongress PZPR conference of the Silesian Military District on 13 May, PZPR Politburo member and Central Committee secretary Tadeusz Porebski said: I am convinced that the 10th Congress will express its appreciation to the Polish People's Army for its achievements in the life of the most important sectors of social, economic, and political activity. This also applies to the soldiers of the Silesian Military District.

Our party has strengthened and the PZPR ranks grew last year. When we look back we can see that much has been done. We also notice the important political work in the Army, the effects of which is a growth in the party ranks, ideological activity among the soldier masses, and support for economic actions. The aim within the Silesian Military District to develop increasingly better solutions, use reserves, and seek new methods in the training of soldiers is impressive.

It is often said at party talks that an improved economic situation in Poland is the key to solving our difficulties. Our party's effort will certainly be concentrated on economic affairs. Housing problems are the most frequently discussed topics. These are highlighted quite strongly in the Draft PZPR Program. A great effort will be concentrated on education and health care. Ahead of us is a stubborn struggle to reduce inflation and abolish the rationing of goods.

Another important undertaking will be tackling the excessive growth in employment. There are considerable possibilities of success in this sphere inherent in improving the mechanisms of the national economy. We should increase efforts to consolidate the party, and we also need greater consensus concerning such matters as agricultural policy, state-church relations, and the status of handicrafts.

We have many mechanisms necessary for the efficient functioning of the country. But there are also many possibilities inherent in the deployment of cadres and in the dedicated discharge of daily duties. We have a chance to move ahead, and this depends to a large extent on people.

At Air Force Session

AU271752 Warsaw ZOLNIERZ WOLNOSCI in Polish 15 May 86 pp 1, 2

[Captain Zdzislaw Lasota report: "With a Feeling of Responsibility"]

[Text] Speaking at a pre-congress PZPR meeting of the Air Defense Forces on 14 May, Army General Florian Siwicki, minister of national defense, said that maintaining Armed Forces at a suitably high level of combat readiness, especially the Air Defense Forces, which are the front line of our defense system, continues to be an exceedingly important task and supreme necessity. This is the result of the actual political-military situation in Europe and the world, a situation full of conflict, tension, and real dangers.

The source of these dangerous phenomena for mankind and peace is the megalomanic, aggressive, and confrontational policy of the United States toward the socialist countries, as well as toward countries that have adopted a non-capitalist path of development. The American armed aggression against sovereign Libya, the deliberate and provocational violation of Soviet territorial waters in the Black Sea by American ships, the threatening of Syria and Iran with military aggression -- these are just some parts of the broad scale of brutal acts committed by American imperialism.

The continuation by the United States of unjustified sanctions against Poland, general interference in our domestic affairs, and the continuation of a perfidious propaganda struggle against our country by subversive radio stations -- this is proof of the U.S. policy that is hostile to Poland.

I believe that in our ideological-educational work, especially with young people, we should "compare" more frequently the abused U.S. slogans about humanitarianism, morality, and human rights with actual U.S. conduct in international relations; with the imperialist practice of killing innocent people in Lebanon, Libya, and Grenada; and with pushing the world to the brink of nuclear war. For that is the sense radiated by the American, negative and "evasive" stance vis-a-vis the exceptionally important Soviet proposals, repeated and modified with such determination, to eliminate all nuclear and chemical weapons and offensive space weapons systems by the end of this century.

Another issue about which the younger generation is not always properly informed concerns what is happening beyond the Elbe river, in the FRG. We are witness to continuing revisionist activity, something like revanchist sabbaths, such as the congress of Sudeten Germans planned for this month.

Therefore, dear comrades, we must realize that if we have had peace in Europe for over 40 years, this is mainly the result of the socialist community's authentic high status in the world, its determined policy of peace, and its constantly growing economic and defense potential. It is these factors that are melting the adventurist deeds of imperialism and determining peace in Europe. This being the case, the following maxim continues to be valid: As long as a balance of forces and military reality determines the chances for peace, it will be necessary to strengthen our security both on a national scale and throughout the entire coalition.

That is why, comrades, both the draft party program and the Central Committee Theses for the 10th congress stress the need to strengthen the country's defense capability, this being regarded as an important task for the whole of society.

The Armed Forces are the basic organized body which constantly guarantees the state's security. It is therefore pleasing that the need to constantly improve the Air Defense Forces was spoken about with such concern at today's meeting.

We are aware of the very important and responsible tasks resting on the Air Defense Forces. In this respect, the words of Army General Wojciech Jaruzelski, head of the PPR Armed Forces, spoken a few years ago have lost none of their topicality: "The country's air defense is the first pillar of Poland's defense. Its sensitivity and combat readiness must always be of the highest standard."

As you know very well, the effectiveness of battle, including with today's airborne enemy, depends not only on modern technology. Man is ultimately the deciding factor. At the same time any scientific-technological progress automatically raises the status of man the soldier, the user of this equipment.

Hence the particular duties for cadres and soldiers undergoing basic service in our forces, and hence their exceptional discipline and expertise. In this context I wish to express satisfaction with the very good results you achieved during the latest exercizes. I congratulate and thank all comrades who contributed toward this success for their exemplary soldierly service and for preserving the Polish soldier's high position within the alliance.

Further in his speech, General F. Siwicki indicated the need to improve the effectiveness of ideological-educational work, especially young soldiers' ideological upbringing.

The shaping of young people's political views and attitudes cannot be restricted to a mere timetable of political training supplemented with political information. Neither can the leaders of political training groups or officers in the political apparatus be the only ones entrusted with this task. The shaping of the consciousness and personality of underlings is the duty of all professional soldiers, especially party members, regardless of their rank, post, or military specialization.

Bednarski Speaks to Air Force

[Report by Captain Stefan Wawrzyniak and Lieutenant Henryk Wierski: "The Party 's Strength Lies in the Engergy of Its Members"]

[Text] Addressing the precongress PZPR conference of the Air Force, PZPR Central Committee secretary Henryk Bednarski said: The party's chief task in the pre-congress period has been to further expand accord between the nation's patriotic forces, restore economic equilibrium and consolidate the state. The coalition method of exercising authority has developed and strengthened. The party is performing its leading role in concert with the ZSL, SD, and socially progressive Catholic and Christian groups. This is encouraged by the development of PRON as a platform of joint activity by all the organized social forces and citizens working for the sake of a consolidation and development of people's Poland. The Sejm has assumed new significance in the performance of its constitutional role. The State Tribunal and Constitional Tribunal and Constitutional Tribunal have commenced actvity. The new law on the people's councils has enabled them to become managers of their respective areas who harmoniously combine the role of territorial self-government with the duties of a body of state authority.

Military service has been and continues to be an important spur to the development of citizen-like patriotic attitudes, discipline, a correct understanding of rights and duties, and capable activity within a collective.

The shaping of economc awareness is assuming particular importance today. Military service encourages this in many respects. The army is a great school of technical training for young peple.

The Army plays and should continue to play an important role in improving citizens' discipline in the struggle for the nation's moral health, in the dissemination of culture, and in the shaping of proper interpersonal relationships. In many respects, these are exemplary achievements which are important on a national scale. This activity must be continued and improved.

[Lieutenant Roman Przeciszewski report: "Ideology is the Passport to Tomorrow"]

[Text] Addressing the 15 May pre-congress meeting of the Warsaw Military District, PZPR Politburo member and Central Committee Secretary Marian Wozniak referred to the current international and domestic situation and discussed the tasks facing all Poles concerning the consolidation of the state and the strengthening of the Republic's economy and defense potential. Indicating the results achieved so far in stabilizing and developing the country's economy, he stressed the need for all citizens to take an active part in consolidating Poland's standing in the world and creating the necessary conditions for further socioeconomic progress. In this context, he stressed the great significance of the approaching 10th PZPR Congress for society and the whole of society.

M. Wozniak spoke with recognition about the cooperation between the military district's party organization and local PZPR cells, the close ties between military units and society, soldiers' participation in the socioeconomic life of the country, and the concrete material results of the numerous social pledges and training programs involving production, all of which serve urban and rural inhabitants well. He congratualted soldiers on their achievements in all spheres of life and military service and for the results of party-political and ideological-training work within military circles. Thanking the soldiers for their daily dedicated work, he wished them at the same time further achievements in their military service and sociopolitical activity.

[Lieutenant-Commander Jan Jastrzebski report: "The Status of Internal Party Life"]

[Text] Addresssing the 15 May pre-congress conference of the Navy, [place not given], PZPR Politburo candidate member Stanislaw Bejger said that the Navy's achievements are the result of good work by the party aktivs and political apparatus. The results of today's meeting will be used when working out the final version of the congress documents.

General participation by party members as well as many non-party citizens in the talks on the draft documents is the best guarantee of their future implementation. S. Bejger proceeded to discuss the conclusions stemming from the pro-congress campaign and concerning the continuation of the Ninth Congress line and a more rapid solving of the country's and region's socioeconomic problems.

The events of the latest years, S. Bejger concluded, have confirmed that the Polish People's Army is performing its duty toward the nation and party with honor. Your conference shows that society may always count on the Navy and regard it not only as a defender of the people's fatherland's maritime frontiers.

Baryla Address 16 May

AU271428 Warsaw ZOLNIERZ WOLNOSCI in Polish 17-18 May 86 p 2

[Report by Lieutenant-Colonel Janusz Borkowski: "A Party Shaping of Reality"]

[Text] Addressing the 16 May pre-congress PZPR conference of the Pomeranian Military District, General of Arms Jozef Baryla, PZPR Central Committee secretary, said that since the Ninth PZPR Congress, the party has traveled a difficult but fruitful road while guiding itself unchangingly by the line of accord and struggle, a line of socialist renewal. We have emerged victorious from the difficult trial which our country faced on the threshold of the eighties. We have created a permanent basis for domestic stability and further socialist development. Poland continues to be a credible component of the socialist community and is regaining with increasing clarity its rightful place in the world.

Under the leadership of Comrade Wojciech Jaruzelski, PZPR Central Committee first secretary, the party has defended its unity and Marxist-Leninist identity. It has recovered its leading role in the state. It is recovering its leading role in society. As the results of various surveys and opinion polls show, most of society recognizes our party as the only political force with a realistic program and the organizational capabilities for leading the country's development by means of a strategy.

The tasks facing the Armed Forces are primarily connected with external threats. The end of the seventies and beginning of the eighties saw a sharpening in international relations. The United States and some of its NATO allies abandoned the policy of detente and proceeded to confrontation with the Soviet Union and socialist states. In the military sphere, this was expressed by the introduction of American intermediate-range nuclear missiles to Western Europe, an accelerated program of modernizing long-range nuclear weapons, and the inclusion of new powerful conventional weapons in arsenals. American "star wars" plans, signifying an attempt to transfer armed confrontation to space, also appeared. The world stood face to face with a real nuclear threat.

The countries of the Warsaw Pact are in favor of peace and detente in international relations and a halt to the danger of nuclear war, which would be a disaster for our civilization. A feasible peace program was contained in Mikhail Gorbachev's well-known plan of last January, in the 27th CPSU Congress documents, and in other speeches by the Soviet leader. This program has no alternative.

The internal threat is connected with the activity of the opposition in the country, which has assumed a clear agent-like nature today. The influence of the political adversary is steadily decreasing and losing its social support, proof of which were the results of the elections to the people's councils and PPR Sejm, and recently -- despite the adversary's boycott -- the largest participation compared to previous years by society in the 1 May celebrations. Without exaggerating the significance of the opposition, we must nevertheless not disregard it.

There is still a third area of danger called social pathology. We have declared a firm struggle against it. Honest working people want calm and personal security and are enraged by crime, alcoholism, social parasitism, and so on. As you know, our party has undertaken the work of universally mobilizing society in the struggle against social wrongdoing. A "common current" against social pathology is emerging before our eyes, a broad and universal battlefront.

We will wage this battle with all the force of the law. I can tell you that we already have a comprehensive long-term program of action in this sphere.

Our Armed Forces have an important role to play in overcoming all these spheres of wrongdoing. In December 1981, the adversary was able to convince himself that the Polish Army "defended socialism just like it would Poland's independence" and that it would never let Poland be threatened. With this in mind, our adversaries must be repelled every day by our ideological-moral cohesion, high soldierly discipline, service toward the nation of which we are an inseparable part, faith in socialist principles, and iron resistance to propaganda aggression.

The Army, in partuicular its professional cadres, is also the fighting arm of the party's political aktivs, enjoying unfailing confidence and prestige. It constantly assumes a high place in polls concerning society's level of confidence in the chief state institutions. We must constantly perpetuate an enrich this capital of trust.

I would like to draw your attention to the educational role of our Armed Forces, which is an important role. Every year a large number of young national servicemen join our ranks, which are a great school of political and civic education, develop one's character, foster one's sense of duty and descipline, provide instruction in communal living, foster one's habit of good performance, and teach a vocation. Our standing long-term duty is to transform national servicemen into the reservists who actively participate in public, political, and economic life.

What will determine the success of our work in the future? First, we must strengthen our party, promote its ideological and organizational cohesion, and improve its leading role in the state and among the people. Second, we must help to further stabilize the country's life. Our Armed Forces continue to make this contribution by tradition, but there is still much to be done by them in this regard. Third, we must continue to consolidate our society on the platform of agreement and around the struggle for the issues that are most important for the people. Fourth, we must develop and strengthen socialist democracy, social justice, and the rule of law. Fifth, we must consolidate the socialist moral principles and social-legal order and struggle resolutely against social wrongdoing.

We should pay special attention to young people in order to protect them against the poison of alien ideologies and to consolidate our educational system at home, at school, at work, and while doing national service. We should also see that, while telling young people about the unity of their rights and duties, we induce them to lead modern and worthy lives and to actively build a socialist Poland, which is and will be their home.

The main draft documents of the 10th PZPR Congress include important and responsible tasks for defending the country and improving the Armed Forces. "The party will help strengthen the defense of the socialist state," the PZPR Draft Program states, "and will take care of the PPR Armed Forces, which are a lasting element of the Warsaw Pact, a fraternal alliance of the socialist countries." The theses for the 10th congress state: "The Polish People's Armed Forces, which are under the ideological leadership of the party, render reliable services to the people, stand guard over the borders of the socialist state, and ensure the people's peaceful existence and the counry's safe socialist development." I think that these statments are for us soldiers and the regular cadre a certainty that needs no justification.

On behalf of the PZPR Central Committee and General Wojciech Jaruzelski, PZPR first secretary and head of the Armed Forces, I thank you for your reliable and productive service and work.

The struggle for socialist Poland's future calls for a strong and compact front. Our party constitutes such a front. Because of its maturity and resilience, the military party organization occupies an important place in this front.

Mokrzyszczak Speech 17 May

["Abridged version" of speech by Wlodzimierz Mokrzyszczak, PZPR Politburo candidate member and Central Committee secretary, at a pre-congress voivodship PZPR conference held in Olsztyn on 17 May]

Positive changes have occurred in the sociopolitcal awareness of party members. There is greater realism and objectivity in the evaluation of phenomena. These make it possible to note problems more effectively, to arrange them in order of importance correctly, and to solve them efficiently. Most importantly, our bond with working people has grown stronger.

Of course certain weaknesses and shortcomings do persist. Differences in the level, of activity of various party organizations are still too great. Not all party members are sufficiently active. There is still too much passivity, too much of a tendency to merely look on. Not all party meetings have attained a status appropriate to their statutory role. We must fight these negative phenomena more effectively and eliminate them from party work.

One development attesting to the fact that the party is regaining its influence and position is the growth in party ranks. Young people are coming to us, especially workers and peasants. This year party membership has increased by the addition of 8,289 full and candidate members. At the present time the party has 2,129,689 members. Of this number 38.2 percent are workers, 9 percent are peasants, and 51.5 percent are members of the intelligentsia. During the first quarter of this year a definite increase in party ranks was recorded in 39 voivodships.

One of the main tasks facing party cells and organizations is the attainment of a tangible acceleration of party work, a significant increase in the effectiveness of party activity, an expansion of the aktiv, and a qualitative progress in everyday operation, especially at the lowest levels. The course of the precongress campaign to date shows that this is being achieved in a significant number of cases. The Workers an Peasants Inspectorate has achieved much in the field of regulating the eveyday social usefulness of our activities. This is particularly important in relation to those who operate in residential areas. This is the best possible evidence of the fact that we are needed, that we take note of people's problems, and that we are capable of solving them. This is -- allow me to use high-sounding words -- the surest and only way of gaining public approbation and support for our policies, which is the basis for strengthening our ties with society and serving and leading it.

During the weeks leading up to the congress we should maintain the high level of activity that characterizes the majority of primary party cells. Discussion should continue on the draft program and these observations, suggestions, and postulates ought to be gathered and analysed.

We must, in particular, strengthen our bond with working people, be present in party organizations more often, and talk to workers; in a word we ought to make the problems encountered in everyday life even more so the subject of party work.

Wozniak Speaks 19 May

[Report on speech by Marian Wozniak, PZPR Politburo member and Central Committee secretary, at the 19 May precongress conference of the Bielsko-Biala Voivodship PZPR Committee]

[Excerpts] Discussing the social, political, and economic achievements scored in 1981-86, M. Wozniak said that the evaluation of the road traversed by us in a very difficult initial situation -- without trade unions, self-government bodies, economic reform, and a national platform of agreement, later created by PRON -- proves that it was the party that, in line with the ninth congress resolution, launched the activities to reform public life.

As a result of the party policy launched in 1981, we have been able, inter alia, to gradually stabilize the food situation, to promote exports while reducing imports, and to create a new sociopolitical situation so that more and more forces continue to rally around the idea of national agreement.

Referring to the speeches of the delegates who represented education and youth organizations in enterprises and in Bielsko-Biala, M. Wozniak said that our committed and emotional march to better times should begin at school and that infecting young people with feelings of negation and doubt discourages them most of all. Only teachers-agitators who are aware of the instruction that they want to convey to young people are able to overcome such attitudes. Education through work, which is being practiced by schools and the ZMS, is the best training method for young people.

Szacilo Address 21 May

AU021820 Warsaw ZOLNIERZ WOLNOSCI in Polish 22 May 86 p 2

[Speech by Division General Tadeusz Szacilo, chief of the Main Political Administration of the Polish Armed Forces, at a precongress PZPR conference for Ministry of National Defense central institutions held in Warsaw on 21 May]

[Text] Ministry of National Defense central institutions perform three mutually interconnected functions within the structure of the PPR Armed Forces. These functions are: conceiving and planning, organizing and coordinating, and instructing and inspecting. The status of this party conference also stems from these functions.

Political maturity, organizational efficiency, and responsibility were -- as fully attested to by conferences at the regional level and within branches of the Armed Forces -- fundamental features of the precongress campaign in the forces. During the course of conferences, weaknesses in our service and social lives were critically judged and areas for improvement were sought in instruction, training, and the management of forces' property.

As a result, the party in the Armed Forces is politically mature, active, and larger in terms of membership. It is not fortuitous that during the first 4 months of this year 44 percent more candidate members have been admitted into the party compared to the same period last year while selection criteria have continued to remain stringent. Mainly young people are joining us, and thus, members of that generation for which a struggle is being waged and which will determine our future.

Party organizations in the Armed Forces made a great contribution to the formulation of draft congress documents. Dozens of comments and suggestions concerning the Draft PZPR Program and the congress theses were sent to the Central Committee. During the precongress campaign we increased our awareness of both our achievements and our weaknesses.

National defense policy issues conceived in a broad sense were also reflected in the precongress campaign. First, the campaign enabled us to better recognize the link between the Armed Forces and society; to view our goals and tasks within the context of the national sociopolitical and economic situation and from the angle of a direct connection with program and national goals and tasks; and to sink our efforts into the nation's achievements. Second, it prompted people and teams to think and arrive at conclusions about their own work.

The international and internal situations have a direct bearing on strategic principles and their operational formulation in the command structure, and the training, supply, and technical systems. The situation in these areas also has a bearing on the purpose and range of tasks performed by the Armed Forces.

The political reality on our continent and in the world continues to be very complicated. It is characterized by, on the one hand, a continuous growth in tensions inspired and translated into reality by the leader of world imperialism, the United States, and its NATO allies. On the other hand, there are the numerous, many-sided, and unflagging efforts being made by the Soviet Union and the Warsaw Pact states to defuse conflicts, to lower the level of tensions, and to find compromise solutions that will ensure peaceful international cooperation.

The Washington administration is continuing to drift along a confrontational path. It is intent on conducting a propaganda war, on ideological diversion, on economic restrictions and brutal pressure, and on blackmail and military operations. Poland and the Polish People's Armed Forces are the objects of particularly perfidious attacks along this confrontational path. Hidden behind false phrases of sympathy for our people is a whole gamut of restrictive actions, blunt interference in international affairs, propaganda aggression, and support for external and internal forces that wish us the very worst. The activities of antisocialist forces within the country should be seen in this context; forces which objectively constitute a 'fifth column'of the highly developed apparatus of Western ideological diversion and special services. This apparatus inspires, directs, finances, and supplies equipment and material to the anti-socialist underground in the conduct of its activities.

Our conference is to provide an answer to the question of khow the Ministry of National Defense central institutions are planning their future party and service responsibilities so as to ensure as effectively as possible that the nation enjoys peace and conditions for successful development. Key tasks in this area for the current year and the upcoming 5 years have been set out in an order issued by the minister of national defense.

The first concerns a matter of key and decisive importance for the Armed Forces -- the state of its combat readiness. Its combat readiness is determined by many factors; all Ministry of National Defense central institution cells, commands, technical and quartermaster services, the political apparatus and party cells are working to strengthen it. The second concerns the rationalization of structures and the principles of commanding and directing at all organizational levels. The third pertains to efficient management and the fight against waste. We have an established tradition in this area and significant achievements behind us. The fourth encompasses taking steps to ensure that weaponry and equipment is utilized correctly. We realize that under the current economic situation the supply of modern technology to the forces and excellence in its mastery and use is not only a technical problem but a training, instruction, and political problem as well. The fifth is that of creating a military cadre that will embark on its tasks having taken into account the demands of the 21st century.

Defense Conference 21 May

['Theses' contained in report presented at precongress PZPR conference for Ministry of National Defense central institutions held in Warsaw on 21 May]

[Text] The conference for Ministry of National Defense central institutions marks the end of another stage in the preparations for the 10th PZPR congress. Intensive work on drafts of fundamental documents for the party's highest forum is behind us. During this party and society discussion we considered the future of the party and the country and fundamental issues connected with strengthening the socialist foundations of a Poland that is secure, efficient, modern, and in which the law is observed. At the same time, we took part in the formulation of tasks for the upcoming 5-year period and a program which extends to the end of the 20th century and the beginning of the 21st.

During the last 5-year period we executed our tasks under conditions in which Poland's interests of state, the socialist foundations of our state, and our material existence were threatened. Conscientious and selfless work full of responsiveness and ideological commitment characterized the entire cadre of the Ministry of National Defense central institutions. Our party organizations performed the tasks stemming from the resolution passed at the Ninth Extraordinary PZPR Congress and plenary sessions of the party Central Committee with great consistency.

The resolutions and decisions adopted at the 27th CPSU Congress acquire particular significance in light of the current international situation. The important character of the Soviet conception of the creation, development, and strengthening of socialism is also of significance for our country. The 10th PZPR Congress will provide confirmation of these opportunities and our readiness to make use of them.

During a precongress campaign -- characterized by hard work and a profound sense of responsibility -- proposals were formulated aimed at effecting the full mobilization of our communities in areas of army life such as: the improvement of the system for planning and organizing work at command headquarters; greater effectiveness in the operation of individual cells of the Ministry of National Defense central institutions; the further rationalization of structures and the automation of command and management cells in the Armed Forces; the more effective introduction of new training documents; and the innovative and economic use of material, equipment, and property.

During discussions on the congress theses an important place was occupied by ideological and training work; moral health; combating manifestations of social pathology; the creation of patriotic and internationalist attitudes among young people; and imbuing young people with a sense of responsibility for their country's future.

Individual party discussions that bore a general character were an important element in the precongress campaign. In all party organizations attention was focused on finding reserves in the capacity of one's own community, reserves which would serve the further improvement of the party and service activity. Party discussions on this scale were a new element in the operation of our party and were an expression of our consistency in observing the Leninist norms of intraparty life.

Michalek Speaks 22 May

["Report" on speech by Central Committee Secretary Zbigniew Michalek at the 22 May precongress conference of the Koszalin Voivodship PZPR Committee: "Rational and Reliable Work Is Most Important"]

[Excerpts] When we think of farm policy we ask ourselves whether we achieved the Ninth PZPR Congress aims of self-sufficiency in food and of improved living conditions in rural areas.

I declared that we have achieved more with regard to these two aims than with regard to any other aim. The farming results last year were such that we could talk about self-sufficiency and about a balance between our farm exports and imports. This is a great achievement, one that shows the potential of our farming.

Last year the per capita consumption of meat in Poland amounted to 61kg. Could we increase this figure? Yes, we could. However, first we must increase our vegetable production and stop buying animal feed abroad because we lack convertible currency. We must produce our own animal feed in order to develop stockbreeding. This is one of the aims of our farm policy.

I think our farming has the best wage system because peasant, state, and cooperative farms are paid for specific results -- milk, meat, and cereals -- and not for work in general.

We have not honored a number of the pledges we made to farming. For example, the share of farming in investments is still below the pledged 30 percent. Nor have we doubled the production of farm equipment; there is still a shortage of spare parts. However, the thing is that all the weaknesses of our economy are bound to tell on farming. If you want to give someone a bit more of something, you have to take it away from someone else. To give funds you must have them.

Nevertheless, farming results are good. State farms have reduced the number of cows by 18 percent. Can we question this? No we cannot because state farm cows now deliver about 1,000 liters of milk a year more than before. This is a good thing.

Z. Michalek also discussed changes in the structure of farms in view of the fact that we have many small and very small farms -- so small that it is difficult to cultivate them with modern equipment, which is of enormous importance in intensifying farm production. We will have to wait many years before the problem of such small farms is solved, but this solution is necessary if we want our farming to be modern. Young people are well aware of this problem because they refuse to take over small farms of only a few hectares.

The development of farming is certainly an issue for all our people. We know that we are a country with debts. That we have debts is by no means our worst problem. What is worrying is that we have poor opportunities to pay these debts. What we have to do is to find these opportunities; we can find them in farming, which is a much better proposition in this regard than other sectors of our economy. I can tell you that the export of our hams offers much better prospects than the export of our cars. It is this business calculation that should determine our export options.

The discussion of the Draft PZPR Program and the congress theses has shown that everyone agrees with them. We have received many proposals and draft solutions. This means that this discussion continues to enrich the materials on which congress delegates will be able to adopt the resolutions on Poland's future development. One thing is certain: What we now need countrywide is rational, reliable, and painstaking work, because nothing has evern been achieved without such work.

Glowczyk on 24 May

["Report" on speech by Jan Glowczyk, PZPR Politburo candidate member and Central Committee secretary, at the 24 May precongress vivodship conference in Piotrkow Trybunalski]

[Excerpts] The party began implementing the ninth congress resolution under conditions of an acute political and ideological struggle. Rightist and reactionary groups launched a ferocious and indiscriminate attack against the party and its leading role in the state and the community. Counterrevolutionaries tried to weaken Poland's position in the socialist community, in Europe, and in the world. Attacks also continued to be launched against the ideological front and the mass media.

Now the mass media continue to help strengthen the party's ties with the people and to promote national agreement. At the same time, the mass media struggle against our political adversary, who, out but not down, has tried to halt the process of national agreement and to hinder the country's efforts to overcome its crisis, as eloquently attested to by his support for the U.S. sanctions.

A most glaring example of such an attitude is the servile approach of the underground to West German revanchists. During the recent so-called Silesian Days in Essen, CDU Deputy Herbert Czaja said at a rally that upper Silesia "is not Poland's property from the viewpoint of international law."

At the same time, the illegal gazette MAZOWSZE wrote that "fulfilling the aspirations of the divided German nation would also be of advantage for the cause of Poland." This sentence was eagerly reprinted by DIE WELT, which is known for its extremely anti-Polish publications.

Such -- and many other -- examples show with increasingly greater clarity the collaborative nature of the antisocialist groups as the objectively anti-Polish center of the imperialist organizations of subversion and psychological warfare. The fact that our mass media have continued to present the national aims of these groups has resulted in the isolation of the underground and in greatly reducing the influence of the subversive radio stations that support these groups.

However, as in other sectors, there are still many shortcomings in the sector of the mass media. Television viewers, listeners, and readers avow that the effectiveness of press criticism is still too low and that the information on public life is still full of formal elements, adherence to protocol, laudation, and cliches that the people do not understand.

All these shortcomings make it necessary for us to continue our critical approach to the methods and style of party work, in which the elements of red tape are still present. We must protect ourselves against the dangers of paperwork. Routine is another danger, and a failure to keep abreast of the fast pulse of life. This means we must be faithful to principles and not to routine.

PZPR Committee, 31 May

AU052125 Warsaw ZYCIE WARSZAWY in Polish 2 Jun 86 p 4

[Excerpts] The 5 years since the ninth party congress have been difficult but productive. Despite acute political conflicts, class contradictions, and internal differences and discussions, it has been possible to create conditions favorable to progress in social stabilization, which is a result of the consolidation of the Warsaw party organization and of changes in the style and methods of its activities.

Prosocialist social forces continue to renegate and consolidate themselves. Emotions continue to subside; the acute political struggle, to peter out; and revolutions in the spirit of socialist renewal, to take place in many communities, especially creative communities, that were disorientdand at loggerheads not so long ago.

However, troubles and problems for solution continue to outstrip our satisfaction with achievements and the improved situation. We are especially worried that many valuable people whom the country needs so much continue to stand aside.

Some sections of the workers continue to asume attitudes of reserve and expectation as was clearly attested to during the discussion of the draft party program and congress theses. Many workers believe that their material conditions are worse compared with other sections and classes of society.

The report paid much attention to economic matters because improvements in the effectiveness of economic management are our "to be or not to be." Economic matters such as the need to eliminate the hindrances to economic reform, to improve the discipline and organization of work, and to closely relate wages to work quality were given much space in the discussion of congress theses.

Those participating in this discussion criticized some members of the leading cadres for their conservatism, parochialism in action and thinking, tolerance of bad work organization and faulty management, and proneness to blame others for failures.

The party discussion of the draft party program and congress theses was supported by over 64,000 party members and about 4,000 nonparty people. Individual talks with party members and candidates proved to be an important activity and provided opportunities for bringing up matters that are usually outside the range of discussions at routine meetings.

The concluding sections of the report were devoted to formulating the most important tasks of the Warsaw party organization. The fundamental task is to struggle for a better quality and productivity of work. Other tasks include a more effective economic management, a better exploitation of the production potential, and the ability to cope with scientific-technological progress and changes in civilization.

BRITISH LOAN OFFER REFLECTS FINANCIAL 'PROGRESS'

LD101956 Warsaw PAP in English 1806 GMT 10 Jun 86

[By PAP corresponent Tadeusz Jacewicz]

[Text] London, June 10: The offer of new official loans for Poland reflects progress in repaying the dues to British and other foreign creditors, a Foreign Office spokesman has told PAP.

The foreign Office and the Department of Trade and Industry have not specified the size of the proposed credit but informed sources quote 20 million pounds. The loan is to be guaranteed by the Exports Credit Guarantee Department which gives the credit an official character.

The fact of offering the loan to Poland reflects an atmosphere of improvement following a period of credit blockade imposed on Poland in February of 1982.

Financial circles in London stress that the atmosphere surrounding the financial corporation with Poland has improved which was prompted by Poland's admission to the International Monetary Fund, also noting Warsaw's constructive approach to the negotiations on the Polish debt, including the government-guaranteed credits and those drawn from commercial banks.

RESULTS OF AGRICULTURAL WORKERS CONGRESS REPORTED

AU051426 [Editorial Report] Bucharest SCINTEIA in Romanian on 30 May page 4 carries the 6,300-word "summary" of the "Report of the National Council of Agriculture, Food Industry, Silviculture, and Water Management, on the Fulfillment of the Tasks Included in the 1981-85 5-Year Plan and the Measures Taken To Fulfill and Overfulfill the Plan for 1986." Discussed and approved by "the Third Congress of the Management Councils of Working People in Food Industry, Silviculture, and Water Management" held in Bucharest on 29-31 May.

The report dwells at length on the measures that have to be adopted in various fields, such as gardening, silviculture, animal breeding, and others "to organize production and labor" and "to implement the new economic-financial mechanism" in order to improve activity and particulary the yields in 1986, mentioning that "the measures to improve the managment and organizational activities in agriculture, food industry, silviculture, and water management are in accordance with Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu's recommendations."

Bucharest SCINTEIA in Romanian on 3 June carries on page 3 a 3,500-word "Resolution of the Third Congress of Managment Councils of Socialist Agricultural Units, of all Farmers, and of the Councils of Working People in Food Industry, Forestry, and Water Administration" praising Ceasuescu's congrss speech and his "long and heroic activiaty devoted to freedom and social justice, national indepnedence, and the people's progress and well-being."

REAGAN'S "HARSH CRITICISM OF SALT II NOTED"

LD120450 Belgrade TANJUG in English 0425 GMT 12 Jun 86

[Text] Washington, June 12 (TANJUG) -- Speaking at a press conference last night, President Reagan reiterated that the U.S. would no longer adhere to the U.S.-Soviet Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty -- SALT 2, signed seven years ago.

When asked by the press whether his decision was irrevocable, Reagan said the treaty was no longer of use since the Soviet Union had been violating it for seven years now.

He said the treaty was no more than a legalized arms race.

Reagan's harsh criticism of SALT 2 conflicts not only with the stand of the U.S. allies but with the U.S. Congress which is currently launching an initiative to pass a special bill limiting production of strategic nuclear weapons in the U.S. to the levels envisaged by SALT 2.

In reply to a question at the end of the press conference regarding the prospects of a U.S. Soviet summit, President Reagan said he wanted a summit, he believed that Mikhail Gorbachev wanted a summit and therefore the summit would be held.

FEC REPORT ASSESSES ECONOMIC PROBLEMS, SOLUTIONS

LD110934 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-croation 1318 GMT 10 Jun 86

[Text] Belgrade, 10 Jun -- The unfavorable state of the Yugoslav economy expressed mainly in the high rate of inflation, low economic growth, and unemployment is a consequence of voluntarist behavior, that is to say, a lack of respect for economic laws and the absence of economic criteria in economic operations and in decisionmaking. This is the basic assessment in a report prepared by a special Federal Executive Council (FEC) working group. The report which is accompanied by a draft of the measures to change the situation has been submitted to the SFRY Assembly.

In providing an assessment of the effect of the measures and activity which were embarked so that the long-term stabilization program could be implemented faster, the working group has raised a number of very important conclusions. One of them claims that it would be an illusion to believe that the financial consolidation of the economy can be carried out at the expense of the banking system. In this connection the group says that financial consolidation must be based on comprehensive economic stablization, that is, on long-term measures through which past losses will gradually be made good and fresh ones prevented.

The report stresses that in an operation such as the financial consolidation of the economy it is impossible that all organizations of associated labor and all banks an be rescued. The proposed measures to change the present state of affairs, which is the most interesting section of the report under discussion, stress that there is no reason to stubbornly sustain loss-making enterprises. Greater responsibility is also required in the cases of investments because we have made many mistakes; we paid dearly for them and we are still paying for them.

The working group also suggests that sanctions should be considered for the management of organizations operating at a loss and also that the rule should be established whereby the reasons for the loss-making operations should be analyzed by independent commissions and by experts groups (mainly by the Social Accountancy Service).

According to the view of the working group a great deal still remains to be done to improve the situation in the economy. Many systemic solutions must undergo a "revision" and this action must not suffer any delay. It is said that changes in the accounting and taxation system have to be made, and the same applies to the measures with which further losses in the banks, expenditure uncovered by results of work, and the creation of fictitious incomes will be prevented.

Since outside factors which have a bearing on the economic developments of our country are more favorable than in recent years, the report prepared by the FEC working group stresses that the significance of the insistence on changes is all the greater. The worst possibility, the warning in the report implies, is if current favorable conditions slow down the action of searching for a solution and if the effects of a let-up in the situation flow into consumption.

In assessing this report the FEC noted that the conditions have been established for the market orientation of our economic policy to be clearly defined and for us not to relent to the pressure to take harsh administrative measures. This approach would be wrong because the most important economic and systematic measures have already been adopted in keeping with stablization program.

This report is due to be discussed soon by the delegates in the SFRY Assembly.

MAMULA RECEIVES VISITING PRC VETERAN'S GROUP

LD120429 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croation 1203 GMT 11 Jun 86

[Text] Belgrade, 11 Jun (TANJUG) -- Fleet Admiral Branko Mamula, federal secretary for national defense, today received a delegation of the veterans of the PRC's National Liberation Army headed by Zang Yunya which is paying an official and friendly visit to our country. The conversation which was conducted in a cordial and friendly atmosphere focused on the importance of the two countries' veterans organizatins in the efforts to further develop and cherish revoluntarily traditions and also on the need for their even closer cooperation in the struggle for peace and the progress of mankind. Reference was also made to some issues of Yugoslav-Chinese inter-army cooperation. It was said in this context that this cooperation was developing successfully. However, both sides expressed an interest in a more meaningful and comprehensive cooperation, particularly in the area of military-economic complex which would be more in line with good political relations existing between the two socialist and friendly countries.

The reception given for the delegation of the veterans of the Chinese National Liberation Army which is visiting our country as a guest of SUBNOR Federal Board was also attended, on the Yugoslav side, by Lieutenant General Milan Daljevic, undersecretary in the federal secretariat for national defense, and Lieutenant General Metodija Stefanovski, assistant federal secretary for national defense; and on the Chinese side by Xie Li, the PRC ambassador in Yugoslavia, and Zheng Hong Yan, military, naval and air attache.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON 10TH SUBNOR CONGRESS

Fifth Plenary Session Report

AU102056 Belgrade Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1300 GMT 10 Jun 86

[Report on the fifth plenary sesssion of the 10th Congress of the Federation of Veterans Association [SUBNOR] in Belgrade on the morning of 10 June]

[Excerpt] The international situation in the world is uncertain and grave. There are many contradictions, mistrust, and attacks on other countries. Do not Hiroshima and Nagasaki, and now Chernobyl, Muhamed Begic stressed, warn into what a desolate region mankind is hurling itself?

[Begin Begic recording] The Yugoslav Veterans Federation therefore has a legitimate right to raise its voice again at this congress against the destructive forces that endanger freedom, independence, and the right of peoples to their own road in political, social, and economic development. [end recording]

Milan Djudovic especially stood against the construction of nuclear power stations.

[Begin Djudovic recording] I ask this congress to join the requests of youth and of many citizens, a majority of the citizens of our country, and to issue an appeal from this congress that the appropriate organs urgently adopt a decision to stop all preparations for the construction of nuclear power stations in our country under the present technological situation [applause] I think that there is no need to explain to the gathering what would happen, what catastrophe would occur both as regards health conditions and as regards economic dependence and as regards new borrowing, if we were to transform our country into a colony of those who would want to sell their leftovers to us.

And another question: The press recently said that somebody negotiated with somebody from the FRG to transform a beautiful mountain in our country into a place where they would dump their nuclear waste. I ask this congress that we demand that it be stated urgently and officially by the respective organs in the press who was the person conducting the negotiations and on whose behalf he negotiated that our wonderful country be turned into a garbage heap of atomic waste, of nuclear waste from other countries. He who negotiated, if he indeed negotiated, is a worse traitor than the Chetniks, the Ballists, the Ustashas, and all others who served the occupiers. [end recording]

In conclusion we single out the opinion of Milojica Pantelic who pointed out that it is necessary to face resolutely the problems of Kosovo, the implementation of the Long-Term Economic Stablization Program, and the radical changes in the political system of socialist self-management.

Pantelic requested that the 13th LCY Congress raise the question of the responsibility of all those who are to be blamed for nonimplementation of the positions adopted.

[Begin Pantelic recording] As is usual at many of our federal gatherings, some individuals smile and talk in fables, but they say: When we go back to our provincial and republican house, we will do as we want to do in the spirit of the positions of our republican or provincial leadership. I must announce that the times for such behavior, in my opinion, are at an end.

There are 3 trains in our country that are running late. They are Yugoslav trains and they are 4 or 5 years late, and not 4 minutes late. The first train is called Kosovo, the second train is called the Long-Term Economic Stablization Program, and the third is called a Program of Necessary, Revolutionary, and Radical Changes in the Development of the Political System of Socialist Self-Management in Yugoslavia. [applause]

The question therefore arises who is responsible for these trains running late. They in fact constitute our future, the prospects of our country. The responsibility is shared by many people at all levels of our social organization in the socialist self-management system. One thing is certain, however: The greatest specific responsibility for the delays, impermissible delays, of these trains attaches to three subjects in our self-managing Yugoslav socialist society. These subjects are the LCY Presidium, the SFRY Presidency, and the Federal Executive Council. [applause] [End recording]

After the conclusion of the 10th Congress of the Yugoslav Veterans Federation, the first session of the Federal Committee was held. It elected Rudi Kolak new president for a 1-year term, and Vlajko Bajic as secretary.

Message to LCY Congress

LD102157 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1442 GMT 10 Jun 86

[Text] Belgrade, 10 Jun (TANJUG) -- In a frank and critical discussion that reflected the mood of all Yugoslav war Veterans, the 10th SUBNOR Congress made an assessment of the present state of Yugoslav society and estabished the direction and tasks of its future activity. This is stressed in the message the delegates sent to the 13th LCY Congress.

The assessment is that Yugoslav society is in a serious economic, political and moral crisis. The preponderance of partial interests and the fact that they are at variance with general and joint interests, at a level ranging from work organizations and the municipalities to the republic and provinces, has brought about a process of disintegration whose negative economic and political consequences are being increasingly felt.

This is why the national liberation war veterans resolutely advocate that all disintegration processes in society be halted as rapidly and as efficiently as possible, stresses the message.

In the future we must all consistently and without compromise fight for the consolidation of self-management and its material basis and at all levels of our society's organization, ranging from basic organizations of associated labor to the federation. We must fight with vigor for the integration of our society along self-managment lines, and against all forms of bureaucratic usurpation.

The counterrevolution in Kosovo has provided a warning with all the force of its impact as to where the processes of division, encapsulation and opportunism can lead to. For this reason the war veterans plead for the quickest possible change of the situation in Kosovo. Kosovo must be a common problem and concern of the entire Yugoslav community.

The national liberation war veterans expect the 13th LCY Congres to adopt decisions that will contribute to the halting of negative processes, the opening of new and positive ones that will as soon and as fully as possible secure the continuity of our socialist revolution in keeping with the LCY program and Tito's vision about the development and defense of the SFRY.

In the struggle for these objectives and without vacillation and compromise, the veterans will fight resolutely and honorably fulfill their historic duty, as they have always done in the past, stresses the message of the 10th SUBNOR Congress to the 13th LCY Congress.

ANTI-NUCLEAR GATHERINGS HELD IN SEVERAL CITIES

[Excerpt] A number of ecological and anti-nuclear gatherings have been held in several Yugoslav cities in the past weeks, at which primarily young people expressed their concern and resistance to the proposed building of four nuclear power stations in our country. At the Belgrade Student Cultural Center, such a gathering started this morning under the title, Anti-Nuclear Gathering. Aleksandar Zigic reports:

A round-table conference opened at the Student Cultural Center at 1000 (0800 GMT) at which ecological and peace movements from Ljubljana, Zagreb, Novi Sad, Backa Palanka, and Skopke, guests from the faculty, journalists, scientists, and others gathered.

'GROWING OPPOSITION' TO NUCLEAR POWER NOTED

AU051242 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1016 GMT 5 Jun 86

[Gustav Kalupa report from Belgrade -- live]

[Text] In Yugoslavia the number of opponents of nuclear power is increasing, while the advocates of the official nuclear program are getting more and more uncompromising. A serious confrontation is in the offing. In an opinion poll taken by the Zagreb polling institute 75 percent of those questioned were against nuclear power as an energy source and 87 percent called nuclear power platns the most dangerous polluters of the environment.

Nuclear power was an important topic at all the party congresses in the six republics and two autonomous provinces. Because it is also referred to in the party congress documents, it will have to be dealt with at the LCY congress at the end of June. At the congress of the Communist Youth in Belgrade a motion put forward by the Belgrade youth leader to banish nuclear power and prohibit the construction of nuclear power plants was rejected by only a slight margin. But this shows that even the Communist youth is highly critical of the use of nuclear power. Decisions must no longer be left to technocrats alone the youth delegates demanded.

Nevertheless, planning for the nuclear program is secretly being carried on. Disclosures by Yugoslav dalies have suddenly hardened the fronts. The public feels cheated because after the Chernobyl disaster they prematurely expected the Yugoslav Government to turn away from the uclear program. So far, the state authorities have been reacting flexibly to protests, and nuclear power opponents have limited themselves to peaceful demonstrations and discussions.

Only in the Slovene capital Ljubljana did several hundred antinuclear protesters marched through the city in protective clothing, with gas masks, or with umbrellas and called upon the party leadership and the government in faraway Belgrade to resign. Awareness of environmental problems is far stronger in the western parts of Yugoslavia than in less developed regions. This is surprisingly shown by the Zagreb opinion poll of the institute, officially called the Market Research Institute.

In the meantime, 10 communities in Croatia have informed the regional government of their decisions not to permit any nuclear facilities or storage facilities on their territory. Whether the village of Prevlaka, where construction of the next nuclear power plant is scheduled to already begin in 1988, is among those communities is not known. There is still corn growing on the planned construciton site at the Sava.

It is known that the Belgrade government's nuclear program provides for the construction of four large nuclear power plants by 1995 so that there will be one in each of th SFRY republics. The only working nuclear power plant has been in operation for some years in Krsko in Slovenia.

The government does not hesitate to use tricks to divert public attention and prevent people from getting nervous. Thus the electrification program in Crotia no longer distinguishes between individual power plants -- those for water, oil, or coal -- but generally speaks of a planned amount of 1,630 megawatts, which includes the 600 megawatts of the Prevlaka nuclear power plant.

The large project planning companies are continuing their work in high gear in any case and do not stop at threatening journalists who report on preparations for the construction of nuclear power plants. We will not permit you journalists to make the people rebellious, people we would later have to chase off the construction sites with machine guns, threatened an official of the Serb Power Corporation and threw the reporters out of a general assembly of the corporation.

[Excerpts] The Development of Energy From the Army Angle

Compared with other large systems in society, the Yugoslav People's Army [YPA] is a relatively small consumer of energy. To a great extent, its use of energy is adjusted to the specific traits of military equipment and the ways it is used, which demand autonomous sources of energy, predominantly of low capacity and chiefly mobile. Therefore, priority in Army plans is given to hydroelectric power stations of low power, stationary and mobile electricity generating sets, chemical sources of energy ...Considerable attention is also paid to obtaining energy from so-called alternative sources (using the energy of the sun, wind, sea...) to which the scientific potentials in this field are directed to a great extent.

For example, seven mini power stations have been erected on swift mountain rivers in various parts of our country, and it is planned that 19 more small hydroelectric power stations and 7 wind power generators will be constructed by 1990.

Through economy measures and transportation rationalization, efforts are made to reduce the yearly consumption of fuel by 5 to 10 percent, despite the increase in requirements. In addition, in the past few years, the requirement is being persistently implemented to substitute liquid fuels with solid fuels, and in accordance with this, further construction of oil-burning boilers has been stopped.

The Army is certainly also interested in the development of large capacity energy sources, including the country's electric energy system, above all from the viewpoint of defense requirements, of course. Appropriate requests are therefore made as regards its further development, and these requests, militarily speaking, are directed at increasing its resistance and toughness, or rather at reducing as much as possible its vulnerability under combat conditions. However, the construction of these projects is not the responsibility of the Yugoslav Peoiple's Army, and therefore one cannot expect that the Army will arbitrate when society in general decides on this sphere, not even when possible further construction of the nuclear power stations is discussed. Organs responsible for this field exist in our society, and it is their duty and responsibility to offer reliable and pertinent answers about the further direction of the development of energy in our country.

Anyhow, the Army will continue to insist that requirements of interest for the defense of the country, especially as regards its security, will be respected in the further building of the energy system in our country.

VLASI COMMENTS ON COMMUNITY RELATIONS IN KOSOVO

AU051020 [Editorial Report] Pristina RILINDJA in Albanian on 1 June carries on pages 1-2 a 3,000-word summary of the speech delivered by Azem Vlasi, president of the Kosovo LC Provincial Committee, at the 30 May Council of Youth Cadres at Pecka Banja. The report adds the following to the referent item: "Recently the opinion has been voiced ever more loudly that socialism in Kosovo during thee past 40 years supposedly has been constructed in the interests of the Albanians alone. Such a thesis with dark and hostile insinuations, which aims supposedly to show that everything achieved in the province has been done against the Serbs and Montenegrins, must be combatted vigorously wherever it appears, because it attempts to sow distrust and hatred towards the Kosovo LC and other progressive forces in the province and the country, said Azem Vlasi."

RILINDJA also reports Vlasi as urging more social contact between young people of different nationalities, and quotes Vlasi as saying: "Besides, this in the mutual interest of everybody, and in the interest of people's acquisition of each other's language, since it is a fact Albanians increasingly have been learning less Serbo-Croatian, while the Serbs speak very little Albanian. I think there is nothing more normal than knowing and using the language of others in the area where you live. Ignorance of the language of other people with whom you share territory is simply an expression of pronounced primitivism. We ought to make qualitative changes in the educational system where the teaching of regional languages is concerned, because this is in our mutual interest."

KOSOVO PAPERS CONDEMN BULATOVIC STUDENICA SPEECH

AU291752 Pristina RILINDJA in Albanian 21 May 86 p 5

[Editorial: "Abuse of a Gathering -- Commentary of JEDINSTVO on the Nationalist Appearance of Kosta Bulatovic at the Celebration of the 800th Anniversary of the Monastery of Studenica"]

[Text] The principal celebration of eight centuries of the life of one of the oldest monasteries and centers of Serbian culture was held on Saturday and Sunday at Studenica. Since Studenica was built when the medieval Serbian state, was first created it played an important part in the spiritual and cultural development of the Serbian people. Hence the celebration of its 800th anniversary represents, apart from its spiritual significance, an important cultural jubilee, which will be marked worthily by many cultural events this year. So the principal ceremony on Sunday attracted citizens, believers, and many admireres of medieval art from the whole country including many parts of Kosovo and the Plain of Dukagjin apart from church dignitaries from Yugoslavia and abroad, a delegation from the SR of Serbia also took part.

The ceremony was mainly spiritual and cultural in character -- the bishop sang the litury and a symposium was held devoted to the cultural and religious mission of Studenica monastery through the centuries. But, after the official part of the program, from the improvised dais in the monastery courtyard where the general ceremony had been held, there came uninvited and unannounced by the organizers of the celebration, the voice of Kosta Bulatovic of Kosovo Polje. Abusing the microphone and the celebration of the anniversary of Studenica monastery, he attempted a short speech giving his own views on the situation in Kosovo and the danger for the Serbian people. One of the official organizers of the program, a priest, interrupted him and several times warned him to leave, until finally he was removed from the platform.

Kosta Bulatovic's unannounced appearance, so out of place in the gathering and in relation to the importance of the cultural anniversary being celebrated, was a calculated attempt to twist a religious andd cultural even for political ends, so that it would assume a halo of nationalism The priest saw this and called upon those present not to applaud the speaker. We do not say that the problem which Bulatovic attempted to speak about do not exist, but they cannot be solved at such meetings and gatherings, and there is a proper self-managing way of dealing with such things. So his appearance must be understood simply as an attempt to dishonor the general celebration of the anniversary of Studenica monastery, harming attempts to stabilize the situation in Kosovo. Luckily, the representative of the Serbian Orthodox Chruch realized this better than Bulatovic, who as "champion of the Serbian people in Kosovo" in facts does not help these people with such behavior.

Finally, let us repeat: This was an insult to all those who respect our cultural heritage," yesterday's JEDINSTVO commentary concluded.

PRISTINA LC GROUP STUDIES EMIGRATION NUMBERS

[Summary] Prisitina, 11 Jun (TANJUG) -- Today members of the Pristina LC Municipal Committee discussed the emigration of Serbs and Montenegrins from Pristina. According to available statistics, in 1984 as many as 1,028 people left, out of which there were 53 families. In 1985, 732 people emigrated from Pristina, as well as 64 families. In the past 5 months 407 Serbs and Montenegrins left, that is, even 152 more than in the same period last year, and also 43 families. Last year 7 families numbering 18 people and another 177 people returned to Pristina. A total of 150 people who returned, or came to the municipality for the first time, founds jobs, though even 141 persons who were employed left Pristina. Since 1982 around 7,500 Serbs and Montenegrins, or 14 percent of the total number of members of these nations in the municipality, have left Pristina.

In view of the above information, members of the Pristina LC Municipal Committee asessed that the situation was still very complex and that hostile irredentist activity continued to influence the emigration. They spoke of the need for citizens of all nationalities to make efforts on preventing the emigration from Kosovo. They also stressed the need for more effective work of judicial, administrative, and other organs. At the end the Municipal Committee adopted a very concrete program of activities for this municipality's LC to prevent emigration of Serbs and Montenegrins, which is based on the measures and actions of the SFRY Presidency and the LCY Central Committee Presidium on the topical political situations in Kosovo.

CORRECTION TO SVABIC REPOORT AT SUBNOR CONGRESS

The following correction pertains to the item subheadlined, "Svabic Report," on the 10th SUBNOR congress proceedings published in the 11 June Eastern Europe DAILY REPOORT, page I 4, last paragraph, from line sixteen ... our current divisions.

Stressing the importance of the unity of the LC, real and illusory, Svabic warned of the need to overcome the dual position of the LC, according to which it is the party in power and at the same time claims to be the critic of this same power. Therefore, he stressed, the criticism of nationalism, or regionalism, must be implemented consistently in the LC as well. It must, ultimately realize its intention accepted at the sixth congress, it must abandon the monopolist position of power and in so doing not renounce its own organizational influence on decision-making on all social affairs. This is our message, our demand (?addressed) to the LCY Congress, which must signify a turning-point in which we veterans, too, are prepared to do as much as we can.

Mihailo Svatic devoted... (Supplying omitted paragraph)

REPORTAGE ON WARSAW PACT MEETING CONTINUES

[Text] Budapest, June 11 (MTI) -- A press conference was held in the press centre in Hotel Hilton on the Budapest session of the Political Consultative Committee of the member countries of the Warsaw Treaty on Wednesday [11 June]. Vladimir Petrovskiy, Soviet deputy foreign minister, Janos Barabas, deputy head of HSWP CC's department, and Colonel General Nikolay Chervov, chief of group of the General Staff of the Soviet Armed Forces, answered questions.

Appreciating the significance of the appeal for the reduction of conventional arms and armed forces in Europe, Vladimir Petrovskiy stated that the call also promotes measures designed for the entire elimination of nuclear armament. The programme is an answer to claims that the proposals of the socialist countries to reduce and eliminate nuclear weapons are designed to assure their alleged supremacy in conventional weapons

Colonel General Chervov pointed out that the programme takes the fact into consideration that both the United States and the Soviet Union are able to deploy forces in Europe in a short period. Therefore the WT [Warsaw Treaty] member states propose not only to withdraw but also to dissolve units and eliminate their equipment under a joint agreement. The reductidon of armed forces and armament has to be carried out under reliable control, including control on the spot. Ivan Ganev drew attention to the fact that the proposal is an organic part of the programme of the socialist countries for the establishment of universal security.

Vladimir Petrovskiy, pointed out that the Soviet Union continues to pay special attention to summits, including the Soviet-U.S. summit. However, they are only worthwhile if they bring results and their preparation demands an appropriate international atmosphere. Janos Barabas pointed out that the WT member states expect that there will be an advance in strengthening security and economic cooperation in Europe as well as in human relations.

Follow-Up Conference Planned

LD112018 Budapest Television Service in Hungarian 1730 GMT 11 Jun 86

[Report on press conference at International Press Center in Budapest on 11 June]

[Text] [Begin recording of Hungarian Deputy Foreign Minister Miklos Barity] A meeting of the Political Consultative Committee was held in Budapest in 1969. On the basis of the appeal which was adopted then, the European states signed the Helsinki Final Act in 1975. We are confident that this new proposal by the Warsaw Pact could again open up a very important stage in European disarmament, advancing the all-European process. [end recording]

[Announcer] That was Miklos Barity, deputy minister of foreign affairs and general secretary of the Political Consultative Committee, speaking at the International Press Center. Soon afterwards, Hungarian, Soviet, and Bulgarian politicians and high-ranking military leaders answered journalists' questions in the press center. Some excerpts from the press conference follow.

In reply to a question by a Soviet journalist, Vladimir Petrovskiy said the present proposals have particular significance, partly because they include reductions in traditional armaments as well. This convincingly refutes the often repeated Western claim that the Warsaw Pact is only aiming at a reduction in nuclear weapons to obtain superiority in the sphere of traditional armaments. Now we are proposing a reduction in total military potential. We hope and trust that the appeal now being expressed in Budapest will contribute to Europe once again becoming the continent of the reduction in tension. In our opinion, we have put forward a realistic program for an improvement of the European situation.

Speaking about the military aspects of the question of security, Colonel General Chervov outlined the proposal that the means of delivering a strike -- the tactical aircraft and tactical missiles with a range of less than 1,000 km -- should be eliminated. The concentration of military forces should be reduced and the armies should be reduced by half a million on both sides. We are proposing that the magnitude of large military exercises should also be restricted, so that every European country should be able to feel secure from sudden and unexpected attack. Our new proposals are honest; we do not want to cheat NATO. It is, however, natural that our negotiations must not become a one way street; mutual goodwill is needed.

[Begin recording of unidentified person] We are preparing for the so-called follow-up conference in Vienna in a suitably active and initiating manner. We take it as our point of departure that in the last decade, since the signing of the Helsinki Final Act, relations on our continent have significantly broadened. This expanded system of relations reflects a realization of the community of interests and to some extent our dependence on each other. It reflects that the European states are increasingly regarding themselves as being in a relationship of partnership. I think this fact demonstrates that the so-called Helsinki process, despite the standstills, at times despite the setbacks, is functioning; it has withstood the test of time. In this respect, what we are expecting from the so-called follow-up conference in Vienna is that we should make progress primarily in strengthening the security of our continent. Besides this, according to our expectations, there is scope for progress in improving mutual economic cooperation. This is justified in particular by the fact that in recent times we have noted many signs of discriminatory and protectionist endeavors -- naturally, not on our side. We can prepare for the Vienna follow-up conference with just hopes. Thank you. [end recording]

INTERNATIONAL TU CONFERENCE HELD IN PRAGUE

[CTK report: "Conclusion of International Trade Union Conference"]

[Text] Prague (CTK) -- An international conference of secretaries of trade union federations from Bulgaria, the CSSR, Cuba, Hungary, Mongolia, the GDR, Poland, Romania, the USSR, and the SRV on the development of the trade unions' political and organizational work ended in Prague on Thursday [5 Jun] with the adoption of a coordination plan of multilateral cooperation in the area of trade union mass organizational work for the years 1986 to 1990. On behalf of the Central Trade Union Council, the session was attended by Miroslav Spaniel, secretary of the Central Trade Union Council. He spoke, in particular, about the activity of Czechoslovak trade unions in the period of preparations for annual meetings, which will culminate in the 11th All-Trade Union Congress next April.

In the course of the 4-day conference, its participants discussed questions concerning the position of the primary trade union organization and its role in implementing the conclusions of trade union congresses. They agreed that the trade union federations must pay constant attention to the work of primary organizations in the interest of a consistent implementation of their role as the school of management and administration and as the defender of the rights of the working people in everyday life.

GDR, CSSR PRESENT GUIDELINES ON CW NEGOTIATONS

[Text] Berlin, 6 June (ADN) -- Kurt Nier, GDR deputy minister for foreign affairs, on Friday [6 June] received the ambassadors to the GDR of Belgium, Denmark, the Netherlands, and Norway. Referring to the Prague Declaration of the Chemical Disarmament Working Group of the SED, CPCZ, and SPD of 13 May 1986, in which an appeal is made to the neighboring countries of the GDR, the CSSR, and the FRG to join in the initiative for the formation of a chemical weapons-free zone in Europe, Kurt Nier handed over a proposal: "Principles and Guidelines for Future Negotations on the Formation of a Chemical Weapons-Free Zone in Europe." He stressed at the same time the readiness of the GDR for immediate direct contacts with government representatives of the states concerned, including Luxembourg.

The Polish People's Republic and the Hungarian People's Republic, whose governments have already expressed their support for the initiative of the GDR and the CSSR for the formation of a chemical weapaons-free zone, were informed of this step.

In the conversation, Kurt Nier referred to the fact that negotiatons on this initiative could be a weighty contribution toward the banning of dangerous chemical mass destruction weapons. This is even more urgent as agreement in NATO for the production of chemical binary weapons in the United States aggravates the already tense situation. This particularly affects the negotiations on a worldwide and total ban on chemical weapons in Geneva. In view of the importance of this question, the GDR therefore resolutely backs a global ban on chemical weapons and is at the same time also working actively for regional solutions as a step in this direction. Also on Friday, a proposal with the same text was handed over to the representatives of the named states in Prague by the Ministry for Foreign Affairs of the CSSP.

Further Report

[Text] Prague June 6 (CTK) -- A document concerning guidelines for talks on establishing a chemical-free zone in Europe was handed over by Czechoslovak Deputy Foreign Minister Jaromir Johanes to representatives of four countries here today.

Jaromir Johanes expressed hope that the governments of the mentioned countries will join efforts to create a chemical-free zone in Europe, stressing that this would be a positive contribution towards the endeavour to achieve a general ban on and liquidation of chemical weapons on a worldwide scale.

CZECHOSLOVAK SECURITY COMMITTEE MEETS

[Text] Today in Prague, the Presidium of the Czechoslovak Committee for European Security and Cooperation heard information about the session of the International Committee for European Security and Cooperation and about the development at the Stockholm conference on measures for the reinforcement of trust and security and about disarmament in Europe.

It also discussed the current situation in the world and in the declaration spoke highly about the USSR's decision to again prolong the unilateral moratorium on all nuclear explosions. It emphasized that the far-reaching Soviet peace proposals represent a unique set of measures that are directed toward eliminating nuclear and all other mass destruction weapons by the end of this century and to averting the threat of the militarization of outer space.

The proposals for reducing armaments in individual areas of the world are very important for reducing international tension. Among these special initiatives is the joint proposal by the CSSR and the GDR to create a zone free of chemical weapons in central Europe.

With the peace initiatives, the USSR and the other socialist countries demonstrate yet again that their purposeful foreign policy is in harmony with the vital interests and hopes of all nations. These interests demand that the latest peace initiatives by the USSR and the other socialist countries were positively assessed by the governments of the United States and its allies in NATO.

[Text] Geneva, June 10 (BTA) -- Mr Konstantin Tellalov, leader of the Bulgarian delegation to the Conference on Disarmament, gave a press conference on the occasion of his election as a chairman of the Committee on Disarmament. Stressing the significance of the moratorium on all nuclear tests, which has been continued by the Soviet Union till August 6, Mr Konstantin Tellalov pointed out that the intentions of the U.S. to renounce SALT-2 jeopoardize the political atmosphere at the conference. Speaking about Bulgaria's policy in the field of disarmament, he stressed the initiatives for turning of the Balkans into a nuclear and chemical-weapon-free zone.

WARSAW PACT MEETING NOTED FOR 'DEMAGOGIC CLAMOR'

AU121053 Tirana ATA in English 0945 GMT 12 Jun 86

["The Summit Meeting of the Political Consultative Committee of Warsaw Treaty is Over" -- ATA headline]

[TEXT] Tirana, June 12 (ATA) -- The two-day summit meeting of the Political Consultative Committee of Warsaw Treaty, which was chaired by Gorbachev, ended in Budapest yesterday. At the end of the meeting the Warsaw Treaty member countries issued "a joint" communique and called on the other military bloc, NATO, and on the other European countries to reduce the conventional weapons and the armed troops in Europe. Both the communique and the "appeal" echo the latest Gorbachev's proposals on alleged disarmament and security in Europe and world, on a ban of nuclear tests, on the dismantling of the medium range nuclear missiles in Europe etc.

The demagogic clamor made this time by the Warsaw Treaty coincides with the beginning of the 10th session of the socalled Disarmament and Security Conference in Europe, in Stockholm on June 10. The Soviet social-imperialists and the American imperialists have indulged in such propaganda tricks in the past as well. The falsity of this demagogy is exposed by the daily practical acts of the two imperialist superpowers. The U.S.A. and the USSR, which have not made any concrete step towards disarmament and security. On the contrary they have further intensified the arms race by enhancing their conventional and nuclear arms arsenals.

WARSAW PACT'S BUDAPEST PROPOSALS PRAISED

["Call for Decisive Steps for Peace, Security, and Disarmament" -- BTA headline]

[Text] Budapest, June 11 (BTA political observer) -- The session of the Political Consultative Committee of the Warsaw-Treaty member countries which has just ended in the Hungarian capital raised a voice of reason and political responsibility and called for resolute steps for peace, security and disarmament.

The documents of the session -- the address to the NATO-member states and to all European countries including a program for limiting the armed forces and the conventional armaments in Europe, as well as the communique which has been published -- reflect the firm will of the socialist countries to avert a nuclear catastrophe and to save civilization.

The world is living in complicated and responsible times. The U.S. and NATO refuse to start on the road to curbing the arms race, to its prevention in space and to banning nuclear-weapon tests. The cardinal task of our times is to safeguard peace, to put an end to the dangerous arms race and to consolidate the international situation.

It is to this end that the Budapest decisions of the Warsaw Treaty were adopted. The aim is to establish an all-embracing system of international security not only in the military and political fields but also in the economic and humanitarian ones.

The Warsaw-Treaty states appeal for uniting the efforts in order to put an end to nuclear weapon tests, to do away on a mutual basis with the Soviet and U.S. medium-range missiles in the European zone and to achieve concrete agreements at the Soviet-U.S. Geneva talks on nuclear and space weapons.

The programme for saving mankind from nuclear annihilation, proposed by Mr Mikhail Gorbachev on January 15 this year, and the peaceful initiatives of the Soviet Union and the other socialist countries which followed it, have created real possibilities for eliminating nuclear and chemical weapons by the end of the century.

A wide-ranging and concrete programme for considerable reductions of the Amred Forces and conventional weapons in Europe has been discussed in the Hungarian capital and proposed to all European states. This idea was developed by Mr. Mikhail Gorbachev in his speech at the 11th Congress of the Socialist Unity Party of Germany in Berlin. Now it has turned into an address for concrete steps.

In order to evaluate the importance of this new peaceful proposal we should consider the role of security on the European Continent in world peace. Here, in Europe, there stand opposed two three-million strong groups of Armed Forces which posses the most up-to-date tanks, missiles and aircraft. What is more, the so-called conventional weapons are being contantly up-dated. They are becoming more and more powerful and acquiring qualities close to those of the mass annihilation weapons.

There is an approximate balance in the conventional arms of NATO and of the Warsaw Treaty. But this balance is kept at a very high and dangerous level. The new proposals of the socialist countries envisage immediate and essential measures which will reduce the military confrontation in Europe, will strengthen the security on the continent. These proposals appear as a substantial addition to the programme for liquidation of the weapons for mass destruction. But they are of an independent character. Their realization would reduce the military threat in Europe and in the world.

The programme does not provide any unilateral advantages for anyone. It is bsed on the principle that the military balance must be kept at the lowest possible level, that the military potentials must be reduced to the necessary defence level. Characteristic feature of this programme is the fact that it supplies the possibility for implementation of all measures under reliable and efficient control through national technical devices, as well as through international procedures, on site inspections included.

The Budapest documents state with responsibility that the Warsaw Treaty member-states will never, in any circumstances, start military actions first against any country in Europe or in the world, if they themselves are not a target of an aggression.

The session in the Hungarian capital, which passed in the traditional atmosphere of friendship and cooperaton, at a complete unanimity, once again showed in practice the new type of political thinking in the nuclear century. The socialist countries and their defense organization, the Warsaw Treaty, undertake a new peace offensive for disarmament, for dialogue and understanding.

The call from Budapest is addressed toward the statesmen and politicians from Europe, but it is also an appeal to all social circles; to all people who love and cherish peace, who understand the great necessity of united actions for disarmament and for improvement of the international situation.

ZHIVKOV OUTLINES NATIONAL, FOREIGN POLICIES

AU100858 Sofia RABOTNICHESKO DELO in Bulgarian 7 Jun 86 pp 1, 2

["Speech of Comrade Todor Zhivkov," general secretary of the BCP Central Committee and State Council chairman, at his meeting with the voters of Sofia's Dimitrov District on 6 June; uppercase passages published in boldface]

[Text] Dear voters of Sofia's Dimitrov district, comrades, citizens:

The elections in the People's Republic of Bulgaria are an important act of socialist democracy. I am also convinced that THE PRESENT ELECTIONS WILL BE A BRIGHT POLITICAL DEMONSTRATION OF THE PEOPLE'S ATTACHMENT TO SOCIALISM, AS WELL AS OF THEIR PROFOUND CONFIDENCE IN THE BCP'S GENERAL APRIL LINE.

I am convinced that at these elections the indestructible unity between the party and people will once again manifest itself. The roots of this unity are based on our unswerving policy of subjecting everything to the people's well-being; these roots are based on true democracy and a deep respect for every citizen, for his personal dignity, and for his political will.

We can all testify as witnesses that the ELECTION CAMPAIGN PROCEEDED WITH EXCEPTIONAL ELAN. At meetings and rallies with the Fatherland Front candidates for National Assembly deputies, for mayors, and for people's councillors, the achievements of the period under review were assessed, our successes in the socialist construction of our motherland were accounted for. We, all of us, the citizens of the People's Republic of Bulgaria are fully justified in being proud of the results of our efforts. (prolonged applause) It is justified to rejoice AT THE FACT THAT THE VOTERS HAVE MANIFESTED GREAT INTEREST IN THE PROBLEMS -- regardless of whether they are of a national or local character. Thousands of specific proposals and recommendations were submitted during the election campaign. THEY SHOW THAT THE WORKERS CLASS, THE AGRICULTURAL TOILERS, AND THE PEOPLE'S INTELLIGENTSIA ARE READILY ACCEPTING THE TASKS THAT WE ARE NOW COPING WITH AS A PEOPLE AND AS A STATE.

Naturally, as on other occasions, we must now point out that we are far from being complacent. Shortcomings and difficulties were not passed over in silence during the election meetings. The working people evaluated the work of their selected candidates, strictly and critically, making this evaluation on the basis of the only correct criterion -- what has been achieved, do the candidates' words coincide with their deeds? In the cases when words did not coincide with deeds, criticism was severe but, I think, it was healthy and beneficial as well. The working people's readiness to work honestly and selflessly for the implementation of the party projects at such a moment of drastic change as the present one -- when deep, qualitative changes are awaiting us in all sectors of life -- inspires us with optimism. This readiness shows that the taks we are assigning to the people will be accomplished.

I am convinced that these tasks will also be accomplished in your district, which is named after Georgi Dimitrov, immortal son of the Bulgarian people.

IN THE PAST THE DIMITROV RAYON WAS ONE OF THE FORTRESSES OF OUR REVOLUTIONARY MOVEMENT, OF OUR PARTY. TODAY THIS RAYON TAKES AN IMPORTANT PLACE IN THE CAPITAL'S POLITICAL AND SOCIOECONOMIC LIFE. Within the period of the last mandate 254 million leva of capital investments were utilized; the working people of this rayon received over 10,000 new housing units. The programs for the development of a comprehensive environment are successfully implemented. The total modernization of the rayon and its reconstruction are in process and this will be accomplished by 1995, not by 2000 as we had previously envisaged. (applause)

This rayon, to which we have been linked since the early, hard days of struggle against fascism and capitalism, on several occasions proposed my candidacy for the National Assembly. This time you have again proposed me as candidate from your rayon for the forthcoming National Assembly. This is a great honor for me and I thank you most sincerely for this. (Stormy, prolonged applause)

Permit me to digress slightly. I recently met one of the party veterans, an old comrade of mine, who, I think, is here at the meeting. He told me: "It is easy for you Comrade Zhivkov, to accept the assignments." I answered him: "It might be true that my rank is high -- as you say -- but it is by no means easy for me." Despite the resistance and obstacles of individual departments and organs, many of the crucial problems of the Dimitrov Rayon were resolved thanks mostly to the energetic involvement of the voters themselves. It is perhaps true that I have manifested a little more partiality in this case. This is a "sin" for which I am ready to suffer criticism. (Applause, animation in the audience)

I hope you will agree with me that along with the hitherto achieved successes, the citizens of this rayon are justified in the concern with which they demand new development measures, as well as improvements in the standards of their trade, transportation, health, and cultural services. These demands are laid down as the basis of the Dimitrov Rayon plans for the National Assembly's new mandate period. These plans are great, especially as regards the economic sector.

-- priority will be given to the development of strategic trends in the economic sectors -- radio electronics and communications industry;

-- the structure of production will be perfected and the goods will be modernized;

-- new housing projects, new schools, kindergartens, and sports premises will be built.

THERE IS NO DOUBT THAT THE SELFLESS EFFORTS OF ALL WORKING PEOPLE IN OUR GLORIOUS DIMITROV RAYON WILL MAKE IT EVEN MORE BEAUTIFUL, EVEN MORE ATTRACTIVE. (Prolonged applause)

Comrades, as you know, the election campaign proceeded under the influence of the 13th BCP Congress and its decisions. The sincere dialogue with the working people from all parts of our country is, above all, a dialogue on the problems raised by the congress. THE MAIN THINGS WHICH THE PEOPLE DEMAND FROM THEIR CANDIDATES IS A HIGH SENSE OF RESPONSIBILTIY IN IMPLEMENTING THE PROJECTS OF THE CONGRESS.

It is 2 months since the 13th BCP Congress. They were, however, sufficient to feel the exceptional importance of this congress. With its entire work, the congress achieved the following goals:

-- it specified and enriched the party program for the construction of mature socialism; it raised the party's general April line to a new higher level;

-- it consolidated the basic goals and tasks of the Ninth 5-Year Plan period and of the period up to 2000, by mapping out, in this manner, a strategy for the further progress of the People's Republic of Bulgaria, so that this country may become a highly developed socialist state capable of meeting the challenge of the 21st century.

The 13th BCP Congress defined as a strategic course at the current stage the implementation of the scientific-technical revolution and, on this basis, the acceleration of the rate of our economic development.

As early as during the congress discussions we correctly came to the conclusion that there should be a move toward accelerating the rate of development with regard to the two 5-year plan periods -- that is, up to 1995 -- and increasing national income and, accordingly, social labor productivity 2-2.5 times, and 3-3.5 times in the period up to 2000.The struggle for high and stable rates has always been the chief goal of our economic policy throughout the April period. Thanks to these high rates, we succeeded in overcoming the country's economic backwardness and implementing its industrialization. We achieved a large production potential for the size of our country. We succeeded in ensuring our active and efficient participation in the international socialist division of labor. We succeeded in improving the people's living standard.

Marx's postulate about the dialectics of the historical process is well-known: The development of each phenomenon logically reaches the point at which it no longer has a place in its own shell. Today, we have reached a limit in many respects where we need qualitatively new solutions. We can no longer be satisfied with the rates that characterized our former development.

Why is this so? Because, as regards their economic character, these solutions are marked by the past. It is also because the factors used to achieve these solutions in the past have exhausted their possibilities. Something that is of particular importance, in this respect, is the fact that the question of accelerating the rates of speed must be resolved on a qualitatively new basis. The quality of the new growth can be achieved only through contemporary scientific-technical progress, through profound changes in the structure and organization of production, and through the further development and perfection of socialist democracy.

Our strategy for a qualitatively new growth is based upon the following factors:

-- this strategy relies on the objective laws of social development, on the laws of scientific-technical revolution;

-- this strategy is coordinated with the stage achieved in our country's comprehensive development, with the strong economic and scientific-technical, as well as cadres', potential created in our country;

-- this strategy is well prepared and coordinated with the party's theoretical and practical work following the 12th BCP Congress, and in particular with the postulates of the February 1985 and January 1986 Plenums of the BCP Central Committee.

I would like to repeat that WE MUST ACHIEVE THE GOALS WE HAVE ASSIGNED OURSELVES BY ALL MEANS. There can be no retreat in this respect. -- Because, if we retreat, we will waste time as regards the rate of development, we will be lagging behind, we will miss the opportunity to provide timely solutions for the social problems of man and society. -- There can be no retreat from the international viewpoint either. If we retreat, we will become unequal partners in the socialist community, as well as in the international division of labor. Such a retreat is not in the interest of the common front of the forces of peace and social progress.

IN ASSUMING QUALITATIVELY NEW TASKS, WE ARE AWARE OF THE FACT THAT THEY WILL BE FULFILLED. This confidence we are inspired with comes from the long struggles waged by the party and from its ability to fulfill the pledges assumed in our promises to the people. Once upon a time, in the dawn of the socialist movement, we promised that we would lead the workers class struggle to the victorious socialist revolution.

This was a pledge worthy of a proletarian and revolutionary Marxist party. This is a pledge we have fulfilled. (Stormy, prolonged applause)

The party has led the people in the construction of new life, convinced that we are accomplishing within decades things that other peoples, under different historical conditions, needed centuries to achieve. We have implemented this conviction of ours into deeds. (Stormy applause)

In 1956, restoring the Leninist principles and norms of social life, our BCP mapped out a line of dynamic development of socialist society, a line of transforming Bulgaria into a developed industrial-agrarian, socialist state. We implemented these projects as well. (Stormy applause)

Let us recall a few statistical data about this country's development within the last 30 years. In 1985 national income increased 7.8 times compared with 1956; in this connection capital investments increased over 12.5 times, basic funds reached 104.4 billion leva, and social labor productivity increased over 8.4 times during the same period. The average annual wages increased from 778 leva in 1956 to 2550 leva in 1985. The social consumption funds per capita of the population reached 864 in 1985. Considerable successes were attained in the cultural sector, in satisfying Bulgarian citizens' intellectual needs. There has been a transformation in the appearance of our country, with its beautiful villages and modern cities.

PERMIT ME, DEAR COMRADES, TO EXPRESS OUR MOST SINCERE GRATITUDE TO THE WORKING PEOPLE OF SOCIALISM IN BULGARIA, TO ALL GENERATIONS OF BUILDERS OF OUR NEW LIFE, FOR THEIR SELFLESS EFFORTS, FOR THEIR UNIQUE CONTRIBUTION TO THE STRUGGLE FOR THE UPSURGE OF OUR SOCIALIST MOTHERLAND. (Prolonged applause)

Comrades, we are well acquainted with the festive atmosphere of our elections. This bright atmosphere is marked by our national character, by our political traditions, which are based on the socialist way of life.

THE PLATFORM OF THE FATHERLAND FRONT AT THE FORTHCOMING ELECTIONS IS BASED ON THE DECISIONS OF THE 13TH BCP CONGRESS. The working people in our country are well aware of what all this means. We do not need vain agitation in order to convince people that our line of policy is correct. The feverish excitement of elections and the publicity with which the bourgeoisie covers the anti-democratic character of elections in the capitalist world is alien to us. Our efforts are aimed at different goals: listening to the people's voice, not disregarding even one useful proposal, developing the living creative efforts of the masses. Our efforts are not subjected to opportunist, political considerations, they are not aimed at social experiments that are an end in themselves. Not political demagogy, but the CONSTANT, ACTIVE CONCERN FOR MAN, HIS DEVELOPMENT AND INTELLECTUAL UPSURGE, HIS BETTER AND HAPPIER LIFE -- THIS IS THE CORE OF OUR SOCIAL POLICY. (Applause)

Socialism opens up ever increasing opportunities to us through working efforts that expand the people's unlimited strength and capacities. In waging a struggle for a new world our society ever increasingly offers conditions for the triumph of the talents and the creative boldness of our people. Social needs of a socialist type are some of our most precious assets. Such assets are: the right to work, free health care and free education, equal rights for both men and women, freedom of religion, and so forth.

WE ARE NOW STRIVING FOR OUR SOCIAL POLICY TO ENCOMPASS ALL ASPECTS OF THE SOCIAL POSITION OF THE INDIVIDUAL AND TOTAL SELF-IMPLEMENTATION OF MAN, WE ARE NOW STRIVING FOR AN EVER GROWING SATISFACTION OF THE PEOPLE'S EVER INCREASING NEEDS. This policy is efficient because it is based on the relation between what man gives to society and what he obtains from it. This policy will be the more efficient, the more fully we implement this principle. THIS IS SO, BECAUSE AT THE PRESENT STAGE OF OUR DEVELOPMENT SOCIAL EQUALITY IS BASED ON THE DISTRIBUTION OF GOODS ACCORDING TO THE QUANTITY AND QUALITY OF LABOR.

We openly and unmistakably declare: There can be no free gifts for anybody. No one should rely upon the hope that his own income and social assets will increase without his own contribution in producing more and better goods, without his own contribution to the material and cultural assets of life in our society. (applause)

It is in this spirit that we are developing the basic trends of our social policy. Measures are expected to be adopted in the following sectors:

-- in the comprehensive satisfaction of the material, social, and intellectual needs of man in accordance with his purchasing power;

-- in the further, more direct connection between invested labor and the results of work. In this connection we will perfect the organization of workers' wages and extensively apply the piece work principle, as well as other progressive forms of remuneration;

-- in intensifying the material incentive for creative workers and frontranking workers in the field of technical progress, for scientists, technologists, specialists, and highly qualified workers;

-- in consolidating the vital strength of our nation through the further development of health care, mass physical culture, and recreation;

-- in increasing the birthrate and the care for the growing, young generations;

-- in further consolidating the socialist family;

-- in improving social security for senior citizens, pensioners, and invalids;

-- in solving the acute housing problems in certain areas of our country.

-- in consistently providing the educational, professional, and cultural development of the young generation and its communist education.

As you can see, IN THE SECTOR OF SOCIAL POLICY WE HAVE ASSIGNED OURSELVES SPECIFIC, VITALLY IMPORTANT TASKS. THE CHIEF CONDITION FOR THEIR IMPLEMENTATION, AS I HAVE ALREADY STRESSED, IS THE WORK ACCOMMPLISHED BY EVERYONE OF US -- IN THE PLANTS, IN AGRICULTURE, IN SCIENCE, IN ADMINISTRATION AND IN PUBLIC SERVICES, IN THE CULTURAL SECTOR, AND IN EDUCATION.

Comrades, the tasks we have mapped out are complicated and involve great responsibilities. However, we HAVE THE CORRECT STRATEGY for their solution. This strategy is specified as regards scientific development and technological innovations, the modernization and reorganization of the existing plants. The elaboration of new approaches and new projects for the implementation of the strategy in the fields of raw material energy bases, in electronics and microelectronics, in biotechnologies and chemical industry, in transportation, and so forth is one of our tasks, aimed at a real contribution to the acceleration of our development.

We also determine the criteria and conditions that must ensure a qualitative new economic growth, as well as the achievement of world standards and a highly competitive character for our production on the international markets. We are working to provide real, economic conditions for the producers so they may work under conditions of socialist self-management and socialist competition on the markets. The workers collective is becoming established as a manager of socialist property.

Due to this, its rights are being extended, and grass-roots democracy is being developed.

In following our strategic line we by no means underestimate tasks that are of great urgency, that do not brook any delay. I intend to have fuller and more efficient use of existing production plants; the efficient utilization of working time and the limitation of fluctuation in manpower; the solution of the problem of spare parts and coordinated deliveries; and the preference of the material-technical supplies on an economic basis, on the basis of saving materials, energy, and labor resources. We need efficient measures in order to improve quality and expand the variety of mass consumer goods. In this connection we are confronted with a series of DIFFICULTIES AND SHORTCOMINGS THAT ARE OF A SUBJECTIVE CHARACTER IN PARTICULAR. Such shortcomings reflect upon the reorganization of the economic organizations, upon planning activities, upon the organization of production and management, and last, but not least, upon the methods and style of work.

We now must mobilize all workers collectives in implementing the plan, as is envisaged by the state orders for production. The new conditions under which we are working require us to enhance the role of the counterplan with a view to enabling the workers collectives to reveal all their real possibilities land inner resources for the fulfillment and overfulfillment of the plan. At the same time we are assessing THE OBJECTIVE NEGATIVE FACTORS. I am talking about the drought, about efforts to obstruct the normal development of international trade and international tourism, about efforts to intensify trade, and about restrictions in the technological field. As is known we are conducting a frank dialogue on all these questions within the party, state, economic, and social organizations in our country. In our work and struggle against shortcomings and distortions, we are correctly relying upon the interest and the active contribution of all social strata. This is because we need not only the implementation of readymade decisions adopted by the leading organs, but also the independent, creative efforts of every single workers collective, of every single working individual. As we have stated on other occasions, it is particularly important now to promote talented people, bold people, those who listen to the people's voice, and those who live with the needs of the workers collectives.

The time of routine appeals, of outdated approaches and methods has passed. The people are rallied and inspired by clear and feasible goals. They are striving for resolute and consistent actions. We cannot advance with lenience, with forgiveness for all shortcomings and mistakes. (applause) We cannot achieve progress if we continue to tolerate misunderstood parochialism and departmental interests.

IN OUR SOCIETY, EVERYTHING IS ACCOMPLISHED BY THE PEOPLE, THROUGH THE PEOPLE, AND FOR THE PEOPLE IN OUR SOCIETY. This is why it is more than ever necessary to CONDUCT A PERMANENT AND HONEST DIALOGUE ON ALL QUESTIONS. We should not be afraid that this dialogue may sometimes become sharp, unpleasant, even controversial. Is not life itself made up of various contradictions and conflicts? The problem is not to escape controversies, but to stand on the side of and protect the progressive elements. That is why we are striving to free ourselves of all manifestations of outward shows, of boastfulness and self-praise in our accountability reports. That is why we encourage and will continue to encourage criticism and self-criticism as a motive force for socialist social development.

OUR SUCCESSES WILL BE THE GREATER, THE MORE CONSISTENTLY WE IMPLEMENT THE SLOGAN OF THE 13TH BCP CONGRESS IN PRACTICAL LIFE: ORGANIZATION AND ORDER, DISCIPLINE AND RESPONSIBILITY. (Prolonged applause) I REPEAT ONCE AGAIN: THE MAIN THING IS TO ACHIEVE A DRASTIC CHANGE IN OUR WORK, TO ENSURE -- THROUGH CONSTRUCTIVE, INTENSE, AND DISCIPLINED LABOR -- A QUALITATIVELY NEW ECONOMIC GROWTH ON THE BASIS OF THE SCIENTIFIC-TECHNICAL REVOLUTION. (prolonged applause)

Comrades, the forthcoming elections are taking place in an exceptionally complex international situation. A completely real threat of annihilation hangs over world civilization. So many nuclear, chemical, and other kinds of weapons have accumulated that in a possible war they could destroy not only separate countries, but all of mankind. Despite this, the arms race is continuing.

The aggressive imperialist circles are designing plans for a sudden first strike from earth, sea, and space, aimed at destroying our socialist system. These designs are of course illusionary because in a nuclear war there can be no victors and defeated.

Therefore, the basic question is how to prevent a nuclear catastrophe. We must take into consideration the new realities while continuing our struggle for peace, disarmament, and detente. WE MUST ERECT A WATERSHED BETWEEN THE MILLIONS WHO ARE AWARE OF THE NEED TO PREVENT A NUCLEAR CATASTROPHE, AND THE HANDFUL OF WARMONGERS AND THEIR SUPPORTERS, BLINDED BY THEIR CRUDE CLASS INTERESTS. This is so because today there are huge forces and very large circles that are interested in saving peace.

Where is Bulgaria's place in this tense and explosive century? What is the direction of our efforts? WE ARE FOR UNDERSTANDING AND COOPERATION AMONG NATIONS, AND FOR PEACEFUL COEXISTENCE BETWEEN STATES WITH DIFFERENT SOCIAL SYSTEMS. We are for dialogue and for solving problems, including the problem of security, by peaceful means alone.

The People's Republic of Bulgaria, as a member of the Warsaw Pact, will further struggle to expand contacts among states, and for friendship and understanding among nations. We shall continue to struggle to save human civilization and safeguard peace.

WE WARMLY GREET THE 27TH CPSU CONGRESS PEACE PROGRAM AND COMRADE MIKHAIL GORBACHEV'S COMPREHENSIVE PROPOSALS TO GRADUALLY REDUCE AND LIQUIDATE NUCLEAR AND CHEMICAL WEAPONS BY THE END OF THE CENTURY, LIMIT ARMS AND FORCES IN EUROPE, CONSTSRUCT A RELIABLE SYSTEM OF VERIFICATION, AND SO FORTH. The Soviet proposals outline a sensible alternative, which guarantees the peaceful future of mankind. (stormy, prolonged applause)

Deeply adhering to the principles of internationalism, the BCP attaches a great importance to developing mutual relations with all socialist countries and to its relations with the international communist and workers movement.

The principles upon which we construct our relations with the developing countries are well known, namely, solidarity, cooperation, and mutual assistance. We are striving to develop our relations with the capitalist countries on a mutually beneficial basis.

FOR UNDERSTANDABLE REASONS, THE PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF BULGARIA PAYS SPECIAL ATTENTION TO ITS BALKAN POLICY. Our policy is consistent and constructive and aims at expanding good-neighborliness and cooperation with the Balkan countries and peoples and toward strengthening peace and security in the region in which we live.

The situation in the Balkans continues to be relatively stable. Recently, however, there have been frequent attempts by imperialism to undermine confidence and create tension between individual Balkan states. We do not close our eyes to these attempts. We hope relations between the Balkan countries will withstand the present tests. We not only declare our conviction in this respect, but shall continue to energetically work to:

--turn the Balkans into a nuclear-free zone;

-- sign bilateral agreements with all Balkan states, which are to include a code on good-neighborliness;

-- develop a treaty between the Balkan states on ecological defense, and adopting a collective appeal to all European countries and peoples on this matter;

-- further develop multilateral cooperation in all areas of mutual interest.

Such is our country's creative approach to the efforts to strengthen peace and security in Europe and the world. (Stormy, prolonged applause)

Comrades, we are living in a stormy and fateful time. Every nation that wants to have a worthy place under the sun at the beginning of the 21st century already clearly realizes that the cardinal questions of its future will be solved in the next 15 years.

This is a short period of time that history has given us, and it does not tolerate any delay or postponement from today to tomorrow.

THE PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF BULGARIA HAS CLEAR HISTORICAL ADVANTAGES IN ITS RACE WITH TIME. There is our socialist system and its great possibilities to rally and direct the forces of society and its labor, scientific, and economic potential.

There is our heroic and industrious Bulgarian people.

There is the 900,000 strong party of the Bulgarian Communists, the inspiration and organizing power of our progress.

There is our loyal ally -- the Bulgarian Agrarian National Union, the Trade Unions, the Dimitrov Komosol, and the other mass, public, and creative organizations.

There is the Fatherland Front, for whose platform we shall vote on 8 June. (Stormy, prolonged applause)

The power of world socialism and the might of the Soviet Union are on your side. All those who are struggling for peace and social progress are on our side.

Dear compatriots: I appeal to all of you to give as one your votes to the candidates of the Fatherland Front, in the name of the happiness and prosperity of our people. (Stormy, prolonged applause)

Long live our dear motherland and may it flourish -- the People's Republic of Bulgaria!

(All rise and chant spontaneous slogans and applaud the BCP -- the inspiration and organizing power of our progress; revolutionary songs resound)

KARPATI DISCUSSES ENVISAGED CONSCRIPTION CHANGES

[Text] Two Parliamentary committees are holding sessions today.

It was said at the Defense Committee sessions that 10-12 percent of those liable for military service are unfit for service. Next year, it is expected that the system of calling up young people accepted to university or college will change. We shall hear the details from our correspondent, Gabor Dombovari:

The National Assembly adopted the law on national defense 10 years ago. The minister reported this morning on the implementation of the law, and said that the law was created a decade ago in order to adjust to the changes that had taken place in society, and also so that Hungarian national defense could contribute to the preservation of peace. Unfortunately, over the past 10 years tension has intensified in international politics and the process of detente has slowed down. Accordingly, Hungarian Defense Minister Ferenc Karpati spoke about the peace initiatives of the socialist countries and the Soviet Union and about the proposals made in the interest of halting the arms race. There is a need for the further development of national defense; the law has served and serves this well.. Neither is there a need in the future for changing or amending it. the minister said.

In connection with training he added that the introduction of classes in national defense schools lays good foundations for the mental preparation and defense training of young people.

Ferenc Karpati then mentioned that general compulsory military service meets with the understanding of citizens. The young people entering the Army meet the requirements; they stand their ground well when fulfilling serious tasks. Naturally, problems also arise, although the number of young people who enter the Army with criminal records is negligible. Recruits undergo a special process during their service; their thinking in most cases is shaped successfully, the minister said, since they are discharged as more adult people.

Here are another three thoughts from the minister's report: From next year, it is expected that the system of conscripting young people who enter with preliminary acceptance to universities and colleges will change. In certain professions, the students will be able to choose where and what unit they will enter after starting or ending university studies.

Ferenc Karpati spoke also about the physical condition of young people. Roughly 10-12 percent of those liable to military service are physically unfit for service, and that is a lot. It is the task not just of national defense, but of all of society to change this. Sports must play a much greater role among youth.

Finally, the minister spoke with appreciation about the work of the so-called construction corps, since the soldiers provice very great help at various large projects in road construction and in agriculture.

This is described well by a statistic: They do 5 billion forints worth of work annually. Obviously, it is thanks to this that the provisions, feeding and barracks accomodation of soldiers have improved considerably in recent years.

The debate on the minister's reports continues.

More on Planned Changes

[Text] From next year it will probably be possible to serve without a break the year and a half of military service after university. After the session of the National Defense Committee of the National Assembly the Minister of Defense gave a statement to our correspondent, Gabor Dombovari.

[Dombovari] The National Defense Act was adopted by the National Assembly 10 years ago. Defense minister Ferenc Karpati, speaking in an interview after the morning committee session, said the following when he analyzed the experiences of the past years:

[Begin recording] [Karpati] We have made considerable progress in the strengthening and development of the defense of the Hungarian people's republic. And I think that the fact that the act is thorough, that it needs no change, points to a substantive result. [end recording]

[Dombovari] Speaking about educational issues, the minister said that the introduction of national defense classes in schools lays a good foundation for the mental preparations and defense education of young people. He then mentioned that general compulsory military service meets with the understanding of citizens. Young people entering the service fulfill the requirements and stand their ground well in carrying out serious tasks. After this the minister made an announcement affecting a good many young people. From next year it is expected that the system of calling up young people who enter with preliminary acceptance to universities and colleges will change because they will be given a choice as to when they may serve their military service.

[Begin recording] [Karpati] The 18 months of military service is applicable to everyone. Regarding those young people who after their secondary school will continue their studies at universities or polytechnics we must find certain other methods to coordinate the possibility of their studying successfully with their being able, at the same time, to satisfy this military service duty. Until now the situation was that a proportion of these young people, a decisive majority of the would-be university students, carried out a 1-year military service before the start of university; then after completing university they were drafted in for a 2-month military serivce. Those, who -- and this applies to the great mass of them -- went to polytechnics, did their 18 months of military service after the completion of the polytechnic course. Those who hitherto served in the Army as provisional higher education students, should be able -- we are endeavoring to create such a situation -- to choose themselves, whether this same system should continue or, there will be those who will chooose to first continue study, complete universities and then after completion enter the army for the 18 months of service. [End recording]

This must be changed but, as the minister said, this was the task not only of national defense but that of the entire society. Sports must play a far greater role in the circle of the young. Has there been progress in recent years? Are the young more healthy?

[Begin recording] [Karpati] Regretfully we are not observing any improvement here. We hope that in the entire life style of young people, the young generation -- not only regarding sports activities although sports activities have a very great role -- a positive change will take place with a positive effect on their health and physical condition. We must subject every young man entering the service to a serious medical examination, and regretfully our experiences in this regard are not good. [End recording]

Finally the minister spoke in praise of the work of the so-called construction corps, because the soldiers provide very great help at the various large projects, road buiding and in agriculture. A single statistic characterized this: every year they carry out work worth 5 billion forints.

ACADEMICIANS DISCUSS TECHNICAL DEVELOPMENT PLANS

[Text] What is primarily needed to accelerate technical progress is the further development of the reform of economic management. This was said by Academician Lenard Pal, secretary of the MSZMP Central Committee, at a consultation which began in Szekesfehervar and will last 2 days. The title of this theoretical consultation is: Technical Development and Social Progress. He pointed out that taking into account the material situation in the country a sufficient sum of money from the state budget is spent on the various research programs. Presently it is not the lack of money which is the prime hindrance to technical development but the fact that enterprises are not materially interested in applying new technologies. Therefore the economic environment must change first of all, said the secretary.

Academician Pal Tetenyi, chairman of the National Technical Development Committee, said that in the current 5-year plan period those industrial branches were being developed where investment is repaid relatively rapidly. Accordingly, the processing industry and the agricultural sector have been singled out. The proposition of the machine industry, chemical industry, and telecommunication investments will increase while at the same time the proportions of investments in metallurgy will decrease by half. The proportions of investments in mining, the electric power industry, and the constructon industry remain the same.

Academician Gyoergy Vajda, director of the Electric Power Industry Research Institute, has called attention to the fact that the system of material incentives must be changed so that in the long term it will be profitable for enterprises to develop technically; this will require comprehensive price, wage, and tax reform.

Academician Laszlo Kapolyi, minister of industry, familiarized his audience with his department's plans. According to the plans Hungary will increase the shared proportion of products which may be produced and consumed in an energy-saving way over the next 5 years. We shall continue to build the Paks atomic power station; we shall begin reconstructing the heating power stations and modernization of the structure of steel production.

VISIT TO WEST BY BUJAK CASE WITNESS DELAYED

AU111644 Paris AFP in English 1638 GMT 11 Jun 86

[Text] Warsaw, June 11 (AFP) -- Bronislaw Geremek, internationally-known historian and a witness in the Bujak case, has been prevented by secret police from leaving Poland, he told AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE here Wednesday.

Mr. Geremek was due in France last week but his departure was delayed by police, who questioned him about Zbigniew Bujak, the Solidarity underground chief arrested May 31 after four-and-a-half years underground.

Mr. Geremek, interrogated seven times by Polish secret police, told AFP he expected to be called in again for more questioning Friday.

His situation was raised Wednesday by two senior French Foreign Ministry diplomats during a meeting with Polish Deputy Foreign Minister Tadeusz Olechowski. The diplomats are in a mission to improve bilateral relations.

Mr. Geremek, an aide to Solidarity leader Lech Walesa and friend of French Foreign Minister Jean-Bernard Raimond, was due to visit Holland and France. He was to receive an honorary doctorate from Utrecht University and meet with Dutch Foreign Minister Hans van den Broek.

DEBT REPAYMENT ACCORD REACHED WITH WESTERN BANKS

LD121237 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 1200 GMT 12 Jun 86

[Text] Talks in Vienna between the Polish Commerce Bank and a group of Western banks have ended with the signing of a memorandum on Polish debt due for repayment in 1986-87. Payments had been deferred for 4 years. At the same time, agreement was reached on a reduction in the cost of credit. A basic agreement will be signed in August at a meeting to be held in Munich.

Further Details

[Text] Vienna, June 12 (AFP) -- Western banking representatives and officials from Poland's Handlowy Bank for foreign trade have signed an accord here to reschedule nearly two billion dollars in Poland's commercial debt falling due this year and next, a communique from Creditanstalt-Bankverein of Austria said here Thursday.

Banking sources said the accord covers 800 million dollars in commercial debt coming due in 1986 and 1.2 billion dollars in 1987. Details and payment deadlines will be settled in informal negotiations, they added.

Poland's overall commercial debt amounts to more than seven billion dollars, of which 1.2 billion will be due in 1988. The country's total foreign debt, made up of commercial and government to government loans, has been estimated at around 30 billion dollars.

Delegates from several hundred creditor banks in 18 countries took part in rescheduling negotiations here this week.

BRITISH OFFICIAL DISCUSSES PROPOSED LOAN

[By PAP correspondent Tadeusz Jacewicz]

[Text] London, June 10: The offer of new official loans for Poland reflects progress in repaying the dues to British and other foreign creditors, a foreign office spokesman has told PAP.

The Foreign Office and the Department of Trade and Industry have not specified the size of the proposed credit but informed sources quote 20 million pounds. The loan is to be guaranteed by the Exports Credit Guarantee Department which gives the credit an official character.

The fact of offering the loan to Poland reflects an atmosphere of improvement following a period of credit blockade imposed on Poland in February of 1982. Financial circles in London stress that the atmosphere surrounding the financial cooperation with Poland has improved which was prompted by Poland's admission to the International Monetary Fund, also noting Warsaw's constructive approach to the negotiations on the Polish debt, including the government-guaranteed credits and those drawn from commercial banks.

NIECKARZ SIGNS DOCUMENTS TO REJOIN IMF

LD121840 Warsaw Television Service in Polish 1730 GMT 12 Jun 86

[Text] Poland has regained its membership of the IMF. Several hours ago, in Washington, Finance Minister Stanislaw Nieckarz, signed documents concerning Poland's accession to the fund and an agreement with the International Bank of Reconstruction and Development, with the government's authorization. Poland is a cofounder of both institutions. The present acceptance of its resolution concerning participation in both prestigious bodies belonging to the UN system is an expression of the realistic approach of the majority of member states to cooperation with us. Its practical effect may be to remove the remains of the isolation whose imposition on Poland was attempted in recent years.

EEC BAN SAID PART OF WESTERN 'PROPAGANDA CAMPAIGN'

LD112355 Warsaw PAP in English 1024 GMT 11 Jun 86

[Text] Warsaw, June 11: Polish Foreign Trade Vice-Minister Andrzej Dorosz told United Peasants' Party daily DZIENNIK LUDOWY the EC ban on food imports from Poland, which expired May 31, had been unjustified by actual radiation levels here.

He said the ban should be viewed against a Western media propaganda campaign which had prompted negative attitudes towards Polish food products, resulting in the ban that has cost Poland 45-50 million dollars in unearned profit.

"To meet the higher EC standards, Poland has introduced food tests for cesium 134 and 137, tailoring their procedure as well as contents of safety certificates on food along suggestions from EC experts," the minister told the daily.

"Analyses made so far have confirmed that average amount of those elements in Polish food and agricultural products is far lower than the EC standards," he said.

"But Poland is not very like to get back to the expected level of food exports, as it is hard to estimate how long it will take to overcome the psychological hang-up caused with Western consumers," the foreign trade vice-minister said.

WASHINGTON 'SILENT' OVER KUKLINSKI AFFAIR

[Report by correspondent Grzegorz Wozniak from New York]

[Text] Not having any convincing arguments, official Washington has fallen silent in the so-called Kuklinski case. However the weekly press has returned to the case. TIME underlines that the State Department has been unable to deny that Kuklinski was a U.S. agent. He was evacuated from Poland by the CIA before the introduction of martial law and he is staying in the United States under an assumed name. TIME also quotes another extract of a statement by State Department spokesman in which he admits that the United States did indeed have information about the activities of the constitutional authorities of Poland, and TIME repeats the spokesman's statement that this information was incomplete.

When confronted with facts -- facts which the State Department also cannot deny -- this last thesis is clearly false, while the activities of the United States in the latter months of 1981 are politically and morally repulsive.

COMMENTARIES VIEW RESULTS OF WARSAW PACT MEETING

West Europe Said 'Receptive'

LD112300 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 2110 GMT 11 Jun 86

[Excerpts] The basic documents of the Warsaw Pact Political Consultative Committee, which ended in Budapest today, will be published in tomorrow's papers.

For our part, we believe that it is most likely the proposal of the Warsaw Pact states will fall on receptive ground in Western Europe. It is now not only societies, but governments too, who are asking fundamental questions about the fate prepared for them by the policy of the Washington hawks.

One may suppose that the societies of Western Europe will demand from their governments, and those governments will demand from their U.S. allies and bosses a businesslike approach to the questions arising from Budapest.

Documents on 'Europe of Peace'

LD120852 Warsaw PAP in English 2100 GMT 11 Jun 86

[By Pap journalist Andrzej Rayzacher]

[Text] Warsaw, June 11: The leaders of the seven Warsaw Treaty member states proposed methods of ensuring infallible security, overcoming division of the continent and friendly cooperation and good neighbourhood to all European nations in Budapest. In two documents published after the two-day debates, they concentrated chiefly on opposing a policy of force to the great idea of universal system of international security by way of political dialogue and negotiations.

Specifying and explaining what Mikhail Gorbachev said on this subject in Berlin April 18, the Budapest message offers a considerable reduction in important components of land troops and the striking tactical airforce and nuclear operational and tactical weapons with the range of up to 1,000 kilometres. The mesage proposes to implement reduction of the conventional armed potential gradually, constantly preserving balance on a lowered level of armed forces and armaments. As a preliminary step, the message suggests to reduce Warsaw Treaty and NATO troops by 100-150,000 people on each side in the period of 1-2 years.

The Budapest document proposes to adopt a number of security and confidence building measures. They include reduction of holding big military exercises, the creation of zones free of nuclear and chemical weapons, gradual limitation of the activity of both alliances, at the same time establishing cooperation between them on the reduction of armaments as well as on reaching disarmament, and the introduction of observation of the activity of troops remaining after the reduction.

The consequences of this initiative are manifold. For the first time the talks would cover conventional armed potentials, although lying in the outskirts of the main zone of confrontation in the center of Europe, but playing an enormously important role in the equilibrium of East-West forces.

After all, growing mobility of these potentials decreases to an increasingly greater extent their peripheral character from the point of view of a threat of a sudden attack. Also for the first time, an influential group of neutral and non-aligned states would sit at the table of disarmament negotiations. The group could play the role of a builder of bridges between members of military alliances in Europe opposing one another.

Thus, in this sense, the Budapest offer of socialist states opens up an entirely new chapter in efforts aimed to create Europe of peace.

ENVIRONMENT MINISTER VISITS SWEDEN, HOLDS TALKS

[Text] Stockholm, June 11: Polish Minister of National Environment Protection and Natural Resources Stefan Jarzebski has visited Sweden at the invitation from Swedish Minister of Environment Birgitta Dahl.

During the visit, the Swedish side expressed interest in the initiative of Wojciech Jaruzelski calling for the elimination of obstacles in exchange of equipment and technology in the field of environment protection.

The interest of the Swedish side and Polish proposals permit to forecast that the proposed closer cooperation in the field will actually develop and bring concrete results.

All planned undertakings will be included in a currently prepared two year, Polish-Swedish cooperation development programme in environment protection. The talks will continue during minister Dahl's visit to Poland.

PZPR CENTRAL COMMITTEE COMMISSIONS MEET 5 JUNE

AU100731 [Editorial Report] Warsaw TRYBUNA LUDU in Polish on 6 June publishes on pages 1 and 2 a 300-word report on a meeting of the PZPR Central Control Commission Presidium held on 5 June. The Presidium assessed the work of voivodship control commissions on the basis of a report prepared by Central Control Commission working parties and concluded that "the majority of voivodship control commissions are accurately identifying and correctly arriving at general conclusions concerning the causes of irregularities and their implications."

The same issue of TRYBUNA LUDU publishes on pages 1 and 2 a 600-word report on a meeting of the PZPR Central Committee Agricultural Commission held on 5 June. The meeting, which was chaired by PZPR Central Committee Secretary Zbigniew Michalek, focused on party work and the level of party membership on state and cooperative farms. It was noted that skilled workers comprise the majority of party members on state farms (72 percent), that party activity on state farms had increased, and that state farm party organizations had responded well to the opportunities created by the economic reform. Similar trends were noted in the cooperative farm sector, where party organizations exist on 70 percent of farms and party membership totals 20,000.

The TRYBUNA LUDU of 6 June also publishes on pages 1 and 2 a 500-word report on a meeting of the PZPR Central Committee Education and Science Commission held on 4 and 5 June. The commission met to discuss the need to improve training programs for the teaching profession, the continuing shortage of suitably qualified teachers of certain subjects at the elementary school level, and the unpopularity of teaching posts in the countryside.

SEJM RESPONDS TO PETITION ON NUCLEAR ENERGY

[Text] Warsaw, June 12 -- In connection with a petition sent to the Sejm (Polish parliament) from Bialystok (north-east Poland) and concerning the peaceful use of nuclear energy we are publishng the abridged version of the Sejm's reply signed by chairman of the Science and Technological Progress Committee, Prof Zbigniew Puzewicz:

In mid-May the Polish Sejm received a petition signed by 2974 people, inhabitants of Bialystok, and concerning peaceful use of nuclear energy. The authors of the petition, feeling anxious about the accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant, are demanding the stopping of construction of the nuclear power plant in Zarnowiec until several conditions are met, among which the most important is the placing of all industrial projects using nuclear energy under the supervision of the Internatinal Atomic Energy Agency and application of the tested and most sophisticated safety systems at the time.

We are convinced that the citizens who have put their signatures under the petition are motivated by a true care for the future of the country and its inhabitants. At the same time, and this should be kept in mind, the disaster which afflicted the nations of the Soviet Union has been used by some persons and centres in the capitalist world for propaganda action with clearly anti-Soviet edge.

The reaction of the Polish authorities to the Chernobyl breakdown is commonly known. The Polish Government has shown maximum concern for the health of its citizens. It is also understandable that, aside from the necessary prophylactics, the state authorities do not cease to see all the issues tied with using atomic energy for peaceful purposes. They are also subjects of interest for the Polish Sejm.

The Committee of Science and Technological Progress of the Polish Sejm at a meeting on May 28, 1986, heard information supplied by the chairman of the State Atomistics Agency on the currente state of work concerning the construction of a nuclear power plant in Zarnowiec, the principles governing the location andconstruction of nuclear plants in general and binding rules in the sphere of radiological safety.

The introduction of nuclear energy to the national economy at the turn of the eighties is a necessity stemming from Poland's fuel-power balance.

Work concerning the directions of developing the fuel-power economy till the year 2000 and till 2020 as guidelines shows that applying nuclear energy is indispensable in the face of the limited possibilities to further increase the extraction of fuels from domestic resources, of a lack of possibilties to increase liquid fuel imports and in the midst of difficulties in railway transport as well as against the background of threats to the natural environment posed by the development of conventional power sources.

Because of the existing deficits of crude oil and natural gas, satisfy ing the growing needs of the power industry for fuels can be achieved exclusively through hard coal, lignite and nuclear power. The increase in supplies of hard coal for the power industry does, however, have its limits.

As far as lignite is concerned, apart from the existing mines and the currently constructed Belchatow mine, there is a lack of easily accessible new beds to be extracted.

The hydrological potential of Polish rivers (about 12 billion kw annually) is also small.

And thus, nuclear fuels are the only long-term source of energy thanksto which the power industry can develop.

Practical possibilities of using nuclear energy have born the need and become a basis for the Sejm's adopting a complex system regulating relations occurring in the area of peaceful use of nuclear energy for the socio-economic needs of Poland.

Because of the possibility of occurrence of the danger of contamination, special attention is devoted in the Polish (legal - PAP) system to procedures connected with the location, designing, constructio, putting into operation and exploitation of a nuclear installation.

Article 15 on the "Nuclear Law" states that this "requires application of technological and organizational solutions which, in the light of achievements of science and technology, are indispensable in order to prevent, at every stage of exploitation and in emergency situations, the endangering of persons operating such an installation, other persons or environment." Article 18 also rules that "a protective zone is created around a nuclear installation, which constitutes an area whose use is limited in order to diminish the radiological danger."

With the adoption of the SEJM guidelines as directions of action, every step is taken simultaneously to ensure that development of nuclear power industry in Poland takes place in a safe manner. First of all, the most commonly used throughout the world pressurized water reactor has been chosen for nuclear power stations constructed in Poland. Simultaneously, both for the first nuclear power plant constructed on the Zarnowiec Lake with 465 mw blocks and for the successive plants with 100 mw blocks technical solutions featuring containment structures have been selected. Thus, three barriers stand in the way of spreading of fission products: Fuel elements cans, leakproof cooling system and the containment structure. Apart from all that emergency cooling systems have been designed for the reactor which ensures that reactor core is cooled even if the proper cooling system fails.

Analysis of the IAEA Statute proves that the organization does not and cannot supervise or control the construction and exploitation of nuclear power stations and other projects linked to the implementation of programmes of development of nuclear power industry in indvidual countries.

However, in line with the decision taken by IAEA's Board of Governors on May 21st, IAEA will reveiw research and power-producing reactors in countries, members of the agency, taking into account the aftermath of breakdown at the Chernobyl nuclear power station.

In line with the "Nuclear Law" of April 10, 1986, nuclear safety and radiological protection in Poland are supervised by the State Atomistics Agency (PAA) headed by the president performing the function of a central organ of state administration. PAA's president is an institution independent in his actions from teams constructing and operating nuclear power plants and from their governing bodies.

Issuing permits for the construction, starting, usage and closing down of each nuclear power unit in Poland belongs to the basic duties and powers of the PAA's president.

The construction of the nuclear power plant in Zarnowiec is also covered by nuclear energy supervision. Following a period of research and analyses of nuclear safety and radiological protection which lasted for over a year, a permit was issued by the PAA's president to begin construction on the plant. The permit contains, however, over 30 conditions which must be met by the constructor so that the construction of the nuclear plant in Zarnowiec could be continued. The materials, structures and equipment and work technology which influences nuclear safety and radiological protection are covered by the nuclear inspection.

One of the conditions of issuing a permit for the start and exploitation of the Zarnowiec nuclear plant will be a plan of emergency procedures forwarded by the plant's general manager and consulted with appropriate authorities as well as documented evidence of organizational and technical means enabling the immediate implementaton of such a plan.

The nuclear inspection body in Poland makes use of recommendations compiled by the International Atomic Energy Agency concerning the safe construction and exploitation of nuclear power plants.

As the presented information shows the Sejm, similarly to the government and state bodies responsible under law for the use of nuclear energy for the needs of the national economy, that is for Poland's residents as well, puts safety issues in the forefront.

MESSNER ADDRESSES TECHNICAL EXPERTS, ECONOMISTS

[Report on speech by Premier Zbigniew Messner at a meeting of the main councils of the Chief Technical Organization and the Polish Economic Society held in Warsaw 28 May]

[Text] PAP -- Zbigniew Messner stressed that it is the government's duty to listen to and make use of opinions. However, it must be remembered that there is a fundamental difference between viewing matters from one angle and seeing them from the place where decisions are made. All factors and circumstances, for example social ones, must be taken into account when making decisions, but these, as a rule, are omitted in theoretical deliberations. Z. Messner pointed out that one of the 10th congress' tasks is strengthening the positive phenomena that have emerged in recent years and eradicating negative phenomena. The premier stressed that change and improvement in the economic system in the form of economic reform is an irreversible fact. If today there is emotionally charged talk of a slackening of change and the application of temporary solutions -- and this is cited as evidence of a halting of the reform -- then this is because there is an important psychological factor at play. These fears stem from experiences in earlier decades, when reform undertakings were announced and then abandoned. There is no likelihood of this happening today because we realize that the current state of the economy has resulted from the abandonment of reform in the past.

Z. Messner agreed with those speakers who viewed as matters of the greatest importance the modernization of technology, technological progress, changes in the structure of production, and the consistent creation of conditions for the operation of economic compulsion in the economy. He said that economic compulsion should become a fundamental principle in management. As for a strategy of actions designed to effect changes in the structure of production, two courses of action are envisaged. The first is one consisting of several dozen undertakings intended to produce results over 2 to 3 years and the second is th creation of a base for more far-reaching structural changes over the next 10 to 15 years.

MANAGERS, OTHERS ATTEND CONFERENCE EXPORTING

Wozniak Speaks

AU252014 Warsaw TRYBUNA LUDU in Polish 15 May 86 p 2

[Speech by Marian Wozniak, PZPR Politburo member and Central Committee secretary, at a meeting of managers and party secretaries of exporting enterprises held at the PZPR Central Committee building in Warsaw on 14 May]

[Text] This conference has been devoted to boosting exports, but exporting is not something that exists in isolation; it is an integral part of the national economy and is harnessed to the standard of management.

On the one hand, exporting is the product of economic potential and technical standards, and, on the other hand, exporting itself creates demands for technical and technological development and makes it necessary to improve the manner and quality of manufacturing goods.

Thus, exporting is a driving force in the economy; it influences the growth in demands and compels the country to compete in the world economy. It must be recognized that efforts to raise profitable exports are efforts to ensure that Poland occupies an appropriate place in Europe and the world. Unfortunately, our position in world markets at the present time cannot give us cause for satisfaction.

Most of our exports depend on efficient trading and on the ability to be flexible and responsive to the needs of trading partners. There is, therefore, a need for closer cooperation between those engaged in trade and those engaged in manufacturing.

Financial and pricing mechanisms play an important role but the matter does not end there. We need drive and initiative on the part of traders and managers, eagerness, a desire to work, and motivation. During the last 4 days, workers' self-management has become more firmly established and has created opportunities for workforce participation in the running of enterprises. But this fact has not raised productivity or increased initiative. Thus, in addition to self-management, we need efficient managers.

We need a committed cadre, efficient workers and engineers, people for whom exporting will be a matter of honor. The party has a special role to play in fostering such activities in all its areas of activity.

Gwiazda Address

AU252020 Warsaw TRYBUNA LUDU in Polish 15 May 86 p 2

["Abridged version" of speech by Wladyslaw Gwiazda, deputy chairman of the Council of Ministers, at meeting of managers and party secretaries of exporting enterprises held at the PZPR Central Committee building in Warsaw on 14 May.]

[Excerpt] There is general agreement on the need to shift the economy in an export orientated direction. However, as soon as the general principle is translated into the language of concrete goals and tasks, dilemmas which have to be solved arise.

These dilemmas pertain to the principles of priority investment in areas which create the greatest possibility of increasing export potential, priority in supplies (including imported supplies) for those areas which possess the greatest export growth rate potential; and the fixing of pay preferences for export production in relation to other forms of production. In addition to this, it is essential to adopt the principle of limiting the number of areas enjoying priority status in development, supplies, pay, and finance.

The proposed strategy might infringe upon a whole series of vested interests whose spokesmen might attempt to prevent its realization. This will effect those branches and sectors of the economy which will not obtain or will be deprived of priority status in investment, supplies, and finance. Thus, it is essential to coordinate the realization of the strategy in a more efficient manner.

Institutional changes in the area of foreign trade ensured that enterprises enjoyed a higher profit-earning capacity on account of their export activities than in the domestic market.

According to studies conducted by the Ministry of Finance, the average net rate of return on sales made in the country was 10.9 percent, whereas the rate of return from export sales was more than twice as high and amounted to an average of 24.4 percent.

Despite efforts to extend enterprise interest in production for export, the results that have been obtained are disappointing. The situation which has existed for years continues to persist: Only about 29 percent of manufacturing enterprises engage directly in exporting.

As studies show, about 33 enterprises account for more than 70 percent of exports of finished goods. This state of affairs must change. the necessity of exporting for the national economy must quickly become a necessity for enterprises.

The Central Committee theses for the 10th party congress state that one of the mainsprings for the realization of strategic goals during the upcoming years is "the expansion of the economy's export potential and the deepening of economic cooperation with the Soviet Union in particular."

Over the 15 years which separate us from the end of the century, a two-fold increase in the role of exports in industrial production should occur. This means that by the year 2000, one fourth of industrial output ought to be destined for foreign markets.

Today's conference organized on the initiative of the Central Committee team for pro-export policy affairs should attempt to answer fundamental questions formulated in the 10th Congress theses:

Are opportunities for effecting a growth in exports being utilized to the maximum extent possible, as well as opportunities for increasing export effectiveness?

What can still be done to rationalize imports?

Why do so many enterprises that can produce for export not do so?

We should look for concrete answers which will indicate appropriate technological, economic, financial, legal, and organizational paths.

LEADERS DISCUSS PARTY ISSUES PRIOR TO CONGRESS

[Henryk Heller report: "The Development of the Socialist Political System -- Poznan Conference Ends"]

[Text] On 6 May in Poznan, a 2-day ideological-theoretical conference devoted to subject-matter contained in chapter 5 of the Draft PZPR Program entitled "The Development of the Socialist Political System" ended with the presentation of conclusions and opinions put forth earlier by five problems teams.

In the problems team that discussed "The PZPR's Role in the Socialist Political System," representatives of worker milieus stressed the need to use past knowledge and experience in order to recognize the barriers and obstacles facing the country's harmonious development.

A series of theoretical tasks were discussed which require creative Marxist-Leninist thinking in the light of the modern practice of socialist construction in Poland. It was regarded as essential to clarify the concept of proletarian dictatorship and its relationship toward the exercising of authority by the coalition method. The need to consolidate the system of people's councils was pointed out and the need to increase the role which party members should play in them.

A subject of particular interest in the team that discussed problems of consolidating the socialist rule of law was the connection between socialism, democracy, and the rule of law on the one hand, and the making of laws in a way that conforms to the desire and interests of the working people on the other. The conclusions that were voiced included the need for citizens to discharge their duties toward the state conscientiously, the need to preserve social discipline, and the need to shape society's legal culture. There were speeches on the need to stabilize the law, and it was said that amendments and new regulations are being issued too frequently before any assessment has been made of whether the existing law is being fully respected and therefore used. A lot of time was also devoted to administration, pointing out its servile role toward society. The administration should always be accurately aware of the relationship between the interests of society and those of the individual.

At the end, a joint stance concerning chapter 5 of the Draft PZPR Program was adopted by the Poznan Conference.

Amended Program Viewed

AU021716 Warsaw ZYCIE WARSZAWY in Polish 26 May 86 p 2

[PAP: "Discussion on an Amended Version of the Draft PZPR Program"]

[Text] For many weeks there has been a general discussion on the Draft PZPR Program, which is a particularly important platform of preparations for the 10th PZPR Congress due to start in slightly over 1 month's time. Remarks and proposals from PZPR organizations, the allied parties, social organizations, party members, and nonparty persons are increasing day by day.

All of them are the subject of careful analysis, including by a working team of the First Congress Commission whose task it is to work out the draft document of the program, and by the PZPR Central Committee Ideological Commission.

On 24 May there was a joint meeting of the Ideological Commission and First Congress Commission team which discussed an amended version of the draft program brought about by another stage of editorial work.

The talks were chaired by Henryk Bednarski [PZPR Central Committee secretary] and were also attended by Tadeusz Czechowicz and Marian Orzechowski [PZPR Politburo member and foreign minister respectively]. Opening the meeting, H. Bednarski described the paths and results of the editorial team's work. He stressed that the team had tried to take into account in the amended version of the draft the rich subject matter of the talks on the subject of the version of the draft program that was published in February. Those talks had taken place not only at two, usually open, meetings by every primary party organization, but also at ideological-theoretical conferences held in selected voivodship capitals and devoted to individual chapters of the draft, as well as at meetings of social milieus, social organizations, and youth associations.

The present draft is shorter and more concise than the previous one. It discusses, for example, eight basic social problems which in the opinion of society ought to be solved on a priority basis in the nearest years. It places stronger emphasis on the economic and social conditions behind the performance of these tasks. It devotes greater attention to irregularities and pathology in social life. The section on housing construction has been changed and made more concise. Individual chapters of the draft contain other such changes, additions, and modifications.

At the meeting, during which 12 persons spoke, further remarks and proposals were expressed concerning detailed and general issues and concerning the layout of the document. Generally, however, it was agreed that the present version of the draft program, due to be placed before the PZPR Politburo, is much clearer and more readable and contains less repetition and unclear terminology.

Work on the document is continuing. Special use is being made of conclusions contained in the resolutions, stances, and materials adopted at voivodship precongress conferences. All this will help prepare the version of the draft PZPR program that will be presented before the Central Committee prior to the 10th congress.

After the end of the joint meeting there was a further meeting of the PZPR Central Committee Ideological Commission which discussed the tasks of the mass media in publicizing the theories of Marxism-Leninism and the scientific world outlook.

Further Talks

AU031811 Warsaw TRYBUNA LUDU in Polish 31 May-1 Jun 86 pp 1, 2

[Text] PAP -- On 30 May, there was a third meeting of the congress commission team responsible for examining and preparing amendments and changes to the PZPR statute. The meeting was attended by members of the Central Committee's Internal Party Commission.

The talks were chaired by Wlodzimierz Mokrzyszczak, PZPR Politburo member and Central Committee secretary.

The team discussed and approved a draft of detailed editorial additions and addenda to the PZPR statute and "Regulations Governing the Election of Delegates, Authorities, and Control Bodies in the PZPR."

In the draft that has been prepared, use was made of the suggestions and proposals expressed by PZPR Committees, organizations, and members during the internal party campaign following the ninth congress and during the present congress campaign. The team regarded the present version of the draft changes to the statute as suitable for submission to the Central Committee, and proposed that it be made available to the delegates to the 10th congress.

The following persons who comprise the team took part: Politburo members Zofia Grzyb and Stanislaw Kalkus; Politburo candidate members Stanislaw Bejger and Czeslaw Kiszczak; Central Committee Secretary Jozef Baryla; and Jerzy Urbanski, chairman of the Central Party Control Commission.

Armed Forces Preparation

[Article by General of Brigade Leslaw Wojtaski, deputy head of the Min Political Administration of the Polish Armed Forces: "The Armed Forces Before the 10th PZPR Congress"]

[Excerpts] The precongress campaign is an important test of political maturity and effective performance for all the organizational cells of our Armed Forces. What are the results of this test? What have we achieved and how effective are these achievements? What kind of experience have we gained and how will we utilize it?

The main aims of the work of our Armed Forces are based on the 23d plenum resolution, on W. Jaruzelski's speech at that plenum, and on the Politburo directives on the precongress campaign. Generally speaking, we continue to promote the precongress campaign on two planes:

First, on the political-organizational plane because we wanted to ensure high organizational and other standards for party meetings, to promote an ardent and wise discussion on draft congress documents, to select valuable delegates to higher level conferences and the 10th congress, and to create a climate for candid individual talks with party members and candidates.

Second, on the propaganda-educational plane because we want to impress on soldiers the party's programmatic tasks, to gain their approval for these tasks, to strengthen socialist morality, to foster an honest attitude to service obligations, to improve people-to-people relations, to trigger social militancy in searching for solutions to important problems, to combat wrongdoing, and to propagate whatever is good, righteous, and noble in the life of soldierly collectives.

The precongress campaign is taking place under conditions of an acute political struggle at all levels of public and state life -- in the area of ideology, politics, and economy -- and it is of a global, interbloc, and internal character.

We can even say that it is of a purely Polish and regional character. The political adversaries, who represent various imperialist centers of subversive ideology, want to discredit socialism and halt progressive changes in the world. The 27th CPSU Congress has supplied us with rich theoretical and political observations on this subject and with a profound analysis of development processes and of the contradictions and dangers present in the contemporary world. In our training, propaganda, and information work we draw for inspiration on the achievements of this congress. Propagating the materials adopted by the 27th CPSU Congress -- these materials are of great interest to our party and our people -- is an important feature of the precongress campaign in our Armed Forces.

Our military front of ideological-political training, briefly presented here, is extensive and full of go. If we attempted to sum up what we are doing in connection with the 10th congress, we would have to say this: We continue to present a deep and positive interpretation of party policy and the draft party program for Poland's development; to state with candor the difficulties bunched up along the road to the country's future; and to unmask the true motives of the slanderous propaganda launched by external and internal adversaries of socialism. We continue to do all this to ensure that our soldiers are aware of the challenges of the future, of the opportunities provided for us by the future, of the difficulties we have to overcome, and of the dangers created for space and our national security by the policy of imperialism and its various allies.

Mokrzyszczak Assessment

PM061055 Opole TRYBUNA OPOLSKA in Polish 30 Apr-1 May 86 pp 1, 15

[Interview with Wlodzimierz Mokrzyszczak, candidate member of the Politburo and secretary of the PZPR Central Committee, by KAR correspondent Irena Scholl; date, place not given]

[Text] [Scholl] It is only 2 months now before the 10th congress starts. We are half-way through the precongress campaign. How do you assess its course?

[Mokrzyszczak] More than 90 percent of primary and branch party organizations have already elected their delegates to precongress conferences run by higher party echelons. More than 60 percent of the scheduled enterprise meetings and conferences have already taken place, as well as between 10 and 20 percent of parish, municipal parish, municipal, and district conferences. To date over 110,000 comrades have been elected delegates to enterprise conferences, and more than 140,000 to conferences of first grade party echelons. The largest enterprise party organizations, that is, those that have more than 650 members, send their representatives directly to the congress. More than 150 of those have already been elected.

[Scholl] What is the social composition of the body of delegates chosen to date?

[Mokrzyszczak] Workers are in a definite majority among the 10th congress delegates elected directly in enterprises. They account for 65 percent of all delegates elected to date. Among delegates elected to enterprise conferences, workers account for 41 percent, which is a significantly lower proportion. In both these cases, however, their share is higher than the share of workers in the composition of the party.

The proportion of workers among delegates elected to municipal, municipal-parish, and district conferences is, on the other hand, smaller. Nationally, it amounts to less than 30 percent. There are, however, considerable disparities between individual voivodships here. In industrialized towns and conurbations the proportion of workers is higher, often exceeding 50 percent of the total number of delegates.

In our opinion, there are too few young people less than 35 years old among the delegates, and also too few women. To date, they account for less than 20 percent. Let me point out that party members and candidate party members make up 24 percent of that age group, and that there are 27 percent who are women candidates and full party members.

I will not, therefore, pretend that there is no need for all of us to be anxious to make the social and vocational cross section of the delegates participating in precongress conferences, as well as the delegates to the 10th congress, fully representative of the party and of the whole community of the working people.

[Scholl] It seems to me that the voice of the workers in the precongress debate is as important as their representation among the elected delegates.

[Mokrzyszczak] I am in complete agreement with you. What matters is not merely attendance at meetings or conferences, but first and foremost the voice of the representatives of the working class on all topical issues of fundamental importance to the party and the state. Judging by the way the precongress campaign has progressed so far,.I can say that workers take a very active part in the campaign debate. They account for more than 65 percent of the nearly half-a-million-strong body of party members and candidate members who have spoken at campaign meetings. Their contributions are sharp and critical. But at the same time -- and this needs to be stressed -- they are objective and usually followed by practical conclusions.

[Scholl] Meetings and conferences are also attended by representatives of party echelons and members of the party leadership. I know that you yourself have already participated in several precongress debates. What are they like?

[Mokrzyszczak] First of all it has to be said that they are serious debates. They are open and sincere, and they embrace many issues. The main ones are the economic reform and the progress of its implementation, the draft party program, and recently also the 10th congress theses. All these are confronted with reality, with everyday problems facing individual people and individual communities. Thus, much time is devoted to very particular, detailed questions. To give you an example, voivodas and town mayors get "rapped across the knuckles" for chronically protracted housing repairs, or bad organization in the commerce sector. Party activists are not invariably praised either. Many speakers in the debate have been criticizing the work of the so-called desk-bound activists, which sometimes seems to be a substitute for direct contact with people. Some comrades, unfortunately, still have too little time to talk to the young members of the party, to discuss things openly with no taboos. It is often many years before some party organizations, especially the smaller ones, get to see someone from the higher echelons. Secretaries of enterprise committees are frequently left to tackle difficult problems on their own. Some of them are not always strong enough, or brave enough, to oppose the enterprise management even though the situation might require it.

It is easier today to criticize people placed "on the higher rungs" -- and criticize them openly -- than one's own overseer or foreman. There is parallel criticism of the excess of party programs and resolutions and the lack of consistency in their implementation, as well as the ineffectiveness of control measures.

We treat many of those comments, especially the critical ones, very seriously indeed. We view them as important signals. In those milieus where the negative phenomena do occur we must listen to people -- all people, not just party members -- particularly carefully, and we must take effective measures to improve the situation.

[Scholl] How is the draft party program viewed?

[Mokrzyszczak] The debate indicates that not everybody has as yet had the time to study it closely. That is why the first reactions to it varied widely. They ranged from such opinions as: realistic, ambitious, and feasible, to: overoptimistic and impossible to realize. There were also those who doubted: Can our opinions contribute to changing its shape? Here I would like to quote the words spoken by Comrade Wojciech Jaruzelski at the 25th Central Committee Plenum: "The differences between the present and the final versions of the program will be a measure of the quality of the debate."

Voivodship committees and the Central Committee are still receiving letters from citizens containing further interesting suggestions concerning the program. Today I can only sketch the main trends that have emerged in the precongress debate.

The latter is mostly about widely interpreted economic matters, and here much emphasis is put on the need to modernize the national economy, update the technological processes, and reduce the social costs of production, all this to be done alongside the reform. There is much talk about the need to raise the efficiency of enterprises and improve work organization and discipline without resorting to new investments. Thrift and good economic management must become fact, not slogans -- that is the leitmotiv of many precongress debates.

The debaters demand that the Central Committee guarantee the higher effectiveness of its socioeconomic policy presented in the ninth congress resolution. There is criticism of the number of so-called directives from above, the frequent changes in financial regulations, or the so-called "rules of the game" within the framework of the reform. Some anxiety has been expressed over the tendency to excessive centralization of management The functioning of central administration offices and bodies providing an intermediate link between these and the enterprises is frequently subjected to strong criticism.

Comrades often state self-critically that not everything has been done in their enterprises in the area of improving work discipline, increasing savings in materials and components, or raising product quality. They stress the importance of working well and being paid equally well. We must not allow the kind of situation, say the workers, where a highly skilled workman operating high-technology, sophisticated modern equipment gets between Z20,000 and 30,000 [per month], which is considerably less than the earnings of someone who has gone to work in a private enterprise and turns out the proverbial peddler's merchandise.

One extensive topic in the debate is, of course, housing construction. In the course of a party debate a young man admitted frankly: I am very happy working at my enterprise, but I have to leave because I have had an offer of a job with housing provided. People will go wherever their practical problems are solved more satisfactorily.

[Scholl] Is there no reason to fear that the only fruit of the precongress debate will be repetition of the grievances and requests already voiced during the people's councils and Sejm election campaigns?

[Mokrzyszczak] If the grievances and problems are voiced by the whole population and currently by party members, it means that the party has close ties with the population and is plagued by the same ills. Besides, the precongress debate is not designed exclusively for compiling lists of everyday grievances. The organizers of meetings and conferences and the activists who lead party debates try to direct the thoughts of their participants toward the future.

From material collected during fruitful debates at primary and branch party organizations and individual talks with party members, enterprise committees prepare extensive documents in which they formulate their opinions and their creative conclusions, addressed both to central, voivodship, and enterprise party authorities and to various levels of state administration agencies.

Someone has said: We must not "talk the campaign into the ground." More action, fewer words. That is why it is the duty of activists and organizational structures to see to it that the grievances are eliminated right now, straightway.

The numerous community actions and production pledges that are now taking place demonstrate that the precongress campaign is accompanied by deeds as well as words. It pleases us most when they meet the needs of the market and the whole economy. As someone who has for a large part of his life been involved with the railroads, I note with delight that, for example, railroad workers have been repairing railroad cars and coal gondolas. These, as we know, are nowadays crucial if we are to keep up and improve the state of our transportation.

[Scholl] New party members are given their party cards during precongress meetings and conferences. This gives an impression of being a "gala action," a party-recruitment campaign....

[Mokrzyszczak] The precongress campaign is a particularly important period for the party, and that is why there is nothing strange in the fact that new members are handed their cards with some ceremony. That moment is always important in the life of any party organization, not to mention the individual concerned.

Such occasions take place more and more often, because more and more candidate members are joining the Polish United Workers Party. We noted a gradual increase in party membership as early as February last year, and by August the intake was higher than the so-called wastage. Therefore the party is growing. Its current strength is 2,117,000 members.

It is not our ambition to have mass party membership. According to Lenin's directive, it should constitute the vanguard of the working class. It must develop spontaneously, without any special campaigns. And that is how our party is developing at the moment. And, which is particularly important, it is attracting more and more young people, workers, and farmers.

[Scholl] What are the motives which prompt young people to join the party?

[Mokrzyszczak] I think that they are beginning to perceive more and more clearly that the role of the party is that of the motive force of the transformations taking place in our country. It attracts those young people who are characterized by genuine, active patriotism. Those who want to defend the national honor through deeds and by strengthening Poland's place in the world. To take responsibility for the fate of the country.

They often cite as examples the wise, honest, and dependable older comrades who do not merely pursue their private interests, frequently their commanding officers during their military service. This is the best evidence that the attitude displayed by party members at their workplace and in their everyday environment is of paramount importance alongside ideological and instruction work and the need to step up the ideological offensive and reinforce intraparty discipline.

To conclude, I will quote an extract from the program which I believe to be among the most important: "The party will win people's confidence only if it leads the struggle against social evils, disrespect for man's dignity, infringements of justice, arrogance, and incompetence." There is much that remains to be done....

[Scholl] Thank you for talking to me.

Czechowicz Address

AU281400 Warsaw SLOWO POWSZECHNE in Polish 21 May 86 pp 1, 2

[Report on speech by PZPR Politburo member Tadeusz Czechowicz at a meeting of the Lodz branch of the Pax Association in Lodz on 20 May]

[Text] Dr Tadeusz Czechowicz stressed in his speech that the most important problems currently facing the party include an account of the implementation of the resolutions of the ninth extraordinary congress, the definition of a program for the country's development in the immediate future, and the shaping of Poland's prospects until the next century.

At the ninth congress the party indicated that its chief tasks were acting for the sake of national accord, reforming the economy, and combating political opponents. We are sensitive to all problems experienced by society. T. Czechowicz said: We are in favor of expanding people's rule. This can be seen in all the party's paths of action One important sign of this is the consolidation of the role and status of the allied forces cooperating with the PZPR. We are aiming for an increasingly greater socialization of authority by involving society in the solving of difficult matters, in the making of decisions, and in the sharing of responsibility. This requires the desire and ability of self-government bodies to make full use of their statutory powers and perform their tasks consistently.

The economic reform process requires consistent action and improvement, for it often encounters obstacles and restrictions such as imperfect economic mechanisms and barriers in the sphere of energy, raw materials, and ecology. The ways out of this situation are contained in the theses [for the 10th congress] and draft program, and are being pointed out by participants in the precongress discussion. We must reform the work of the center of management, carry out a review and approval of work posts, and eliminate many discrepancies in the distribution of social benefits.

Science, education, culture, recreation, and tourism require a great deal of concern. Each of these areas requires greater outlay, but this depends most of all on the speed with which the national income grows.

Gasiorowski Interviewed

AU41523 Warsaw ZYCIE PARTII in Polish 21 May 86 pp 3, 5

[Article by Bartolomiej Gasiorowski, senior inspector of the PZPR Central Committee Political-Organizational Department: "Individual Talks Before the 10th PZPR Congress -- The Same Party, But Not Quite the Same"]

[Excerpts] In line with the 13th party plenum decisions, nationwide individual talks have been held with PZPR members and candidates in connection with the precongress campaign. These talks have created much interest in the committees in which the primary party organizations are active as particularly demonstrated by the fact that nonparty people have continued to stay in touch with the teams in charge of the talks, to put forward observations and postulates concerning the situation in enterprises and institutions and, which is very valuable, to submit proposals for the draft party program and for the congress theses. They have also made direct contacts with party members, asking them to bring up certain issues during the individual talks, and some of them have asked to be admitted to the party.

The talks have certainly amounted to important political work, have helped party members to understand many socioeconomic and political problems, and have enabled the talks teams to polemize with simplified, false, and harmful views. This has made it easier for party members to stick to reality in their thinking, to think in terms of national issues, and to improve their political standards.

Although the talks had nothing to do with screening party members, the evaluations made during them about party members' efforts to discharge their statutory duties and party tasks have had a mobilizing effect on their attitudes and have impressed on them the need to be more dependable in observing the norms and principles of party membership.

At times the talks teams have decided to mete out party punishments to some party members and to have some removed from the party. At the same time, they have praised the party members distinguished for their political and occupational attitudes. The talks have helped to stimulate the work of the primary party organizations in expanding party ranks. Many candidates have been admitted into the PZPR and new primary party organizations have been set up.

In their talks workers party members positively evaluated the improvements in the country's situation, but stressed that it was necessary to intensify the struggle against the waste of materials and against excessive bureaucracy in enterprises.

All of them pointed to the poor discipline and organization of work and to the faulty relation between wages and actual work. They criticized the legal enactments that enable the private sector to amass excessive riches and stressed that more resolute actions are necessary to remove all irregularities and dishonest people from this sector. In particular, they asked for consistent efforts to combat wrongdoing and to aggravate the struggle against habitual criminals, hooligans, parasites, and so on.

Farming party members discussed primarily farm production and its profitability and effectiveness and spoke of the inadequate flow of production equipment, chemical fertilizers, plant protection chemicals, coal, and building materials to the rural areas. They also stressed the need for a greater control of prices on industrial products and for efforts to counter the low quality of these products, especially of farm machines.

Party members recruiting from the cadres of managers, engineers, and technicians discussed above all the performance of production and other enterprises under the conditions of the economic reform and in general positively evaluated its principles. However, they criticized the operational directives in connection with the reform because in practice they cause distortions of and even large-scale deviations from the idea and principles of the reform.

Many party members who are teachers demonstrated their concern for the socialist character of schools and for training young people in the spirit of patriotism. They also spoke of the social and living conditions of teachers and, especially, of their earnings.

Party members in higher education establishments have often discussed the ideological and educational work with students and have drawn attention to the activities of party organizations in these establishments. They proposed that ideological requirements placed on academic instructors should be tightened and that measures should be taken to ensure that every instructor fulfills the tasks of instruction in line with state policy.

Party members responsible for culture discussed the propagation of culture and the expansion of its material base and spoke with concern about the gradual elimination and degradation of the rural clubs, which in the present situation are the only base for cultural activities in villages. They were equally concerned for the situation in workers communities in which the traditional cultural sponsorship of trade unions has been reduced to a mere symbol. Some of them were bitter about the disappearance of the educational and cultural role of production enterprises.

Young party members cited many barriers that hinder the development of young people and make it difficult for them to achieve proper positions in the economic and social life of production enterprises and of communities. They also stressed that the primary party organizations and the ZSMP circles should cooperate with each other, especially in ideological-political work, in supplying these circles with training and information materials, and in taking care of young workers in order to attract them to the ZSMP and the PZPR.

Party members who are pensioners spoke of the people who refuse to work and yet enjoy better living conditions than those who do work, stressed their concern about social wrongdoing, and demanded a more energetic and effective struggle against it.

The performance and activities of the party were the main feature of the individual talks, which stressed the need for making the party a massive workers party and for ensuring that party organizations know how to effectively enforce the party's leading and guiding role in the communities in which the party is active and in mass social and political organizations.

TRYBUNA LUDU EXAMINES UNION MEMBERSHIP FIGURES

AU251757 Warsaw TRYBUNA LUDU in Polish 10-11 May 86 pp 1, 8

[Article by "Teg": "The Majority of Workers Belong to Trade Unions -- More Than 6 Million members in All"]

[Text] Trade union ranks have grown by almost 300,000 during the first 3 months of this year. To give an exact figure, the trade union movement numbers 6,023,000 members (a figure which includes 650,000 retired and other pensioned persons). Thus, the trade union movement embraces more than half of those employed at workplaces.

What kind of people wish to join the movement most of all? The answer is workers. There are 3.5 million of them in the movement and they constitute 57 percent of union membership. To complete the picture: Young people comprise 30-35 percent of today's total union membership.

Apparent and statistical differences between various sectors of the economy and regions are so far-reaching that it is difficult to make generalizations. For example, there is no lack of voivodships in which a decisive majority of workforces have joined the trade union movement but there are also voivodships -- Warsaw, Lodz, Walbrzych, and Siedlce to name but a few -- in which average membership hovers around the 40 percent mark.

Are trade unionists at work in all those units of the economy -- 27,400 workplaces -- which are entitled to have union representation? It is true that about 1,000 new workplace organizations have been recently set up but it is also true that there are still no such organizations in 1,300 mainly small enterprises. In statistical terms this is not a very great number but that does not alter the fact that 302,000 employees lack union representation.

Gradual but tangible changes are occuring in the process of trade union movement integration. Many workplace organizations have come to the conclusion that ultimately it pays to go beyond the factory gates, to become involved in the work of federations and regional cells. Decisions of this nature were taken by 1,700 workplace unions announced their entry to branch representative bodies and 1,000 such unions announced their accession to voivodship accords.

However, about 5,200 of the 26,000 registered trade unions see no need to participate in the work of federations or at any rate no need to provide formal confirmation of such participation.

Voivodship trade union accords bring together 62 percent of basic union cells.

The information contained in these figures provides confirmation of one thing: The rebirth of the trade union movement is a process. It is a process spread out over years of strengthening internal unity and organizational cohesion, of improving the circulation of information, and of surmounting obstacles in the awareness of both trade union members and activities.

CEAUSESCU MEETS WITH EEC REPRESENTATIVE

AU121556 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 1509 GMT 12 Jun 86

[Text] Bucharest, AGERPRES 12/6/1968 -- On June 12, the President of the Socialist Republic of Romania, Nicolae Ceausescu, received Willy de Clercq, member [as received] of the European Economic Community (EEC), who paid a visit to Romania. The guest warmly thanked for the interview he was granted and expressed satisfaction for the opportunity to visit Romania.

During the talk questions were approached related to the course of cooperation between Romania and the EEC, which develops in keeping with the agreements concluded. It was shown that the ties between Romania and the European Economic Community and the countries members of that organization could be broadened and diversified, and the wish was expressed further to work with a view to better turning to account the existing possibilities, to identifying new forms of cooperation in industry, agriculture, in modern technologies, in other areas, to mutual benefit, in the interest and understanding of peace.

International problems were also approached, particularly those related to the economic situation in Europe. President Nicolae Ceausescu emphasized that, in the present-day condition, resolute action should be taken to expand interstate cooperation, step up commercial exchanges, for a policy which could stimulate internatinal collaboration, for the promotion of new forms of mutually profitable cooperation in various fields of activity.

Highlighting the direct link between disarmament and development, President Nicolae Ceausescu laid stress on the need to do everything for the cessation of the arms race and the achievment of a complex programme for disarmament -- nuclear first and foremost -- which should include all types of weapons, conventional arms included, for the building of a climate of confidence and security, which would enable a broad development of cooperation among all the states on the European Continent.

The interview was attended by Vasiule Pungan, Romanian minister of foreign trade and international economic cooperation.

CEAUSESCU TOASTS AL-JUMAYYIL AT DINNER

AU091006 Bucharest SCINTEIA in Romanian 7 Jun 86 p 1, 3

[Report on toast by President Nicolae Ceausescu at dinner in honor of Lebanese president Amin al-Jumayyil at the Bucharest Palace of the State Council on 6 June]

[Text] President Nicolae Ceausescu welcomed the guest and stressed the fact that this visit is an expression of the good relations between our countries and peoples and of the mutual wish to act in order to expand cooperation in the economic, scientific-technological, and cultural fields, as well as in the international arena.

During the talks we began today, President Nicolae Ceausescu said, we exchanged opinions on various issues regarding relations between the two countries and peoples. We jointly reached the conclusion that broad possibilities exist to expand cooperation on multiple levels.

I have listened carefully to your expression of concern for the seeking of political solutions to the problems in Lebanon, for reaching national reconciliation, and for strengthening Lebanon's unity, independence, and sovereignty. As close friends of the Lebanese people, we would like to express the Romanian people's wish that the current situation be overcome and that ways be found that lead toward national reconciliation, the Lebanese people's unity, and the consolidation of its unity, independence, and liberty. Such a path will ensure the necesssary conditions for strong socioeconomic development and for a rise in the general development level of the friendly Lebanese people.

We discussed other Middle East issues as well -- the way toward seeking political solutions to all problems and the need for an international conference with the participation of all interested sides, including the Palestine Liberation Organization, for a just peace and in order to solve the Palastinian problem, including the establishment of the independent Palestinian state.

There are many serious and complex problems in the world -- Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu said. We believe that the issue of disarmament, primarily nuclear disarmament, and the ensuring of peace throughout the world are the fundamental issues. Interstate relations should be based on the principles of equality, respect for independence and national sovereignty, and noninterference in domestic affairs. If all peoples, regardless of their size -- particularly the small-and medium-sized countries, the nonaligned and the developing countries -- work in complete solidarity, they can change the course of events and can ensure the triumph of reason, peace, and internatioal cooperation.

Expressing the belief that the visit and the talks held represent an important event in the relations between our countries and peoples, President Nicolae Ceausescu wished the friendly Lebanese people unity, well-being, independence, and happiness and good cooperation between Romania and Lebanon, and he raised a toast to the health of the president of Lebanon and to the health of all those present.

PRESIDENCY DISCUSSES NUCLEAR ENERGY PROGRAM

[Text] Belgrade, 11 Jun (TANJUG) -- The SFRY presidency held a session today chaired by President Sinan Hasani.

In reference to some topical issues on further development in the energy industry, the SFRY Presidency is of the view that no decision concerning the building of nuclear power plants in the country can be made until a long-term development program of the SFRY energy industry is drawn up and adopted and an agreement reached on the joint development plan for the electric power industry. In this, however, attention must be paid chiefly to the possibility of fully exploiting our own natural resources (water, coal, solar energy, etc.) and also to the need for drawing up a comprehensive program for conserving all energy forms.

At the same time, the Presidency called on the Federal Executive Council to engage all appropriate organs and scientific institutions in comprehensive research into and analysis of all aspects of the development of nuclear energy and the application of nuclear technology in view of the development of our economy and society and of the realistic prospects for the future use of more modern and safer technologies. The Presidency also emphasized the need for the scientific and social verification and formulation of more precise criteria and standards that will have to be satisfied before any decision about the construction and location of nuclear power plants is made.

BELOVSKI ADDRESSES 12TH YOUTH CONGRESS

[Speech by Dimce Belovski, secretary of the LCY Central Committee Presidium, at the morning plenary session of the 12th Congress of the Federation of Socialist Youth of Yugoslavia -- live]

[Text] Comrades: The decisive question of the continuity and future of our socialist revolution has been and continues to be a question of the extent to which young people are creators and bearers of its ideals and aims. The LCY's responsibility for the revolution's destiny is also reflected in its supporting and absorbing the progressive ideas and views that young people have about socialism and our self-managing reality and in stimulating young people's efforts to change the situation and relations in our society according to authentic expressions of the revolution and their own sensibility, from the standpoint of their own perspectives and strivings for humanism and a socialist self-managing democracy.

It is the right and obligation of the young generation to be dissatisfied with what has been achieved and to demand and assert its historic opportunity and responsibility here and now and not in some distant future, to wage a struggle itself, and to contribute to the general effort toward solving the crisis and further developing the Yugoslav socialist revolution. It is on the basis of this creative discontent with what exists that one should stimulate and mobilize the growing creative forces which, through organized social action, are capable of realizing a liberation of everyone, including young people, that would give much more than what one has been denied by the present crisis. Young people are a subject of revolutionary movement, and not the ornament of an epoch.

A large part of the young generation has been included in production, science, culture, and associated labor. The great contribution of that generation is contained in the material and spiritual wealth and achievements of our society and country, but that generation is also confronted with the occurences of bureauctatic mediocrity, leveling in the distribution, and demands for obedience. This is choking the talent, motivation, and creative capabilities of young people. They should therefore be those most interested in and ready for changing this situation in a much quicker and radical way, and they should comprehensively contribute to this change themselves. They must actively join the struggle for solving the accumulated economic and other problems along the lines of our socialist self-managing alternative. Young people cannot stand aside and adopt the role of mere observer or critic. The LC is obliged to extend support to the creative commitment of the young people. I am convinced that such an approach will be unitedly expressed at the forthcoming 13th LCY Congress.

Although some significant initiatives have been started recently, there is no reason for self-satisfaction regarding LCY engagement in solving problems the young generation is facing and regarding active and organized sociopolitical activity by young people. It is obvious that specific, rather small but still tangible moves and results are more valuable than a pile of resolutions and declarations, even if they are wise and principled. This certainly means that the LC is obliged to implement its own tenets and policy with more consistency, in particular within the front of organized socialist forces.

Youth justifiably insists upon the implementation of the socialist principle of distribution according to work. Without that there is no real motivation for work or struggle against idleness and irresponsibility, nor will there be any growth of social wealth that would enable us to successfully solve development, economic, and social problems, in particular unemployment, to develop a new quality and culture of life, and as a society to take an active position at the outset of the coming 21st century.

We must actively implement the principle that the destiny and assessment of every man and every collective depend on the results of his or its work and on the degree to which business operations and management of social property are successful. This must become the philosophy of our entire system and of our political system, the ruling norm of our behavior, and also of cadre policy, which is of huge importance for the affirmation of ability, and also for the future, of every young man. It is only under these conditions that we can speak of self-managing production relations, a break with statism and a hired labor attitude, a larger and richer material and spiritual production, unity and mutual relations, freedom of the personality, and equal conditions of work and creation for which young people also fight.

The LCY must fight for further improving the conditions of young people's education. This implies intensified efforts to realize the adopted aims of the reform of education and upbringing. The education of young people, it goes without saying, is not an end in itself, but a necessary preparation for their employment and joining the economic and social life of the country. Only through employment, young people get a real opportunity to build their existence, future, and destiny themselves. By entering the world of labor, young people take on themselves not just partial responsibility -- as we have been used to saying -- but full responsibility for the development of our socialist society and for the further development and the new breakthroughs of our socialist revolution.

In this context, one should devote full attention to the organization of a united and broad social action throughout the country with a view to employing young people, an action which will include all organizations of associated labor and all sociopolitical factors of the community. In this context, one should examine the creation of an economic policy which, by means of tax concessions, credit policy, and similar measures, will motivate young people to be employed in agriculture. The youth organization should also more resolutely oppose the spirit of parasitism and of avoiding work and responsibility which occurs among some young people, especially in big cities.

Full and equal inclusions of young people in the self-managing processes has special importance. We often here use the slogan about the LCY having to ensure conditions and space for young people's full participation in the process of social decisionmaking, as if -- whether we want it or not -- we are observing the young generation from a distance and as if someone should lead it by the hand and include it into social life. The young people -- together with the workers class -- should be the main force of the LCY and its activity. We must note that in the liberation war and socialist revolution -- during the time of all our victorious storms -- young people used to be the most active fighters for the policy of the Communist Party of Yugoslavia, the makers and creators of our future. Today as well, young people must be a constituent and most active part of the LCY, an unavoidable subject in political action and decision in the LCY and in our socialist society as a whole. The lessons of democracy and responsibility are best learned in direct pratice -- that is an opportunity for everyone, including young people, to show themselves and prove themselves in action.

Through the form and content of its activity, the LCY should make possible the broadest expression of striving, interests, and activitism of the young generation both in realizing the historic interests of the workers class and in solving everyday problems in their community. This also means that the LCY must and can be attractive to young people, precisely by giving answers to questions that time is inevitably bringing with itself, to questions that are of existential importance for the young generation and society, that is, for the entire community, including the young generation.

Young people who cultivate respect for, and recognize the historic role of the Yugoslav Communist Party and the LCY must now find in the LCY room for expressing their creative energy and for their full contribution to, and responsibility for, the future of the country and the revolution.

In order that the LCY may be up to its historic task, it must open itself much more toward the social position and activities of the young people, toward the conditions of life and work for the young generation, the peculiarity and the diversity of their interests and needs. It must always lead the way, it must be modern, and above all it must be attractive to young people. Such an LC, freed from dogmatism, a paternalistic attitude, and sectarianism, will become even more their LC. Thus it will contribute not only to the strengthening of the democratic spirit and action of the LC but also to a deeper democratization and strengthening of the organized activities of the young people.

It is necessary to free the youth organization even more completely of the attributes of a conventional political organization, careerism and hierarchy, the tendencies toward power struggles, the blind following of fashions, and false radicalism.

The youth organization must become more and more the widest democratic alliance of the entire young generation, of the socialist views of all the peoples and nationalities of Yugoslavia.

Just like the young people, the LCY cannot be reconciled to the fact that a part of the young generation lives in apathy, with a feeling of impotence and lack of prospects. The LCY must continuously carry out well thought out social actions in which young people will find themselves and will make their breakthrough and contribution to the mainstream of social work and life. This now constitutes their revolutionary assault: They themselves should become the masters of their fate and the creators of new values in a community of which man is both the origin and the purpose.

The struggle against bureaucracy and statism, the struggle for socialist self-managing relations and humanism, must be waged on an even larger scale and with more courage and enthusiasm by the young people. We set the goals of this struggle in the LCY Program, the constitutional principles, the Long-Term Economic Stabilization Program, and other program documents. It is necessary that we attain these goals more quickly, that we change and eliminate everything that stands in the way, that hobbles our revolution in its striving for a new historic breakthrough.

As is known, the present situation is burdened with many difficulties and shortcomings, but dissatisfaction with what exists does not give the right to anybody who is on the side of our revolution to seek for solutions and ways out of this situation through dogmatic and languor or through bourgeois restoration. This could not compensate for the disappointments and falls which inevitably accompany every movement and development.

Many times the young people have denounced those who tried to throw stones at our revolution and to denigrate its achievements. They also fiercely denounce nationalism in society and in their own ranks. They strive for a strengthening and firming up of the brotherhood and unity of our multinational community, without divisions and confrontations which deprive them of living space and prospects.

On these precepts we should continue to work persistently, bearing in mind that nationalism, bureaucracy, alienation, petty bourgeois spirit, divisions and suspicions are the greatest enemy of the young people and of their present and future.

Young people must contribute constantly to the struggle against the sources and manifestations of nationalism, as well as against the more and more aggressive activities of other class adversaries who strive to exploit and to misuse our difficulties and shortcomings. The Yugoslav socialist revolution experiences new conditions and faces new challenges. We are passing through difficult times, but this can be no excuse for losing hope. These are not our first nor are they our greatest difficulties. We have found solutions for virtually all misfortuones and contradictions that have faced the Yougoslav socialist revolution so far; we have found ways out; and we always became stronger. We relied above all on the strength of the workers class, the brotherhood and unity of the peoples and nationalities, the trust that the LCY enjoyed in our society.

This experience teaches us that a better tomorrow will not come by itself, but that it can only be achieved through work and selfless involvement. We can surely get out of the crisis. We have determined ways of getting out of the difficulties.

We have faced openly and boldly the top priority and key problems of our development, and we have determined the ideopolitical basis for solving them. We have set a sufficiently broad basis for organized social activity to change awareness, behavior, and the overall situation.

The strategic backbone of all our strivings consists in this: that new room and breakthroughs be provided for socialist self-management and that it fill the overall social and economic currents and all our institutions. Socialist self-management is our basic tenet, and its further development and the mastering of statism are of vital importance for the future of our revolution, for our international position, and for our independent and nonaligned role in the world. Such a road demands comprehensive support and the contribution of all socialist self-managing forces, full involvement and struggle particularly when things do not run as they should and as we imagined, even when the struggle endangers individual, partial, or pragmatic interests.

It must be quite clear in this connection that the solving of the open questions, as urgent and grave as they may be, cannot be sought without or at the expense of socialist self-management and equality of our peoples and nationalities.

In the difficult efforts to pull the country out of the economic crisis, in the struggle for new breakthroughs in the development of socialist self-management, in the contribution to the further strengthening of the function of the Yugoslav federation on the basis of the equality of the peoples and nationalities, and ultimately in the struggle for a further constructive international role of nonaligned Yugoslavia, the young generation cannot be either a fellow traveler or an observer. It faces a historic challenge and responsibility to make these efforts and to wage this struggle.

The Yugoslav young generation has profoundly identified with the personality and great historic deeds of Josip Broz Tito. It has identified with the stratetic tenets of our revolution. It cares for the future of the Yugoslav community, the brotherhood and unity of the peoples and nationalities. Therefore it must take on its shoulders further obligations and further responsibilities.

The revolution does not know about generation gaps. The revolution has been and remains a living bond of the generations. Optimism [as heard] and vacillation in the face of actions that are to provide the continuity of our revolutionary ideas would inevitably lead us to stagnation and would cause us to lose our historic perspective. One of the greatest values of the Yugoslav revolution lies precisely in the fact that it has enormous energy in its youth, which despite its difficulties and laggings, looks with confidence toward the future of socialist self-management and of our federal community of equal peoples and nationalities.

Comrades: I convey the greetings of the LCY Central Committee, the SAWPY Federal Conference, and other subjects united in the front of the socialist forces to the Congress of the Yugoslav Socialist Youth Federation, the delegates, and all other participants. We wish you fruitful and successful work, with the well-founded expectation that your gathering today will constitute a significant contribution to our overall efforts for the future development of our socialist society and the strengthening of the SFRY. Thank you. [applause]

COMMITTEE REJECTS PLAN TO DEFER RETIREMENTS

[Text] Belgrade, 10 Jun (TANJUG) -- Delegates in the Committee for Sociopolitical Relations of the Federal Chamber of the SFRY assembly did not accept the proposal made by the Federal Executive Council that individuals doing very responsible jobs in the federal organs of administration and in federal organizations should stay in their jobs to the end of 1988 even though they have fulfilled their retirement conditions. They were unanimously against this proposal. The explanation that the work involved, which is exceptionally important for the security of the country and that there are only 57 of these workers who, in addition, are under 60 years of age, did not help either. The stance taken by the delegates was that there had been plenty of time to provide appropriate cadre replacements for all these jobs and that the question of responsibility may even be raised as to why some thought had not been given to the problem before.

JANKOVIC ON AL-QADHDHAFI ABANDONING NONALIGNMENT

[Text] Libyan leader Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi made a speech on the 16th anniversary of the evacuation of the American Willis base on the Libyan coast. Some points of the speech are the occasion of our foreign political commentary by Nebojsa Jankovic:

Time allows us to dwell on two points which in our opinion deserve serious analysis. After repeating that Libya leader announced a certain distancing from the policy of nonalignment because, in his opinion, it is not capable of protecting its members from the aggression of the big powers. He advocated what he called a neutral Libya.

If one speaks about the power or importance of the Nonaligned Movement to protect its members from the attacks of a superpower's supersonic bombers, it is not difficult to assess that Al-Qadhdhafi is right, at first glance. Considering that it is a matter of a movement whose great majority is composed of developing countries that lack both ability and ambition to match the superpowers in military might, it is clear why the nonaligned countries usually are not in a position to offer effective protection in the event of an armed attack.

It must not be forgotten, however, that the strength of the Nonaligned Movement has never been measured by a military yardstick, but by the movement's ability to act politically on the international scene. Precisely in the case of the aggression against Libya, has not the strength of the movement been manifested in a unanimous denunciation of the attack? Did not a six-member delegation of the Coordination Bureau of the nonaligned countries, including Raif Dizdarevic, Yugoslav foreign minister, leave for Tripoli immediately after the U.S. attack, and afterward for New York, so that it could most sharply denounce in the United Nations the attack on a sovereign and nonaligned country? And did not such a stand by the nonaligned countries serve as a reason for the reexamination of the positions of some American allies in Europe as regards further military pressure on Libya?

In the situation following the American attack, a feeling of imminent war danger arose in Libya, and it is not difficult to understand it.

It is nevertheless difficult to shed the impression that the Libyan leadership is drawing conclusions which may be shown to be not only unjustified but also potentially dangerous.

Leaving aside, for the time being, the illogical nature of the assertion that one may become a member of a military-political bloc and retain a neutral status, we have to ask the essential question: After all this aggression and economic and political pressure that we have witnessed and which directly serves bloc policies, is it possible to believe that salvation from one bloc may be found under the wing of another, anywhere you may like, but especially in such a hot area as the Mediterranean and the Middle East?

DIZDAREVIC HOLDS TALKS WITH TANZANIA'S MKAPA

["Pool" item]

[Text] Belgrade, June 12 (TANJUG) -- The eighth Nonaligned Summit in Harare should come out with concrete recommendations for assistance to the liberation struggle of southern African peoples, not just rhetorical declarations, it was stressed during talks held here this evening by Yugoslav Foreign Secretary Raif Dizdarevic and his Tanzanian counterpart Benjamin Mkapa.

The Tanzanian foreign minister arrived on a three-day visit to Yugoslavia today.

Dizdarevic and Mkapa said that bilateral relations are developing successfully and underscored the need to promote economic cooperation which, in the past few years, lags behind the two countries' fruitful political relations.

Exchanges Dinner Toasts

LD130510 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 2333 GMT 12 Jun 86

[Text] Belgrade, 12 Jun (TANJUG) -- Raif Dizdarevic, federal secretary for foreign affairs, gave a formal dinner at the Palace of the Federation in Novi Beograd tonight in honor of Benjamin Mkapa, Tanzanian minister of foreign affairs. The dinner took place in a very cordial, and friendly atmosphere.

During the dinner the two foreign Ministers exchanged toasts in which they devoted special attention to the present activity of the nonaligned movement and the preparations for the Eight Summit in Harare.

Having welcomed once again his guest from friendly Tanzania, Raif Dizdarevic emphasized that this meeting is an opportunity to examine all the possibilities for the further consolidation of cooperation and friendship between the two countries. This is equally an opportunity to exchange views on the issues of the modern world and the nonaligned countries' activities, he added.

Dizdarevic went on to say that both sides assess cooperation between Yugoslavia and Tanzania as unique, that is, relations between the two countries, which have a great deal in common, and are linked by traditional friendship and cooperation. There are no problems or differences in views in these relations.

Drawing attention to a great deal of unused capacities in the sphere of economic, financial and scientific-technical cooperation, Dizdarevic spoke in favor of the further joint efforts needed to achieve new successes in these fields.

The federal secretary then recalled that the eighth summit of the nonaligned countries is being prepared in highly unfavorable international conditions of renewed confrontations between the superpowers and exacerbated international economic relations, in other words, in the same conditions in which the first nonaligned summit, which was held in Belgrade, was prepared.

Dizdarevic went on to say:

"We are going to face numerous difficult problems at the summit, to which nonaligned countries should provide answers. It is fortunate that nonaligned countries are going to this summit consolidated, with strengthened unity and increased awareness about the need for a broader involvement of the movement in resolving fundamental issues of the modern world."

Thanking his host for his kind words Tanzanian foreign minister Benjamin Mkapa expressed his satisfaction at the opportunity to once again confirm by this visit the importance of friendship and cooperation between the two nonaligned countries.

He went on to stress that Yugoslavia contributes a great deal to the economic development of Tanzania, particularly in the sphere of energy, transport, communications and other fields.

The Tanzanian minister talked about economic difficulties his country faces and briefed his hosts on plans for the recovery of the Tanzanian economy.

Mkapa then stressed that he had arrived in Belgrade with a desire to exchange views with Yugoslav friends on the current international situation, nonaligned countries' activities on the eve of the Harare summit, as well as on the situation in southern Africa.

Drawing attention to Yugoslavia's role in the Nonaligned Movement Mkapa said that Yugoslavia's views on numerous issues concerning international life are of exceptional importance for Tanzania in the present period of preparations for the successful work of the Harare summit.

Minister Mkapa confirmed that the international climate in which preparations for the eighth summit of the nonaligned are taking place is not at all favorable. He drew particular attention, among other things, to a new rivalry between the two existing blocs and their attempts to talk nonaligned countries into joining their groupings.

"If we follow the policy of Presidents Tito and Nyerere regarding the nonaligned movement and remain consistent to its original principles, we will succeed in preserving our independence and in leading a winning battle for peace in the world," Benjamin Mkapa, Tanzanian minister of foreign affairs, said in conclusion.

CSSR DELEGATE ADDRESSES ILO SESSION IN GENEVA

[Text] Geneva June 11 (CTK) -- The program of the International Labour Organization (ILO) for the coming period should be more distinctly orientated on the chief questions interesting the working people, on the safeguarding of world peace and on the struggle against unemployment, Czechoslovak Deputy Minister of Labour and Social Affairs Dagmar Molkova said here today.

Speaking at the 72nd conference of the ILO, she supported Mikhail Gorbachev's proposals concerning the restructuring of economic relations on a just, equitable and democratic basis, and the socialist countries' disarmament proposals. Dagmar Molkova criticized the fact that the good experience of the socialist countries is overlooked and publicity is given to the capitalist system in the ILO. This also apparent from the misuse of the ILO system of control of the fulfillment of international agreements, and from unjustified objections designed to cast doubt on the advantages of socialism. She stressed the importance of the democratization of the ILO control system, and added that the socialist countries have elaborated proposals for its improvement.In the concluding part of her speech, Dagmar Molkova denounced the discriminatory practice of the employers' group controlled by reactionary representatives of the international organization of employers who at the current conference rendered impossible the full participation of representatives of directors of socialist enterprises in the work of the conference and threatened the universal character of the ILO.

BALKAN COUNTRIES' UNESCO CONFERENCE ENDS

[Excerpts] Sofia, June 12 (BTA) -- The Balkan Countries' National Commissions for UNESCO completed their 12th conference here today. Taking part were delegations from Bulgaria, Greece, Romania and Yugoslavia. In the course of three days they discussed their cooperation during the last two years and endorsed a programme for the period up to 1987. Their agenda included questions concerning the contribution of the Balkan subregion to the world decade for cultural development and the drafting of UNESCO's third medium-term plan (1990-19985) [date as received].

A BTA reporter asked Academician Nikolay Todorav, president of the 23rd session of UNESCO's General Conference to comment on the present meeting:

"Concrete measures were outlined for an enhancement of the scientific and cultural exchange, for the further extension of bilateral and multilateral cooperation among the Balkan countries within UNESCO," Academician Todorov said. "A very useful tradition has been continued, which is highly esteemed and steady encouraged by UNESCO. Our meetings are important because our region truned out to be one of themost active areas in the organization. The establishment of multilateral research centres in the Balkan countries can be considered to be an important way of achieving increasing closeness among the countries and the peoples: the International Association of Southeast European Studies (A.I.E.S.E.E.), the International Information Centre on the Sources of Balkan and Mediterranean History (C.I.B.A.L.), the European Centre for Higher Education (C.E.P.E.S.), the International Centre for Research in Chemistry, the Permanent Coordinating Committee for Reducing Earthquake Risks in the Balkans, etc." The final report of the conference emphasises that the Balkan subregion has in more respects than one played a pioneering role in of considerable interest to other regions, bearing in mind the varieth of socio-political and economic systems in the Balkan countries.

Recently, the Balkan countries' national commissions have been focusing on the Long-Term Subregional Programme of Cooperation in Research and Development for Educational Innovation in Southern and Eastern Europe (C.O.D.I.E.S.E.E.). Now the commissions have supported UNESCO's initiative of drafting a world history of education, as well as a number of other ideas for the activation of cooperation in the field of natural sciences, geology, ecology, history, culture, etc.

At the closing of the conference the leaders of the Bulgarian delegation, Mrs. Mariya Zakharieva, deputy minister of foreign affairs, noted that the debates in Sofia are an indisputable contribution to he consolidation of the good climate in the Balkans. Our conferences, she said, may serve as an emample of equitable cooperation among states of different social and economic orders linked geographically and historically with the strong ties of centuries-long cooperation. In Sofia we have once again convinced ourselves that these meetings offer wide possibilities for an open dialogue, for the exchange of experience of for the resolution of topical problems of mutual interest and for the raising of the intellectual potential of all countries in the Balkans.

INDIAN FOREIGN MINISTER MAKES OFFICIAL VISIT

Shankar Arrives

AU121316 Sofia BTA in English 1225 GMT 12 Jun 86

[Text] Sofia, June 12 (BTA) -- "Our relations with Bulgaria are excellent and I have come here to promote them still further in the economic, political and cultural field", Mr. P. Shiv Shankar, minister of foreign affairs and trade of India, said today. He arrived in Bulgaria on an official friendly visit. The head of the Indian diplomacy was welcomed by Mr. Petur Mladenov, Bulgaria's foreign minister, at whose invitation the visit is taking place, by deputy ministers and by other officials.

Official Talks Begin

AU122100 Sofia BTA in English 1813 GTM 12 Jun 86

[Text] Sofia, June 12 (BTA) -- Mr Petur Mladenov, Bulgaria's minister of foreign affairs and Mr. P. Shiv Shankar, India's minister of external affairs and commerce, who is paying an official friendly visit here, held talks here today. They discussed a wide range of questions concerning bilateral relations and the international situation. Mr Petur Mladenov and Mr. P. Shiv Shankar briefed each other on the socio-economic development of Bulgaria and India, and they commended highly the two countries' achievements in various spheres of life. The progress marked by Bulgaria and India is conducive to the process of energizing mutual cooperation in different fields.

The two countries' chief diplomats defined reciprocal relations as excellent, as relations based on confidence, understanding and cooperation. Mr. P. Shiv Shankar stressed that India attaches great importance to the promotion of her ties with the socialist states, which are a vital link in his country's foreign policy, and that India regards her relations with Bulgaria as an idea of bilateral relations. This state of bilateral contacts is all the more valuable, bearing in mind that the two countries belong to different social systems.

The Indian guest spoke about his country's policy towards her neighboring states, about the attempts by certain imperialist quarters to destablize India. Despite all these attempts, democracy is in the process of consolidation in India. The Indian foreign minister indicated that tensions in the area of the Indian Ocean are stirred by external forces, which compels India to pay special attention to her own security. The U.S. provides Pakistan with most up-to-date weapons, a fact which has a destablizing impact on the relations between India and her neighbor.

The guest told about India'a activities in the Nonaligned Movement, where she is seeking a consolidation of opinions on the major issues of our time, and about his country's work within the framework of the initiatives advanced by the six heads of state or government aimed at strengthening world peace and security.

Mr. Petur Mladenov dwelt on the complicated and strained international situation, the result of the actions of imperialism and more specifically of the policy of nuclear arms race and neoglobalism pursued by the U.S. He stressed the paramount importance of the question maintaining world peace, the need for all people on the planet, irrespective of their ideological and other differences, to work for the establishment of lasting peace. In this connection, the chief Bulgarian diplomat commended highly the Soviet peace initiatives, directed at the consolidation of security and detente. Regret was expressed over the fact that the number of concrete disarmament proposals put forward by the U.S.S.R. and the other socialist countries have failed to meet with a positive response from the NATO states.

The Bulgarian foreign minister familiarized the guest with the latest peace initiatives advanced by a the Political Consultative Committee of the Warsaw Treaty member states at its meeting which ended in Budapest yesterday. Regional conflicts were another topic of discussion.

Shankar Statement Reported

[Text] Sofia, June 13 (BTA) -- India's foreign minister assesses highly the Bulgaro-Indian relations. Mr. P. Shiv Shankar, who was on a two day official friendly visit to this country, told journalists before he left the country that his talks with Mr. Todor Zhivkov and other official figures, as well as with Bulgaria's Foreign Minister Mr. Petur Mladenov, had been fruitful and on a wide scope. The leader of Indian diplomacy stressed the upgrade development of the bilateral cooperation in the economic, political and cultural sphere, the unanimity of opinions on the main issues of the present days and most of all those related to preservation of peace and security in the world.

Commenting on India's relations with the socialist countries, India's minister of external affairs and trade said that they are cordial and have been such as early as the time when India has fought for its independence.

The guest assessed as sincere this week's address of the Warsaw Treaty member-states to the NATO member-states, to all European countries, for reduction of armed forces and weapons in Europe. He said that this document is a step forward on the road of consolidation of peace and security on the planet. Mr. P. Shiv Shankar stressed that the U.S. and other Western countries should answer positively to this address, which would be in interest of mankind.

India's foreign minister analyzed the internal political situation in India paying special attention to the demographic problems, to the need to considerably increase the agricultural and industrial production. He marked that India has other problems as well, which have been brought about by foreign forces, that there are plans for destabilization of the country, for breaking its unity and integrity.

"India has evidence for external interference in the events in Punjab," stressed the leader of India's diplomacy. Despite the difficulties the central government believes in the possibilities for political settlement of the problems.

JOINT COMMUNIQUE ON CHNOUPEK VISIT ISSUED

AU091126 Sofia RABOTNICHESKO DELO in Bulgarian 8 Jun 86 p 2

["Joint Bulgarian-CSSR Communique"]

[Text] At the invitation of Petur Mladenov, Bulgarian minister of foreign affairs, Bohuslav Chnoupek, CSSR minister of foreign affairs, made a friendly, working visit to Bulgaria from 5-7 June.

The CSSR minister of foreign affairs was received by Todor Zhivkov, general secretary of the BCP Central Committee and chairman of the State Council, and Georgi Atanasov, chairman of the Bulgarian Council of Ministers. The meetings took place in a cordial and friendly atmosphere. Bohuslav Chnoupek laid a wreath at the mausoleum of Georgi Dimitrov and paid his respects to the coffin of the great son of the Bulgarian people and noted figure of the international communist and workers' movement.

During their talks the two ministers of foreign affairs exchanged information on the construction of socialist society in their countries, and on the decisions adopted by the 13th BCP and 17th CPCZ Congresses. They also discussed issues related to bilateral relations and topical international issues. The two ministers noted with satisfaction that relations between the People's Republic of Bulgaria and the CSSR are developing dynamically on the basis of the principles of Marxism-Leninism and socialist internationalism, and in the spirit of the treaty on friendship, cooperation, and mutual assistance. They stressed the exceptional importance of the meetings between Todor Zhivkov and Gustav Husak, general secretary of the CPCZ Central Committee and CSSR president, for comprehensively developing cooperation between the two socialist countries and their peoples.

The ministers of foreign affairs stressed that the fraternal friendship and comprehensive cooperation with the USSR and other socialist countries have a decisive role in developing their countries. They expressed the firm determination of the People's Republic of Bulgaria and the CSSR to make all efforts to futher strengthen the unity and cohesion of the fraternal socialist countries in order to increase the effectiveness of their cooperation in implementing policy, coordinated within the framework of the Warsaw Pact and related to the cardinal issues of our time, and the measures for their practical solution, which are to be adopted.

The two ministers stressed the readiness of their states to contribute to further perfecting socialist economic integration, and pointed out the historical significance of the Comprehensive Program of Scientific and Technological Progress of the Member-States of CEMA Until the Year 2000, adopted in 1985 in Moscow. They expressed support for normalizing relations between CEMA and the EEC, something which would be an important precondition for expanding their economic and scientific-technical cooperation on a mutually beneficial and equal basis, without any discrimination.

The ministers of foreign affairs expressed serious concern over the alarming and dangerous stage of the present international situation. The basic cause of the existing tension is the aggressive and militaristic policy of the United States which, supported by some of its NATO allies, does not relinquish its hegemonistic ambitions and striving to achieve military superiority. Their course of intensifying the arms race and transferring it to space evokes particular alarm. New concerns in this area were evoked by the decision of the U.S. Administration to not adhere to the agreements on limiting strategic offensive weapons, achieved within the USSR.

The two sides expressed their categorical conviction that the policy of military confrontation has no future, that the peaceful coexistence of states with different social system is the only sensible alternative.

They stressed that if goodwill and new political thinking are present, it is possible and necessary to overcome the tension and return international relations to detente on the basis of the principles of equality and equal security.

The sides confirmed the necessity of adopting energetic measures aimed at stopping the arms race, especially the nuclear one, and beginning disarmament. The two ministers highly evaluated the program on creating comprehensive international security, announced by the 27th CPSU Congress. They stressed the exceptionally important significance of the declaration of Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, on totally liquidating nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction by the end of the century. Stressing that the Soviet initiatives correspond with the inexorably strict requirements posed by the nuclear century to the political leaders of all countries, the ministers expressed the readiness of their states to cooperate closely with the USSR and the other socialist countries in contributing to the practical implementation of these initiatives.

The ministers of foreign affairs stressed the urgent necessity of releasing mankind from nuclear weapons and banning all nuclear tests, as an important step in this direction. They expressed full support for the unilateral moratorium on nuclear testing, announced by the USSR and extended until August 1986. The two sides noted that creating nuclear-free zones, including in the Balkans, is an important means of decreasing the danger of a nuclear war, strengthening stability, and improving the international climate.

It was stressed that decreasing the level of military confrontation in Europe is one of the most important tasks in the struggle against the nuclear danger. The two ministers highly evaluated the initiative to totally liquidate the USSR and U.S. medium-range missiles in Europe, which was developed in the recent Soviet proposal of May 1986. The same goal is also being pursued by its initiative on significantly reducing conventional weapons and troops in Europe, while exercising appropriate control.

The constructive Soviet proposals on generally liquidating chemical weapons have an essential significance in this respect. They create a favorable opportunity for signing an appropriate international convention. The ministers stressed that the creation of chemical weapon-free zones is an important step toward solving this problem, and stressed their countries' positive contribution in this direction -- the declaration-appeal of the People's Republic of Bulgaria and the Socialist Republic of Romania on turning the Balkans into a chemical weapon-free zone, and the initiative of the CSSR and the GDR on creating a chemical weapon-free zone in Central Europe. The topicality of these proposals is stressed even further by NATO's decision to commence the production of binary chemical weapons.

The ministers of foreign affairs noted that the problems of peace and security in Europe significantly influence the situation in the world as a whole and stressed the necessity of developing the Helsinki process in a balanced manner. Voicing support for successfully concluding the first stage of the Stockholm conference, the ministers expressed their countries' conviction that understanding the close, mutual dependence of the interests of the European peoples and securing businesslike and constructive cooperation in all areas are a decisive precondition for the continent's peaceful future and detente. The forthcoming Vienna meeting of the CSCE participating-states can make an important contribution in this respect. The constructive and realistic character of the socialist countries' proposals at the MBFR talks in Vienna, made on 20 February 1986, and the necessity of achieving faster progress at the talks were pointed out.

The two ministers decisively condemned the striving of certain revanchist forces to put a question mark over the territorial-political realities established in Europe as a result of World War II and the postwar development.

The two sides expressed solidarity with the struggle of the peoples of Asia, Africa, and Latin America to strengthen their national, political, and economic independence, and against imperialism, neocolonialism, racism, and apartheid. In this context they decisively denounced the interference of imperialist forces in the internal affairs of sovereign states, and the course of military, political, and ideological dictat adopted by them. Aggressive actions against Libya, continuing provocations against the Central American countries, kindling of hotbeds of tension in the Middle and Near East, and the approach toward the problems of the African Continent are indicative expressions of this course. Being principled opponents of all terrorism, including state terrorism, the two states expressed readiness for constructive cooperation with all states in order to uproot terrorism from international life.

The talks took place in a spirit of fraternal friendship and cooperation, and with total unity on all matters discussed. Bohuslav Chnoupek invited Petur Mladenov to make a friendly visit to the CSSR. The invitation was accepted with gratitude.

MLADENOV VIEWS WORLD SITUATION AT BONN DINNER

AU021636 Sofia RABOTNICHESKO DELO in Bulgarian 22 May 86 pp 1, 5

[Report on speech by Petur Mladenov, member of the Politburo of the BCP Central Committee and Bulgarian minister of foreign affairs, at a dinner given in his honor by Hans-Dietrich Genscher, FRG minister of foreign affairs, in Bonn on 21 May]

[Text] After confirming the general assessment that the Bonn talks had been held in an atmosphere of frankness and mutual respect, the Bulgarian foreign minister underlined that our country sees the need for a political dialogue not only in bilateral relations.

He expressed the conviction that the content of the bilateral cooperation in a number of fields could be richer if it was implemented in an atmosphere of political detente. "The present-day extremely complex and dangerous international situation," stated Petur Mladenov, has appropriate repercussions both on political contacts and in other fields. As a fresh example of this, I might point to the unjustified decision of the EEC to halt the import of certain goods from socialist countries, including Bulgaria. We are worried not so much by the losses which both the one and, I would say, the other country may bear. We are worried by the fact that the motives for such administrative measures are political. Practice has shown, including in Bulgarian-West German economic relations, that economic cooperation on an equal rights basis without discrminatory measures is equally beneficial to all. Our country supports the further development of such cooperation."

Dwelling on the topical international problems that had been examined, Petur Mladenov confirmed the common view of both countries that the situation in the world today is extremely dangerous, that the reason for this is the continuing arms race, and that the solution to this situation can only be found by means of negotiations. He also dwelt on differences in the assessment of the reasons that have led to the present period of an exceptionally complex international situation. Guided by the desire for real progress to be achieved in the efforts for disarmament and identical security, stated the Bulgarian minister, we must learn how to think in new categories, and not only to think, but also to act in a new way. The way toward this is frank, honest, and constructive negotiation, which should lead to results of common significance and not serve the achievement of one-sided goals; negotiations, based on the principle, which is realistic for our times -- the principle of equality and identical security.

In order to put these principles into practice, emphasized Petur Mladenov, the countries of the socialist community are acting from clear and coordinated positions in entirely supporting the Soviet disarmament program set out in Mikhail Gorbachev's declaration of 15 January. "We support and welcome," he stated, "the new extension of the unilateral Soviet moratorium on all nuclear tests, and make an appeal for this great historic opportunity not to be missed. I wish to stress that a single incident with the atom of peace, however tragic it may be, is not a great danger for mankind. The great, fatal danger lies in the nucleus of the atom of war. The efforts of all must be directed against it, a state of psychosis must be created against it, the powers of oratory should be used for this purpose. When we speak of the need for disarmament, it should be realized that the prospects for disarmament cannot be cloudless if space weapons are brought into the heavens."

Later Petur Mladenov dwelt on the historic importance of the Helsinki conference, which confirmed on an international basis the European realities after World War II. These realities," he said, "lie at the basis of the peaceful development and cooperation in Europe. Every attempt to violate them, or to tolerate such attempts in any form whatsoever, creates tension and insecurity." He dwelt later on our country's consistent efforts to develop good-neighborly relations in the Balkans and recalled the proposal for the signing of bilateral agreements, which would include a code for good-neighborly relations between the Balkan countries, renunciation of territorial claims, and agreement not to allow the territories of the relevant countries to be used for hostile aims and actions against one another. This goal is also served by the efforts to turn the region into a nuclear-weapon-free zone and to eliminate chemical weapons in the Balkans.

Chnoupek on Pact Proposals

[Text] Prague June 12 (CTK) -- The Czechoslovak-Egyptian talks confirmed both countries' interest to develop relations in the political, economic and cultural spheres, Czechoslovak Foreign Minister Bohuslav Chnoupek said here tonight at a dinner he gave for his Egyptian colleague Ahmad 'Ismat 'Abd al-Majid.

He stressed that Czechoslovakia and its allies want to achieve permanent peaceful coexistence of states with different social systems, build foundations for a comprehensive system of international security, and work for the liquidation of all nuclear weapons as proposed by Soviet Communist Party General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev.

Bohuslav Chnoupek emphasized the significance of the Budapest session of the Warsaw Treaty Political Consultative Committee and its appeal for substantial reduction of armed forces and conventional armament in Europe.

He said in conclusion that Czechoslovakia fully supports the creation of a firm material, political and organizational basis for star peace as proposed today by the Soviet premier to the U.N. secretary general.

In his speech, Ahmad 'Ismat 'Abd al-Majid stressed that Egypt and Czechoslovakia agree that international disputes must be solved peacefully, and both countries want a political dialogue.

Egypt, a founding and active member of the Non-Aligned Movement, is ready to share Czechoslovakia's endeavour to help liquidate the hotbeds of international tension, the Egyptian foreign minister added.

PRAGUE COMMENTS ON LATEST WARSAW PACT PROPOSALS

LD122103 Prague Domestic Service in Czech 1630 GMT 12 Jun 86

[Antonin Kostka commentary: "In the Interest of Europe and World Peace"]

[Text] The meetings of the highest organs of the community of European socialist countries have a markedly peaceful tradition. On their initiative in 1985 there was the first considerable reduction of their own armed forces by almost 2.5 million men. This initiative was the impulse behind the birth of the effort for collective security in Europe and the first project toward a ban on chemical weapons. The initiative of the Political Consultative Committee preceded the Vienna talks on the reduction of men and arms in central Europe; it was the initiative of the committee which gave Europe its Magna Carta of peace, the Helsinki Final Act. It was therefore quite logically expected that the present session would also put forward important topics for further qualitative improvement in the struggle for peace, disarmament, and international understanding.

Today we can say that this expectation was not disappointed. The appeal to the NATO states and all European countries which emerged from the session is characterized by several new elements which considerably increase both the attractiveness and the possibility of implementation of the proposals being put forward. In particular, the fact that the appeal, which is in fact a program for European demilitarization, is addressed to all European countries moves the question of the fate of Europe to a wider base. It is no longer just a question of relations between the two political military groups, but it has become the affair of all Europeans. The project for a gradual demobilization of men at arms and the liquidation of their armaments -- at the beginning of the nineties it should reach half a million on each side -- the creation of demilitarized zones, and other measures proposed create a point of departure for the Stockholm and Vienna conferences which have for years now been marking time.

Another important new thing is the fact that the measures proposed do link up with the worldwide disarmament process, but they are considered individually, separately, without mutual conditions or any binding conditions which could make their adoption more difficult. And last, but of course far from least, is the very constructive new approach to the question of verification. As well as the use of international means, including satellites, what is being proposed is the creation of a permanent international consultative and control commission with inspection on site and the setting up of permanent control bodies for the whole area under demilitarization from the Atlantic to the Urals.

We all know, however, that a good proposal will not in itself change everything. This depends largely on whether there is success in implementing it. In the case of the new proposals from the Warsaw Pact, the reaction of the West is considerably cautious because the advantages and usefulness of these proposals are too obvious.

And so, next to the positive evaluations, there is no lack of the obligatory excuses about the need for careful study, or the worn out propaganda warning that the aim of the proposals is an attempt to drive a wedge between the United States and its West European allies. The strength and weight of the new proposals from the socialist countries is not, however, measured by the benevolence with which the West wishes or does not wish to accept it. Besides, one cannot expect any enthusiasm for any disarmament project from an alliance whose leading organs have only recently voted for further stepping up arming, including the production of new generation chemical weapons and participation in U.S. space arming.

The strength, weight, and importance of the new proposals rests somewhere else -- in the fact that they correspond completely unequivocally, and undeniably to the interests of the whole of Europe and all nations of the world in the fact that they are in complete harmony with the demands of the time and the aims of the efforts by the whole world for the survival of humanity, for overcoming the pitfalls of the nuclear age. The indisputable uniqueness and importance of the new proposals is given by the simple fact that without the realization of the goals which are set out in them, the future development of our continent is unthinkable. The future of Europe is simply indivisible from the success of the struggle for its demilitarization, and in the same way it is indivisible from the future of humanity because it is precisely Europe which is the most threatened sector of the world, and efforts to save must always be concentrated on the most threatened sectors. The strength and weight of the new proposals is also given by the unity and deepened joint action of the socialist countries in all political, economic, and international questions, as was confirmed many times at the Budapest session. And precisely this, contained in the new initiatives, gives new enthusiasm, strength, daring, trust and hope to all people who believe in peace and international understanding.

ACCORD WITH AUSTRIA ON ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION

AU140741 [Editorial Report] Bratislava PRAVDA in Slovak on 24 April carries on page 6 a 1,000-word article by Jan V. Svec, entitled "One of the Basic Duties of Mankind; Knowledge Acquired From Austria's Environmental Protection." After noting the need to coordinate practical measures for environmental protection throughout the world, since environmental damages take no note of natural, geographic, or political frontiers, Svec says:

"Currently the contacts between Czechoslovakia and neighboring Austria are steadily intensifying. At present an appropriate interstate agreement lies ready for signature. A few days ago, a group of Czechoslovak journalists visited Austria at the invitation of the Austrian Federal Press Office, to acquaint themselves with certain issues of the local environmental protection." Svec then proceeds to describe Austria's natural and climatic conditions, and states: "It is only natural that both the population, and the country's representatives more and more clearly realize the need to protect the country from internal or external influences which increasingly harm nature and the environment in general." The air polluted by the industries of Great Britain, France, and the FRG is brought by the winds over Austria, and the dense automobile traffic does not help, either, Svec says. Thus, "since our countries are immediate neighbors, the problems are common, or at least very similar, to both of them; and they can be resolved in a coordinated manner, by proceeding jointly, and by exchanging knowledge, experience, and the results of monitoring and various measurements, and even of complete studies." Svec goes on to say "We have several neighboring regions, localities, and factors of this kind, which logically require a harmonized course, and agreements on joint solutions." After noting the situation on the Danube as an example, Svec adds: "Similarly the effects on nature of building hydro-projects are also involved. And this, like certain other issues, demands a balanced and mutually useful course also from the viewpoint of environmental protection, both in our own country and in Austria, but a also in other surrounding countries. Obviously the interstate agreement that is being prepared is counting on all this."

Svec then goes on to sketch various measures undertaken in Austria for environmental protection, saying that some of them are no longer effective enough and thus are about to be tightened. "One must believe," he concludes, "that the agreement, which is being prepared between the two countries and which is to be signed this year, will signify yet another important step and bilateral contribution to the constant improvement of cooperation in environmental protection not only in the CSSR and Austria, but also within the broader European area."

SMENA CAUTIONS AGAINST MONEY EXCHANGE

AU021430 Bratislava SMENA in Slovak 27 May 86 p 5

["J.T." article: "Watch Out for Forged Foreign Currencies; Pound Sterlings From Secret Workshops"]

[Text] Prague (JT) -- Forged 100-dollar banknotes, seized together with their owners at the beginning of this year's tourist season in Prague, are not the only forged currencies being brought to our country.

According to the information supplied by specialists of our criminal service, also deutsch marks and French francs of various denominations -- albeit in smaller quantities -- have come to our country, as well as Italian lire and British pounds sterling. The latter ones originate from secret workshops that existed during World War II. During the war they were supposed to disrupt the British economy. Despite the fact that these banknotes have been produced by highly competent forgers with modern techniques, they are being identified in our exchange facilities and seized together with their owners, who risk criminal prosecution. It definitely does pay to refuse an offer to exchange our money for foreign currencies with tourists or currency speculators, no matter how attractive the offer.

U.S. SAID ENGAGED IN 'POLITICAL LAYING OF MINES'

[Jiri Cebrcvsky commentary]

[Text] Laying mines is a considerably risky business. It therefore follows that it is a hazardous occupation for those who do it. I am not, however, referring to this profession in the form of soldiers laying mines somewhere in the terrain but of political laying of mines on the whole planet. In this activity detonators or fuses are not put in place by hand but, as in the military context, political laying of mines is the preparation of explosions. The blasts are intended to break up and destroy even the little that has been built up in recent years in the area of important international agreements.

The power circles in the United States have taken up the laying of mines on the international scene, and they do it with such vehemence that it has startled even their most loyal satellite. An example of this is the statement by Washington that it intends to abandon the SALT II agreement, which the United States entered into with the Soviet Union but has not yet ratified. As is now customary -- and it would be surprising if it were otherwise -- Washington has used the worn out buck-passing practice of accusing the Soviet Union. Once again pseudo-arguments have appeared about alleged Soviet supremacy forcing the United States to stop upholding the SALT limits.

The second mine is the invention that the Soviet Union does not uphold every detail of the agreement and that it even violates it. The culmination of this mendacious campaign was the speech by Edward Rowney, the U.S. President's advisor for matters of arms control, who said, and I quote: President Reagan's decision to stop upholding the limits of the SALT II agreement will have a positive and healthy effect on Soviet-U.S. talks, which are a dead end. These words border on absurdity. After claiming that abandoning the SALT II agreement will represent progress in disarmament talks and -- thinking of the likely words of Reagan's advisor -- that peace and security will thus be strengthened, the very walls of the White House should blush in shame. It is clear to every sensible and rationally thinking person that the end of the SALT agreement is the beginning of another fervent and uncontrollable arms race fever, not just in terms of increasing the number of arms but, in particular, the introduction and installation of new and even more destructive weapons. This is the real reason the United States wants to back away from SALT.

The limit set by the agreement has been reached. The United States cannot increase the number of cruise missiles launched from aircraft without exceeding that limit. The Navy demands Trident missiles. For the Navy to get them without a violation of the agreement the existing Poseidon would have to be scrapped. The Air Force wants 200 MX missiles, but according to SALT it is entitled to only half that number. These are the reasons for the attack on SALT. The people against it are those obsessed by the thought that they will gain military supremacy over the Soviet Union and thus rule the world and circles closely linked with the octopus of the military industrial complex of the United States.

Reagan's government lays one mine after another for the sake of its interests. Its program to militarize space is in fact a mine aimed against the safety of the whole world. The SALT I agreement is a hot topic of discussion and already there are signs that Reagan would like to deal in the same way with the 1972 ABM agreement.

The attitude of Reagan's government to the SALT II agreement has not only startled U.S. allies, but also a number of their own politicians. Congressman Norman Dicks said that this week that President Reagan's decision is the worst decision he has even made. Senator Edward Kennedy expressed his view with similar words.

About 200 members of Congress have already signed a request that Reagan change his view on the strategic agreement between the Soviet Union and the United States. He described their attitude, however, as unwise and not useful, and Reagan's subordinates described all those who favor preserving SALT as traitors. They also responded with irritation to the reaction Reagan's decision caused in Western Europe.

Allies in the North Atlantic alliance are angry that the U.S. President, just as in a number of other cases, did not take their views into account at all. The United States has once again shown a catastrophic lack of feeling and consideration toward their partners. They have hit us below the waterline; it is clear that NATO is not an alliance of equals, as is being claimed, but is a tame poodle that the United States strokes when it does what is wanted and inconsiderately kicks aside when it does not -- these are only a few views stated by the West European press, reflecting the opinion of the ruling parties of the alliance. It is becoming clear that no NATO member except the United States wishes to violate the SALT II agreement. U.S. actions are becoming too much for West European states, and their governments are now looking for a way out of this affairs. The West German paper, FRANKFURTHER RUNDSCHAU, wrote: The announcement of U.S. intentions is shocking. People are asking what will follow: An end to the process of arms control or even cold war. During the birth of the SALT II agreement in 1979, the [West German] Foreign Ministry announced that without this agreement there would be a general impression that the United States had opted for confrontation and not for cooperation and peace. Has the U.S. decision now gone that far? These are worrying questions, and they are not being posed just by that West German newspaper.

This concern is heightened by another mine which was laid this week by the White House in the form of the 12th nuclear test in Nevada. It is true that this was not a mine aimed against an agreement because the United States does not want to agree to the Soviet moratorium. Its consequences, however, are no less dangerous. This mine was aimed against the continually growing movement of 100 million people who demand a ban on nuclear tests and in fact against all those who justifably see in the continuing tests in the Nevada dessert a hazardous step by Washington aimed at increasing world tension. Also, one important thing cannot be ignored: The charge in Nevada exploded after the world had been informed about the message of Mikhail Gorbachev, the highest Soviet party and state representative, to Javier Perez de Cuellar, United Nations secretary general. In his message Mikhail Gorbachev expressed readiness to meet immediately with Ronald Reagan in order to agree on an end to nuclear tests because such an agreement would be a practical step to nuclear disarmament.

The world noted the reply of the U.S. layer of mines. Just as before, it noted other equally dangerous smoldering U.S. bombs. It is possible to express the conviction that the number of those aware of how deep the chasm is between the words and deeds of the United States Government has risen.

COMMENTARY ON "NEW FRIENDSHIP" BETWEEN U.S., PRC

AU270402 Bratisalva ROLNICKE NOVINY in Slovak 17 May 86 p 5

["Fu"-signed commentary in the "What Is Talked About" column: "Yang Dezhi in the United States"]

[Text] Yang Dezhi, chief of the General Staff of the Chinese People's Liberation Army, made a brief visit to the Hawaiian islands, where the Japanese Navy had attacked the U.S. Navy in the past and where it is now harmoniously drilling side by side with the U.S. Navy in the provocative "Rimpac-86" maneuvers. The Hawaii command of the American Pacific 7th Fleet is one of the military installations which Dezhi inspected during his 2-week visit to the United States, a visit officially called a "friendly visit." In Washington he conducted negotiations with Caspar Weinberger, minister of war, as well as with Admiral William Crowe, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff of the U.S. Armed Forces. When he was still chief of staff of the Navy, the admiral had visited the PRC, in the same way that it was visited by all other members of the joint chiefs of staff. Their visits were now returned by chief Yang Dezhi, CPC Central Committee Politburo member.

According to a TASS announcement, his negotiations concentrated on the "Program of Military-Technical Cooperation." In this context Washington welcomed the guest from Beijing with good news: The Senate Foreign Relations Committee has recommended approving the sale of sets of electronic equipment -- one costing $10 million -- for the modernization of 55 Chinese fighter planes. According to all signs, the objections raised by die-hard advocates of the Taiwan regime will be alleviated by the talks conducted between the Beijing and Taipei transport airlines -- the first such talks between the PRC and the Taiwan authorities -- on the return of the enormous Boeing-747 plane taken by its pilot to Guangzhou on the Chinese mainland when he fled from the Chinese island.

Thus, the U.S. electronic equipment in Chinese fighter planes will probably become yet another "expression of endeavors for new friendship," among which Yang Dezhi, chief of the General Staff, also included in his trip through the United States.

HUSAK ISSUES ORDER OF DAY ON LIBERATION JUBILEE

AU270925 Prague RUDE PRAVO in Czech 9 May 86 pp 1,2

[Text] Prague (CTK) -- CSSR President Gustav Husak issued the following order on the 41st anniversary of the culmination of the Czechoslovak people's fight for national liberation and of Czechoslovakia's liberation by the Soviet Army:

Comrades members of the CSSR Armed Forces! World War II was concluded in Europe 41 years ago with the defeat of Hitlerite Germany. The culmination of the fight for national liberation and of the liberation of our fatherland by the Soviet Army brought national freedom and state independence to the Czechoslovak people.

We will never forget that the Soviet Union's share in the defeat of fascism was decisive. The victory in the Great Patriotic War was the result of the CPSU's immense political-organizational work, and proof of the Soviet people's moral political unity and the Soviet Army's combat strength, military skill, and mass heroism. The victory demonstrated for all the world to see the invincibility, viability, and supremacy of the socialist social system.

The heroic fight of the Soviet people roused millions for a mass fight against Nazi bondage. The influence and attractiveness of the ideas of socialism enormously increased. The victory of the national and democratic revolution in a number of countries led to the enthronement of people's power in them, and prepared the conditions for the birth of the socialist community.

The best sons and daughters of our peoples also contributed their honorable share in the defeat of fascism. They courageously fought on the fronts of World War II, particularly at the side of the Soviet Army, as well as in partisan units and underground organizations; they suffered and heroically died in concentration camps and Nazi prisons.

This struggle was headed from the very beginning by the CPCZ. It purposefully linked the national liberation struggle with the fight for the social liberation of the working people, and saw the future of our state in an alliance with the Soviet Union. Only thanks to this consistent policy was it possible for the Slovak national uprising and the May uprising of the Czech people to lead to a national and democratic revolution, which established prerequisites for building the state on new foundations and opened up for our people prospects of a socialist development.

The past 41 years have been a proud balance of victorious struggles and creative work of the Czechoslovak people led by the CPCZ. Despite all obstacles and difficulties, we have built the foundations of socialism and we have begun to build the developed socialist society. As was affirmed by the deliberations of the 17th CPCZ Congress, socialism has become deeply and lastingly rooted in our fatherland. Our society is politically firm, socially consolidated, economically strong, and culturally mature. It is based on the firm union of workers, farmers, and the working intelligentsia; and it is justified in confidently looking toward the future.

Our working people have begun fulfilling with initiative the tasks set by the 17th CPCZ Congress. The congress conclusions have been unanimously accepted also by the members of the CSSR Armed Forces. They express their unwavering support for the CPCZ policy by broadly developing political activity and working initiative and by further increasing their combat skill, their vigilance, and their constant combat readiness. They fully realize that it is only due to the firm base of the collective defense of socialism -- the Warsaw Pact -- and to the peace policy which is being enforced by the socialist states headed by the Soviet Union that peace has been maintained in Europe and that favorable conditions have been ensured for socialist construction.

Contrary to this policy, the United States and its NATO allies are further stepping up feverish armament, in the endeavor to acquire military-strategic supremacy over the Soviet Union and other states of the Warsaw Pact. They are developing new weapons of mass destruction and introducing them into armament; they are preparing to conduct a war in space; and they are creating hotbeds of tension and war conflicts in various parts of the world. Imperialism has escalated subversive activity against the socialist states. It is increasing its economic expansiveness and its extortion of the peoples. The reactionary forces are calling more and more often for a revision of the results of World War II.

It is impossible to watch this development passively. That is why we consider it our duty to strengthen the economic and political strength of our country, increase its defense ability, and consolidate the ties of alliance with the Soviet Union and the other countries of the socialist community. The CSSR Armed Forces will be constantly improving their combat and political preparedness and enhancing their combat readiness. Together with the armed forces of the Warsaw Pact member states, we will do everything to ensure the reliable defense of our fatherland, of socialism and peace.

Comrade members of the CSSR Armed Forces! I congratulate you on the 41st anniversary of the culmination of the Czechoslovak people's national liberation fight and of the liberation of our fatherland by the Soviet Army.

Guard vigilantly the immortal legacy of our peoples' joint antifascist fight and develop it further by consistently realizing the conclusions of the 17th CPCZ Congress! Enhance constantly your political vigilance, combat readiness, and all-round preparedness!

On the occasion of the 41st anniversary of the culmination of the Czechoslovak people's national liberation fight and of Czechoslovakia's liberation by the Soviet Army -- the CSSR's national holiday, I order that 20 artillery salvoes be fired on 8 May at 2000 hours in the CSSR's capital, Prague, and in the capital of Slovak SR, Bratislava.

Long live the CSSR's friendship, cooperation, and alliance with the Soviet Union and the other countries of the socialist community and may it strengthen; let the combat union of their armed forces further strengthen!

Long live the Czechoslovak working people and their leading force, the CPCZ, the organizer of the Czechoslovak people's fight for national freedom, the leading force in socialist construction, the guarantee of our peoples' happy future!

CHNOUPEK LETTER PRESSES FOR ECONOMIC SECURITY

AU041745 Bratislava PRAVDA in Slovak 31 May 86 pp 1, 5

[CTK report: "The CSSR's Standpoint on the Resolution of the 40th UN General Assembly Session: Comprehensive Perception of Economic Security"]

[Text] New York (CTK) -- The standpoint of the CSSR on the UN General Assembly's 40th session's resolution on international economic security, contained in a letter by Minister of Foreign Affairs Bohuslav Chnoupek, has been presented to UN Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar by Jaroslav Cesar, CSSR permanent representative to the UN in New York.

Czechoslovakia is convinced that the UN General Assembly resolution, together with the USSR Government's memorandum, will make it possible to assert a comprehensive perception of international economic security and ensure the convocation of a world congress on this question, as proposed by Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, at the 27th CPSU Congress.

The lack of real and, especially, of guaranteed economic security in interstate economic relations is one of the fundamental problems destabilizing the present-day world. At the same time, it is organically connected with the problem of also endangering security in the military and political spheres.

In the CSSR's view, the letter says further, one has to proceed from the fact that the key problems of the world economy are mutually interconnected. Their solution has to be approached comprehensively, because in the long run, partial solutions cannot be successful, as the developments to date affirm. It is necessary to systematically realize an intertwinning of economic and political factors. This also fully applies to the arms buildup and its negative consequences for normal development. The plans for the militarization of outer space aggravate this situation even more. The resolution of the global problems of the present requires new political thinking and approaches but, above all, enough political goodwill. It is necessary, in the first place, to further implement and develop the principles of peaceful coexistence in international economic relations.

Therefore, the CSSR is of the opinion that international economic security should rest on the adoption of a set of norms and measures aimed at radically improving relations between states and creating international guarantees of this security.

The following steps, particularly, could be of fundamental importance in achieving this security:

-- to demonstrate joint effort and the political will of all countries in tackling the basic problems that hinder the building of a comprehensive system of international security, including economic security;

-- to reduce military expenditure and use a portion of the resources released to tackle global problems facing mankind;

-- to eliminate the use of pressure and threat of force and all forms of discrimination from international relations;

-- to prohibit any state from using economic, technological, or financial superiority for economic and political pressure and blackmail, as well as for suppressing the sovereignty of other states, including their sovereignty over their own natural and other resources;

-- to adopt effective measures for a just and long-term arrangement of international currency and financial relations, including foreign indebtedness; to not permit existing foreign indebtedness to become the foundation of a new international mechanism of exploitation;

-- to expand and deepen international cooperation in utilizing the results of modern science and technology exclusively for peaceful purposes;

-- to create conditions that prevent the disruption of the international trade and financial system;

-- to combine efforts in the research and peaceful use of outer space in order to tackle the global problems facing civilization, such as, for example, protection of the environment.

The CSSR unequivocally supports the proposal to convene a world congress on problems of economic security, which should become an important milestone in tackling the whole set of urgent problems of international economic relations, as well as a stimulus for such a greatly needed development of international economic cooperation, the letter states.

BILAK ADDRESSES PRESOV PRE-ELECTION MEETING

AU301229 Prague RUDE PRAVO in Czech 20 May 86 p 3

[Report on speech delivered by Vasil Bilak, CPCZ Central Committee Presidium member and secretary, at the pre-election meeting held in Presov, Slovakia, on 19 May]

[Text] Vasil Bilak began by stressing the significance of the approaching elections to representative bodies, which are the expression of the ties binding the party and the people and the criteria of the way the CPCZ's policy reflects the interests of the broad strata of the population.

He devoted a large part of his statement to our reserves, which must be mobilized and used in the interests of consistently accomplishing the social and economic goals set by the 17th CPCZ Congress. In this context he stressed the need to enforce a new style of work on all management levels. Such an approach is demanded by life itself, by the growing demands on our work. To think in a new way does not mean that the way one thought yesterday was bad; but for today this is already insufficient. We must grasp the new tasks; we must not succumb to soulless pragmatism and stereotypes, while at the same time not underrating the acquired experience and knowledge which man has mastered in the course of the years. We see we have ministerial sectors, enterprises, and plants which still continue on the well-trodden and comfortable path.

We have large reserves in the consistent use of material and energy resources. Our national economy is still characterized by a rapid growth of the physical volume of capital assets in production and nonproduction spheres. The increase in manpower cannot keep up with this development. Today we find ourselves in a situation where many expensive machines are not being used. There has been talk for a long time about the intensive use of the results of science and technology. Therefore this is no "novelty." Today we must be primarily concerned with such innovations and changes in the division of work which will ensure the desirable increase in the national income with lower inputs in the production processes. Considering the size of our population, we have a quantitatively large scientific-technical base, and its equipment, with modern measuring and apparatus technology, is also improving. As regards inventions, we rank immediately behind the economically strongest states. However, in spite of certain partial succeses we still cannot speak of any radical turn in the implementation of the results of science and technology in our production sphere. The improvement of the quality of our products, particularly of those intended for export, continues to represent a large reserve in the creation of the Czechoslovak foreign trade balance. Simultaneously we do not want to give birth to illusions that we must reach world standards in everything and everywhere. We know very well that the quality of bread cannot conform to world standards because other countries have different preferences; but our bakers should not bake bread that tastes worse than the bread which our mothers used to bake. The thing is, our products must be of good quality, so that they can be profitably sold on the market. And if we are capable of producing something comparable to world standards, it should not be devalued by unsuitable wrappings and an overall trade inflexibility, as quite often happens to us.

We will not achieve quality without discipline; and discipline means awareness, the feeling of responsibility, the issue of personal honor. Those who do not have this in their blood must be brought to this by moral and administrative force. Those who do not yield good-quality work, impair the collective and the plant and should also bear the consequences -- both moral, and material consequences. If we proceed everywhere in such a consistent way, our conscientious and honest citizens will not succumb to hopelessness in view of the laggards and parasites. Because, in fact, it is no secret that we also have instances when slovenly people can find more understanding in various official places via their various acquaintances, than an honest citizen. We will hardly get rid of such malpractices if we do not succeed in establishing an atmosphere of critical demands in the collectives, in which parasites would find it difficult to breath. A far greater role must be played in this by the appropriate social organizations, too, such as the Revolutionary Trade Union movement (ROH), the Socialist Youth Union (SSM), and other organizations. The example of personal behavior is irreplaceable. This applies to the leading staff, to teachers and foremen, but also to parents in the rearing of their own children. Youth in particular reacts very sensitively to a personal example, shaping its own notions of life accordingly. What can a young person become, if his father brags at home how clever he is not to work, while receiving a higher remuneration than his honest colleagues?

Comrade Bilak then dealt with the international situation. He pointed out how imperialism -- in its endeavor to reverse the historical development in its own favor -- is placing an increasingly frank emphasis on force and on interference in the affairs of free peoples, on state terrorism. The militarist circles, above all in the United States, are rejecting the Soviet peace proposals, continuing their feverish armament on earth and preparing for the so-called "star wars." In this context Comrade Bilak spoke about the danger threatening world peace from the new systems of arms of mass destruction, which enhance the risk of the unforseeable and of chance.

The attack waged by international imperialism against socialism and the world revolutionary process is a frontal and comprehensive attack. The USSR and the socialist community remain the main target of its strategic battle. One proceeds from the logic that if communism is to be destroyed, as the American president proclaims, then it must be first destroyed where it holds the strongest positions. This is a matter of social revanche. Certain Western states do not like to hear the word revanche; they object that they recognize the valid frontiers, and have no territorial demands. But revanchism is not only this. When Bonn so willingly accepted the American missiles, was this not in an endeavor to get revenge for World War II which they had lost? When the West German chancellor attends a rally of the Sudeten Germans' state cooperative, which does not conceal its demands toward the CSSR, this is no longer merely an expression of the nostalgic sentiments of a few Sudeten Tuetons, or an expansion of the folkloristic show -- it is a dangerous playing with fire.

Vasil Bilak recalled the cynicism with which the political figures and propaganda in certain NATO states abused the tragic event in the Soviet nuclear plant in Chernobyl for political aims. This showed a clear intention to cast doubts not only on the Soviet program of building nuclear plants, but also on the USSR's political system and peace policy. One somehow passed over, without noticing it, the important conclusion which any logically thinking person must draw after this kind of event: "Since it is so difficult to eliminate the consequences caused by a reactor, then what would the catastrophe be like to which the explosions of atomic bombs would lead?"

In the next part of his speech V. Bilak pointed out the aggressive nature of the U.S. policy toward young countries with a progressive regime. The policy of American expansion is to be served by the doctrine of neoglobalism. With its help one intends to justify the right to export counterrevolution and to overthrow those legitimate governments which fail to correspond to the U.S. criteria only because they have not subordinated themselves to the American diktat.

The United States has declared a fight against terrorism in the interests of implementing its policy of state terrorism as a form of expansionism and hegemonism. In this way the military political superpower goals overlap the interests of the monopolies, with whose help imperialism is absorbing the riches of young developing countries, shifting to them the chaos of its own ecoomy.

Disregarding the dangerous development in the world, Vasil Bilak stated, we continue to hold the opinion that in the current complicated period, too, there is no place for a psychology of pessimism and hopelessness. The forces of international imperialism and reaction are not omnipotent. Against them stands the enormous strength of the socialist states and of the worldwide antiwar movement which, in a concordant course, are capable of frustrating the adventurous plans of militarist forces.

The 27th CPSU Congress has formulated a clearcut and long-term peace program. Our own congress has fully identified itself with it, orienting our entire party and all Czechoslovak people toward making our contribution to this joint historic struggle as large as possible.

JAKES OUTLINES DEMANDS OF 'INTENSIFICATION'

[Report on speech by Milos Jakes, member of the Presidium and secretary of the CPCZ Central Committee, at a nationwide aktiv of the Czechoslovak Scientific and Technical Society in Prague 5 June, dedicated to the tasks of the society arising from the 17th CPCZ Congress]

[Excerpts] The increasingly fuller satisfaction of the material and cultural needs of the people is possible only by way of intensification, especially by accelerating the practical application of the results of science and technology and mobilizing all untapped potentials.

The results achieved in the first 5 months of the year bear out that the volume indicators of the plan are being fulfilled, on the whole. What is serious, however, is that the qualitative indicators -- labor productivity, adjusted labor value added, profit, reduction in the material-intensiveness and energy-intensiveness of production, product quality, and efficiency of foreign exchange -- are not being fulfilled everywhere. These are the tasks that are crucial for intensification.

Another persisting serious problem is the irregularity of production, that is, the fact that a number of enterprises do not fulfill the plan. This causes difficulties, especially in supplier-user relations. This suggests that although the conclusions of the congress receive verbal acknowledgment and support, this does not always find practical expression. There is also an endeavor to transfer the fulfillment of the requirements of accelerating the socioeconomic development to the subsequent years of the Eighth 5-Year Plan, to water down the tasks of the plan. to be smart. We must reject such approaches.

We keep coming across excessive demands for investments, materials, energy, manpower, wages, and imports. All of this bears out that many enterprises and plants are slow in changing old approaches from the era of extensive development.

Although everyone regards intensification as the right policy and the only way of fulfilling the tasks of the congress, it will not gain ground automatically. It is not a comfortable path, but it is the only path leading forward. Its gaining ground requires a struggle, a change in the mode of thinking, and a change in approaching tasks. This is the foremost political task of today.

We must concentrate our efforts primarily on achieving this year a 3.5 percent growth of national income and on making sure that 92 percent of this growth are accounted for by a rise in labor productivity. This must be brought about by reducing production input and making better use of materials and energy, which should ensure 40 percent of the planned increase in national income in the Eighth 5-Year Plan, that is, Kcs47 billion.

We must take more vigorous steps to accelerate the practical application of the results of science and technology. We must frankly admit that we cannot be satisfied with the approaches and results thus far. We appreciate that this path is perceived as essential and that party agencies and social organizations increasingly focus attention on the fulfillment of these tasks. However, considerable room for improvement exists in their approach to the implementation of these tasks. There continues to be an endeavor to take old, explored paths and to shun possible risks.

The Comprehensive Program of Scientific-Technical Progress of CEMA countries and our long-term programs of economic and scientific-technical cooperation up to the year 2000, especially the program concluded with the Soviet Union, constitute a new factor of historic importance. Our party views active participation in the implementation of this program as one of the fundamental prerequisites of the further successful development of socialism. Utmost attention is being devoted to ensuring our participation in its implementation and I am convinced that the Scientific and Technical Society, too, will find its place in this respect.

The prerequisite of accelerating socioeconomic development is that we ensure that the economic mechanism, the system of management, planning, organizational structures, and economic instruments correspond to the needs of intensification, that the implementation of the results of science and technology becomes the backbone of the plan, and that the tasks of the [CEMA] comprehensive program and of the state target and scientific-technical programs move to the center of attention of managerial agencies. The fulfillment of these tasks must have priority in all ministries, economic production units, and enterprises. What matters is the creation of scope for such economic and social pressure on research and manufacturing that the fulfillment of their planned tasks becomes impossible without accelerating the development of science and technology and without their practical application. The plan must play the role of competition and place on the enterprises demanding requirements in terms of technical standards, quality, and production costs. A number of steps in this direction have already been taken, but a great deal remains to be improved in principle. It must not be profitable for anyone to produce goods of a low technical level and of poor quality. We are interested in the final results on the basis of genuine economic accountability [khozraschet], in making the earnings of collectives and individuals dependent on the efficiency of their work. What matters is the consistent application everywhere of remuneration according to work results. A contribution to this is made by the implementation of the ZEUMS project [program of raising the economic effectiveness of the wage system], by the application of the brigade method of organizing labor and remuneration, and by the struggle against surviving egalitarianism.

I am discussing these issues, which were also stressed at the Eighth Session of the CPCZ Central Committee, because we have not made sufficient headway in this respect, M. Jakes said.

A considerable portion of new technology is effected by way of capital investment. In contrast to new construction. which has been the prevailing form of investment thus far, investment policy in industry, agriculture, and the building industry will now be oriented toward modernization and retooling projects. These targets are laid down in the Eighth 5-Year Plan. We must more speedily overcome shortcomings in investment policy, which are often caused by the low technical standard of designs, construction delays due to the great number of projects simultaneously under construction, cost overruns, and the failure to achieve projected parameters. A number of causes of these shortcomings also lies in the work of designers and, of course, also in the work of builders and suppliers of technology. However, one cannot speak of modernization when old machinery is replaced by new machinery of the same technical standard and performance. Order must also be introduced in the complicated regulations.

Struggle for top quality must be in the forefront of our attention. This cannot be accomplished without science and technology. Raising quality must be regarded by all of us not only as a fundamental economic and technical issue, but also as a political and, I would say, even a moral issue. We can on no account be satisfied with the existing state of affairs.

The low quality of products is reflected in their prices and, consequently, in the effectiveness of foreign trade, to say nothing of the political harm, considerable damages paid for faulty products, and the discontent of our customers and domestic consumers.

We are preparing new measures to improve quality control. They will concern quality rating as well as incentives and price markdowns in the event of substandard quality. The Bureau of Standards and Measurements must also improve its work. Demands on the work of testing laboratories will be raised and technical control will be improved. An end must be put to liberalism in rating the quality of products. We must achieve a situation in which it becomes a matter of honor that not a single poor quality product leaves the factory gate.

The tasks laid down by the 17th congress are demanding. The process of acceleration must not be put off. All of this requires active and quality work, initiative, struggle against mediocrity and complacency, and dissatisfaction with past achievements. Everything depends on people, on their approach to their duties, on their responsibility

The Scientific and Technical Society with its more than 600,000 members can play an important role in the efforts to fulfill the conclusions of the 17th congress. In the name of the party's Central Committee and the Central Committee delegation present here, I would like to express the conviction that this will be the case.

SPD'S HIERSEMANN SATISFIED WITH MEETINGS

AU040930 East Berlin NEUES DEUTSCHLAND in German 30 May 86 p 5

[Text] Munich (ADN) -- Karl-Heinz Hiersemann, deputy chairman of the SPD group in the Bavarian parliament, expressed his satisfaction with the outcome of his visit to the GDR and of his talks with the GDR party-state leadership. On Wednesday [29 May] talking to journalists in Munich, Hiersemann described the talks, which centered on the joint concern to secure peace, as very frank and businesslike. He underscored Erich Honecker's assertion that the international situation has been considerably exacerbated as a result of the U.S. SDI project and the collaboration of the FRG on the U.S. plans for the militarization of outer space. It is now and will be the special task of the two German states to make their contribution to prevent war and secure peace.

Discussing the talks between SPD and SED on establishing a zone free from chemical weapons in central Europe, the Bavarian politician requested the federal government to open official negotiations on this topic with the GDR Government. Very soon, at the same time, he denounced the readiness, recently announced by the federal government in the NATO Council, to store U.S. binary chemical weapons in the FRG.

Hiersemann expressed the hope that the talks between the SPD and SED leaderships about a zone free from nuclear weapons in central Europe will be crowned with success. He emphatically deplored that the agreement on environmental protection between the FRG and the GDR that is already ripe for signing could not yet be validated because of formal considerations of the federal government. This is why he welcomes the GDR's readiness to form a joint commission to check the remaining problems and search for joint solutions.

The Bavarian politician stressed the readiness of Erich Honecker and of leading SED politicians for a greater measure of international cooperation, for an exchange of experiences and for more security in the nuclear power sector. He stated that he found full understanding in the GDR for his initiative to exchange GDR and Bavarian economic delegations. A first meeting of such delegations could take place as early as this November, after the necessary bilateral preparatory work.

TISCH MEETS WITH FRG TRADE UNION DELEGATION

[Test] Berlin, 12 Jun (ADN) -- The contribution of the trade unions toward the preservation of peace on the earth and in space was at the center of an exchange of views for which Harry Tisch, chairman of the National Executive of the FDGB, the GDR trade union association, received a delegation of the main executive of the Leather Trade Union in the West German DGB led by Werner Dick, its first chairman, on Thursday in Berlin. Information was exchanged on the representation of trade union interests in different social orders. The trade unionists from the FRG are staying in the GDR at the invitation of the Industrial Trade Union of Textiles, Clothing and Leather of the FDGB.

Both sides agreed that resolute backing and cooperation for the avoidance of the danger of a nuclear war is the most important task in trade union activity at present. It is a matter of preventing the militarization of space and of stopping nuclear tests as the first step toward halting the nuclear arms race.

In this connection, Harry Tisch underlined the far-reaching significance of the appeal of the Warsaw Pact states to the NATO and European countries to reduce armed forces and conventional weapons in Europe. The documents ratified at Budapest and the proposals contained therein proved anew the constructive attitude and readiness to negotiate of the socialist countries.

In the further course of the meeting, Harry Tisch explained to the guests the work of FDGB members toward the realization of the decisions of the 11th SED Congress and the extensive rights and duties of the FDGB in the further formation of the advanced socialist society. He made clear the consistent continuation of the unity of economic and social policy.

As a strong force in socialist democracy, the FDGB works in particular with socialist competition toward applying the modern technologies to the well-being of people even more effectively, on the basis of the advantages of socialism.

Werner Dick gave details of the conditions in the struggle of the unions of the DGB as presented at the 13th Ordinary DGB Congress, especially in the deynote speech by Ernst Breit. In this connection, he explained the decisions of the DGB congress which were directed toward the strengthening of the unified trade union, the struggle against mass unemployment and social cuts, and the mobilization for work toward peace.

Taking part in the conversation were Werner Heilemann, member of the Presidium and secretary of the National Executive Council of the FDGB, and Annelie Unger, chairwoman of the National Executive Council of the Industrial Trade Union of Textiles, Clothing and Leather. On behalf of the DGB delegation, Willi Fessler, area director of the Leather Trade Union in the Bavaria area, and Hein-Custav Pfeiffer, chairman of the main committee of the Leather Trade Union and chairman of the Works Council of the Salamander plant, were also present.

STOPH RECEIVES POLAND'S GORYWODA FOR TALKS

AU041249 East Berlin NEUES DEUTSCHLAND in German 29 May 86 pp 1-2

[Text] Berlin (ADN) -- On Wednesday [28 May] Willi Stoph, GDR Council of Ministers chairman, received Manfred Gorywoda, deputy chairman of the Council of Ministers and chairman of the Planning Commission of the Council of Ministers of the PPR, who is in the GDR for economic consultations.

At the friendly meeting, the partners in the talk expressed their satisfaction that the relations between both states are successfully further developing in all fields of social life. This applies in particular to economic cooperation. The high growth rates of the mutual exchange of goods and the deepening of the cooperation in science, technology, and production is characteristic of that, it was stated.

Decisive stimuli for the high level of cooperation emanated from the basic agreements concluded by Erich Honecker, SED Central Committee general secretary and GDR State Council chairman, and Wojciech Jaruzelski, first secretary of the PZPR Central Committee and chairman of the PPR State Council. The long-term program of developing cooperation between the GDR and the PPR in the field of science, technology, and production through to the year 2000 is of great significance for continuing the dynamism in economic relations, they stated.

Both politicians stressed that the strengthening of the unity and cohesion of the community of socialist states and the strengthening of socialism is of great significance for preserving peace and security in Europe, as well as throughout the world in view of the continued striving of the United States and the most aggressive circles of NATO for military superiority.

Proceeding from the agreements of both party and state leaderships, as well as in agreement with the results of the economic meeting of the CEMA countries on a highest level, the main goal is to even more strongly concentrate the cooperation of both countries on the tasks stipulated in the Comprehensive Program of the Scientific-Technological Progress of the CEMA Member Countries Through to the Year 2000.

Willi Stoph awarded Manfred Gorywoda the order "Star of International Friendship" in gold on behalf of the GDR State Council chairman; the order was bestowed in recognition of his great merits for deepening the fraternal relations between the GDR and the PPR. In cordial words, the Polish guest expressed thanks for this high honor and reaffirmed that he will use all his strength for further prosperous cooperation between both fraternally allied states and peoples to the mutual benefit.

The talk was attended by Gerhard Schuerer, deputy chairman of the Council of Ministers and chairman of the State Planning Commission. Also present was Janusz Obodowski, PPR ambassador to the GDR.

HONECKER SENDS GREETINGS TO CONFERENCE ON S. AFRICA

[Text] Berlin, 16 Jun (ADN) -- The immediate removal of apartheid as the main cause of the conflict in southern Africa is demanded in a greetings addressed by Erich Honecker to the world conference of the United Nations for sanctions against racist South Africa in Paris. The peoples are hoping that the conference will make an effective contribution toward this. In view of the dangerous development in southern Africa great importance is attached to the conference.

Elsewhere it is noted: "The repeated acts of open aggression and of state terrorism against sovereign African states and the brutal oppression of the South African and Namibian peoples exemplify the increasing threat from the racist apartheid system to peace, and not only in southern Africa."

The GDR condemns most resolutely the aggressive policy of destabilization of the apartheid regime against neighbouring African states, the illegal occupation of Namibia and the escalation of terror at home.

It calls for the immediate stop to the political, economic, and military collaboration of imperialist states and international monopolies with the racist regime. Bonding and effective sanctions against South Africa, according to Article 7 of the United Nations Charter were more urgent than ever. True to the principles of its socialist foreign policy, the GDR stands firmly by the side of the peoples of South Africa and Namibia, of the African National Congress and the South-West African People's Organization fighting for their freedom.

"May your conference help to reliably safeguard peace and security for the peoples in southern Africa and in all parts of the world," the letter concludes.

[Text] Berlin, 11 Jun (ADN) -- GDR Deputy Foreign Minister Kurt Nier received the Finnish Foreign Ministry's CSCE representative Joel Pekuri, who is in Berlin, today for consultations on questions relating to the CSCE follow-up conference in Vienna.

In the talk, Kurt Nier stressed that the 11th SED Congress had attributed great importance to the process of security and cooperation in Europe introduced by the Helsinki conference. From the day of the signing, the GDR's activities have been directed at the practical realization of the principles and recommendations of the CSCE Final Act. It is now necessary to resolutely use the possibilities provided by the CSCE process to reduce military confrontation in Europe and to further expand cooperation between the conference's participant states.

The Budapest appeal of the Warsaw Pact's Political Consultative Committee pointed the way for this.

Kurt Nier and Joel Pekuri agreed in assessing the Helsinki Final Act and the entire European process built on it as an important basis for shaping East-West relations in the nuclear age. In this connection, they regretted that no final document was adopted at the Bern meeting of experts on human contacts because of the negative attitude of the United States. The partners in the talks affirmed their states' firm desire to contribute toward a constructive course and substantial results at the Vienna follow-up meeting of the CSCE states beginning 4 November.

[Excerpt] Paris, 6 Jun (ADN) -- The fourth meeting between representatives of the GDR and France was opened on Friday in Paris at the Palace of the French Senate. The topic of the 2-day meeting, for which the France-GDR Friendship Committee is the host, is the further development of bilateral relations. Professor Georges Castellan, president of the committee, stated at the opening that the top-ranking aim was peace in Europe and in the world. The overwhelming majority of the French people favor equal security at the lowest possible level of armaments. Dialogue and exchange with all nations, and especially with the GDR, are among the most important principles of the committee. Now it is a matter of "getting to know one another better, and cooperating better, in order to live together better."

Professor Dr Reinhold, member of the SED Central Committee, who is leading the GDR delegation, said that there is nothing more important in our times than the preservation of peace and the prevention of a nuclear inferno. Peace can only be secured today not by working against one another, but with one another, not through confrontation, but only through cooperation. With regard to the policy of dialogue, relations between the GDR and France, which have developed well in recent years, have an important role to play.

FISCHER RECEIVES U.S. PEACE SOCIETY MEMBERS

[Text] Berlin, 13 Jun3 (ADN) -- GDR Foreign Mininster Oskar Fischer on Friday received a delegation of "The International House," the international association, led by its prsident, Gordon W. Evans. The delegation of this society founded in 1924 by John D. Rockefeller with its base in New York, which devotes itself to the promotion of international understanding, stayed for a while in the GDR.

Oskar Fischer explained the peace policy of the GDR and stressed the continuation of the policy of dialogue and of the creation of a coalition of reason with all forces of the world interested in peace. He pointed out that in the interests of the survival of mankind it is an urgent requirement of the day to end the arms race on the earth and not to permit it in space. Together with their allies, the GDR has just taken up the initiative again in Budapest to put a stop to the arms race and smooth the way towards arms limitation and disarmament.

In the nuclear age, there is no acceptable alternative to peaceful coexistence between states with different social orders. The states must learn to exist peacefully with one another and to solve all the problems at the negotiating table by political means. In this respect, the GDR is doing everything within its powers to deliver a maximum contribution to the securing of peace and the amelioration of the international situation. The criterion for this is practical deeds.

President Gordon W. Evans thanks the foreign minister of the GDR for his remarks and stated that the society represented by him has set itself the task of spreading ideas of peace and international understanding worldwide and working in their spirit.

[Text] Berlin, 12 Jun -- GDR Foreign Minister Oskar Fischer on Thursday received a delegation from the Swedish "Great Peace Trip" for a friendly conversation. The representatives of the Swedish peace movement, who have taken up an invitation from the president of the GDR Peace Council, are acquainting themselves with the aims of the GDR peace movement.

Fischer referred to the agreement of the GDR's state policy with the concern of all social forces in the country to do everything in order that a peaceful prospect be secured for mankind. The latest Budapest session of the political Consultative Committee of Warsaw Pact states, whose results the minister explained, again made apparent that peace emanates from socialism. The socialist states are strengthening their efforts to avert the disaster of a nuclear war and to change the international situation for the better.

The comprehensive program for eliminating nuclear, conventional, and chemical weapons and the concrete proposals in this connection are meeting with ever-broader international support. The prospect of a world free of nuclear weapons encouraged all who dedicated themselves to reason and realism and spurred on their activities.

The parties to the conversation agareed that there is no alternative to peace, life, and getting along with one another. Stopping the arms race and preventing its extension into space are tasks to which the Europeans especially can contribute greatly.

Oskar Fischer paid tribute to the humanist concern of the "Great Peace Trip" and expressed his conviction that the breakthrough will be assisted by the force of the people with political reason.

HONECKER ADDRESSES CENTRAL DEMOCRATIC BLOC

[Excerpts] Berlin, 13 Jun (ADN) -- Under the chairmanship of Erich Honecker, general secretary of the SED Central Committee and chairman of the GDR Council of State, the Central Democratic Bloc of parties and mass organizations met on Friday. On the agenda was the setting up of GDR state organs after the elections to the People's Chamber, the Berlin City Assembly and the bezirk assemblies.

Present were Joachim Herrmann, member of the Politburo and secretary of the SED Central Committee, and Karl Vogel, department head of the SED Central Committee; and Harry Tisch, chairman of the FDGB National Executive.

The elections on 8 June, Erich Honecker emphasized, were an overwhelming endorsement of the uncompromising continuation of the policy for the welfare of the people, the strengthening of socialism and the safeguarding of peace, as resolved by the 11th SED Congress. The resolutions of the 11th SED Congress were declared by the parties and mass organizations united in the National Front as their concern, as their election program. They assume that it will now become the government program.

Everybody will give his best at his place of work and residence, in every sphere of life in order to link, on the path of the proven unity of economic and social policy, scientific-technological progress still more effectively with production, to produce through steadily greater performances a still greater national income and -- commensurate with the nature of socialism -- to translate it into the social policy for the country. Thus we begin to continue our great common work, the advanced socialist society in the GDR.

The representatives of the Central Democrative Bloc of parties and mass organizations declared on behalf of their millions of members the full assent to the results of the Budapest meeting of the Warsaw Pact Political Consultative Committee member-states. Once more they are giving peace a big chance, which must not be missed in the vital interest of mankind, it was said. All the forces have to be deployed so that the appeal of the Warsaw Pact member-states to the member states of NATO and all European countries, to reduce the armed forces and conventional armaments in Europe, will make peace for all the peoples on this continent and for the peoples of the whole world more secure. The clear mandate of the citizens for the preservation of peace, the averting of a nuclear inferno, give great weight to the GDR's address at the session in Budapest, Erich Honecker said. The GDR continues, as decided by the 11th SED Congress and as expressed by the vote for the condidates of the National Front, the policy of businesslike dialogue and cooperation for a change to the better in international relations.

Erich Honecker thanked the members of the friendly parties, all the mass organizations belonging to the National Front, as well as the tens of thousands of election helpers for their active political work in the preparation and execution of the elections. When at its 11th congress the SED noted that the alliance relations between the working class and all other classes and strata had deepened and the political-moral unity of the people had consolidated further, the decision on 8 June was convincing proof of it. Every citizen, irrespective of his social background, his ideology and his religious faith, is to have in the future every opportunity acitvely to help in solving social concerns for the benefit of the whole and thus his own benefit.

HONECKER ANSWERS QUESTIONS IN KARL-MARX-STADT

AU100942 [Editorial Report] East Berlin NEUES DEUTSCHLAND in German on 6 June on pages 3-4 carries an approximately 3,400-word report on a meeting between Erich Honecker, SED Central Committee general secretary and GDR State Council chairman, and voters in the Harlass foundry, in which 50 working people from 14 enterprises and institutions of Karl-Marx-Stadt participated and had an opportunity to ask him questions.

According to the report, in answering the first three questions Honecker dealt with the successful work of the Harlass foundry, the GDR's competitiveness on an international basis, in particular concerning microelectronics, and the economic policy of the GDR, and pointed out: "We want to keep our position among the 10 leading industrial states."

Answering a question on the prospects for peace, from brigade leader Wolfgang Ulbricht, Honecker reportedly stressed that "now the opportunity must be taken everywhere to safeguard peace through deeds." In answering the next question addressed to him, Erich Honecker speaks of the successful work done in the past years in the economic and social sectors and the program of the 11th SED Congress.

According to the paper, in reply to a final question on the prospects of "the course of the main task" in view of the "obvious aggravation" of the international situation, Erich Honecker: "First referred to the fact that heads of states and other responsible politicians with whom he had conducted informative, intensive talks during visits in foreign countries or in the GDR had spoken in favor of the most urgent requirement of the present -- the preservation of peace. The indispensable will of the peoples to let the desire for peace become reality has always been felt for in world politics and in the world, word and deed must be in agreement.

However, one cannot but state that in the United Nations, for instance, the United States vetoed the Soviet Union's serious steps toward armament limitation and disarmament. But within the leading circles in the United States itself, Erich Honecker stated, there is a growing view that Reagan's policy is madness, that it adversely affects the United States.

"He went on to say that a strong socialist GDR has a stabilizing effect for peace in the center of Europe. One cannot think of a world without the GDR, it is fortunate that the GDR exists. He has often seen that confirmed. The GDR always aims to have good relations of peaceful coexistence with the most diverse states in the world, such as with Austria, with north European countries, and above all also with Sweden, which he will visit in the near future. Such a policy of peaceful coexistence promotes advantageous cooperation and promotes peace. This also marked his talks in Japan with the emperor of the country. In Italy, peace and cooperation were at the center of attention, as was the case during his official visits to Mexico, Greece, and Yugoslavia.

"Erich Honecker stated that one could draw the conclusions that there is the possibility of stopping the course toward a nuclear inferno. The absolute majority of the peoples of all countries agree with this opinion.

"As Erich Honecker went on to say in reply to the question asked, it is possible and necessary to implement the comprehensive program of the party congress, and thus guarantee the unity of economic and social policy. Of course, the increased defense readiness of the GDR is also necessary in view of the international situation. The National People's Army, together with its comrades-in-arms, the Soviet Union and the other socialist countries, must be in a position to be vigilant for peace. It must be explained to those opposing peace that they risk their own destruction.

"Economy, science, and technology remain our main field of strengthening socialism. The slogan that is found everywhere at workplaces in enterprises -- 'The Stronger Socialism, the Safer Peace' -- is and remains correct."

DEFENSE MINISTRY CONFERENCE ON PARTY CONGRESS

[Text] Berlin (ADN) -- Tasks related to the creative implementation of the decisions of the 11th SED Congress were the subject of a 2-day conference at the National Defense Ministry which concluded on Thursday [29 May].

The conference was directed by Army General Heinz Kessler, member of the SED Central Committee Politburo and minister of national defense. Generals, admirals, and officers expressed the view that in view of the people's elections on 8 June it is important for the Communists to throughly explain the party congress decisions to all Army members and border soldiers and to focus their initiatives and performances on the scrupulous fulfillment of the class assignment. In the National People's Army, the GDR border troops, and in civil defense, with the elan of the party congress, it is important in the second half of the training year to even more broadly tap the qualitative sources of growth for a high fighting strength, combat readiness, and readiness for action in the interest of securing peace.

Guenter Mittag, member of the Politburo and secretary of the SED Central Committee, spoke about problems related to implementing the decisions of the 11th SED Congress, particularly the economic strategy up to the year 2000. The party congress has set new and higher standards which are contained in a concentrated manner in the Central Committee report, presented by Erich Honecker, general secretary of the SED Central Committee.

It is important to make this fundamental orientation the basis of work on all questions,the speaker stressed, and the study of the documents must be directly linked to the struggle to implement the decisions adopted by the Communists at their supreme forum. In so doing, one must proceed form the fact that the curse of the unity of economic and social policy has given the GDR its image of a politically stable, economically capable, and dynamically developing state with an education system which meets all requirements of the present and future, with a high standard of science and culture, and with marked social achievements. It has become very clearly what real socialism is, he stated.

To continue this proven course, it is of basic importance that, for this end, Erich Honecker has founded the economic strategy with a view to the year 2000.

Thus the path of intensively expanded reporduction is becoming the determinant basis of a dynamic performance increase. This process is taking place in close cooperation with the USSR.

Kurt Hager, member of the Politburo and secretary of the SED Central Committee, explained the strategy and tactics for the further fashioning of the developed socialist society. He proceeded from the assertion of the SED CEntral Committee general secretary, according to which the party congress decisions initiated a qualitatively new stage of social development. In this context the speaker particularly stressed the role of the development of the personality of all members of society. The richer the individuality of socialist society's members, the richer will the society itself become, and with its advancement it is creating increasingly more favorable conditions toward this end.

The educational and cultural standard of the individual, his readiness for high performance and creataive work, his high socialist awareness, a class-minded attitude, as well as socialist moral qualities and attitudes, are acquiring an increasing significance, the speaker said.

All social classes and strata in the GDR are basically pursuing common objectives from which emerges the moral-political unity of the people. This also becomes evident in the honorary service of the soldiers of the NVA and GDR border troops fro the protection of socialism and the defense of peace.

General Lieutenant Nikolai Moiseyev, member of the Military Council and chief of the political administration of the Group of Soviet Armed Forces in Germany, gave an account of the results and experiences accumulated in evaluating the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress in the group.

KOTAI, BARITY ON GORBACHEV VISIT, PACT MEETING

["Conversation" on CPSU General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev's 8-9 June visit to Hungary and the 10-11 June Warsaw Pact meeting in Budapest presented by unidentified studio announcer, with Geza Kotai, director of the MSZMP Central Committee's Foreign Affairs Department, and Miklos Barity, deputy minister of foreign affairs and current general secretary of the Warsaw Pact; from "The Week" program -- live or recorded]

[Text] [Announcer] History and daily politics, which in retrospect become history, can be seen with some simplification as the process of alternating stops and starts, periods of prolonged stagnation followed by a rush of events. The sudden spurts are at times the result of deliberate initiatives. Last week the world was witness to such an initiative from Budapest. While it follows from its nature there is by no means everywhere a positive reaction to the communique of the Warsaw Pact Political Consultative Committee and to the appeal it addressed to NATO, one thing is sure: There is a certain acceleration of world political processes. As you will remember, prior to the multilateral consultation, Mikhail Gorbachev was our guest for 1 and 1/2 days. We thought that we would try to give you first-hand information about both events.

A guest of our studio is Geza Kotai, director of the MSZMP Central Committee's Foreign Affairs Department, who was present throughout the discussions of Janos Kadar and Mikhail Gorbahcev. Our studio's other guest is Miklos Barity, deputy minister of foreign affairs, who worked at the consultation of the general and first secretaries as the current general secretary of the Warsaw Pact.

Comrade Kotai, perhaps we could begin the conversation by asking how Hungerian-Soviet relations in general can be evaluated at this moment?

[Kotai] As very positive. The situation is that we want to introduce new qualities into our cooperation. We are encouraged to do so by our internal socialist development, and we are forced to do so by the world political and economic situation. Politically the conditions are right for this new-quality cooperation. The socialist countries are independent states with independent statehood, with serious achievements in socialist construction attained in their own right. At the same time, they are connected -- we Hungary are connected with the Soviet Union -- with the other socialist countries by the identity of our ideas and our basic objectives and endeavors. Well, as to the new quality in the field of politics, I could mention the Sofia Political Consultative Committee, and I could mention the Prague meeting of our leaders after the Soviet-U.S. summit, and now in Budapest. It will, however, be the task of my colleague Miklos Barity to speak about this.

In the economy the conditions exist or they can be created. What we mean by this that in the conventional, classical sense, in economic relations, that is in goods-exchange turnover, the natural framework has evolved for the most part. Even here, of course, we must look for the reserves. We can no longer multiply them now. Well, the R51 billion in 5 years of trade with the Soviet Union speaks for itself I think. We are thinking of the further development of joint production ventures, direct links between enterprises, the creation of joint enterprises and similar forms. In this the Soviet Union is a willing and initiative-taking partner to us. So that is why I say, with justification, that our relations are to be assessed as very positive.

[Announcer] I would put it to you that naturally it has never been a matter of indifference what our allies, first and foremost the leaders of the USSR, think about us. In recent years, however, ever since Hungary has undeniably been making efforts to change a lot of things in the former practice, that is to say we have a course of reforms, as we used to say, it is all the more important for us to know whether the USSR's leaders take cognizance of this fact, follow our efforts with sympathy -- perhaps with interest -- or if they have any antipathies.

[Kotai] The question is very justified; but the answer is complicated and complex. Nevertheless, I will begin with what Comrade Gorbachev wrote to the workers of the Lenin metallurgical works. He said that there is a lot of similarity between the practices of Hungary and the USSR, between our 13th and the CPSU's 27th Congresses. It would be superfluous here to ask, what as a matter of fact in the West they are fond of asking: Who imitates whom; who follows whom? I would in fact compare not only the 13th and 27th congresses, but also the 13th congress and the so-called April plenum, which came barely a month after our congress. When we talk about this, however, it must be mentioned that the roots go further back in time. What we have in common is that both parties try to weigh their possibilities realistically and soberly, both the domestic and the international ones. They formulate their objectives, their endeavors, on the basis of these, and they seek a system of means appropriate to their realization. Now, where there is a similarity in our affairs, there we find similar or maybe indentical solutions. Where there is a difference -- because there obviously is a difference between the two countries -- dissimilarities exist. It is, however, essential in my opinion that the ways of seeing and approaching things are identical or very similar; we have come closer to one another, even closer, I should say, and in the USSR they look on our path-seeking with a very great sympathy.

[Announcer] You have virtually answered my next question, but I will still put it to you, if for no other reason that that it should be evident also from the question that this is a relationship of equal rights. Evidently on the Hungarian side as well, a certain picture has evolved about the Soviet partner in the discussion, about the personalities, as well as about the state, the party and the leader. What is this impression?

[Kotai] As I have mentioned before on the "Panorama" program, I think, that I have the good fortune to have known Comrade Gorbachev for a long time. I have to say that, fortunately, my picture has not altered. In so far as it does alter, it does so in a good direction, in a positive direction, in the direction of enrichment. He is an extremely educated, intelligent man, open and frank and really everything interests him, as I have said. For example, in the Csepel machine tool factory he expected honest answers. From Comrade Erdei [the factory manager] he received honest answers, and he was pleased about this. If there is any change in him then I would say that his dynamism has strengthened.

In connection with this question, allow me to say that in my judgment, but many people think so, even, how shall I put it, people of a higher calibre than myself, that the present leadership of the USSR is unified, completely unified, and it has sufficient determination, with Comrade Gorbachev's leadership, and naturally, sufficient dynamism.

wers, and he was pleased about this. If there is any change in him then I would say that his dynamism has strengthened.

In connection with this question, allow me to say that in my judgment, but many people think so, even, how shall I put it, people of a higher calibre than myself, that the present leadership of the USSR is unified, completely unified, and it has sufficient determination, with Comrade Gorbachev's leadership, and naturally, sufficient dynamism.

I think they will have sufficient strength to carry out this new political course.

[Announcer] Thank you. with your kind permission perhaps we could go over to world politics. What is it that the Warsaw Pact countries initiated in Budapest? Let us begin, Comrade Barity, with the assumption that our viewers are aquainted with these documents. Let me ask all the same, and let me also ask the career diplomat to point to the most essential aspects of these things, to the tasks and to the possibilities as we.

[Barity] The Budapest session of the Warsaw Pact Political Consultative Committee has adopted important political documents. One of them is the political communique, the other is the appeal, in which there is a proposal relating to the reduction of armed forces and armaments in Europe. It is well known that the Warsaw Pact has in recent times made numerous proposals on disarmament and security policy. Among those of outstanding significance is the proposal that was made on 15 January this year, which aims at eliminating nuclear weapons and chemical weapons by the end of the millineum. Now, this appeal and the proposal, initiative; they complement it, in relation to the European Continent, I repeat, in respect to armed force reduction and armament reduction. Let me also mention that in the West the allegation is frequently heard that the Warsaw Pact has a superiority with regard to the land-based armed forces and armaments in Europe. Well, this proposal itself certifies that the Warsaw Pact has no such intention. Their intention is that in Europe, from the Atlantic Ocean to the Urals, a fairly significant reduction should take place, carried out within tight schedules.

Having said this, let me also add that it is well known that for about 13 years talks have been going on in Vienna about topics of armed force reduction, unsuccessfully so far. This proposal goes considerably beyond those talks, both in its sizes and dimensions. I do not now want to go into details; the components of this proposal really are known. I would, however, add that there are further new features in the proposal. These are, for instance, in respect to the forums of the discussion of the whole proposal. The Warsaw Pact proposes that the discussion of this proposal could take place for example in the second phase of the Stockholm talks, or they could take place also at the aforementioned Vienna armed forces reduction talks, with the proviso that the mandate of the delegations there would have to be changed, extending it to the whole Europen territory. Finally, the Warsaw Pact offers the partners the possibility that a forum should be set up specially for this purpose and should discuss the proposals.

[Announcer] Politically it would no doubt be too early to speak about the total and general reaction to this whole batch of proposals, but could you nevertheless say a little about your first impressions?

[Barity] Yes. Only a few days have elapsed since the two documents were issued; we will carry out the full (?summing up) later. What we can establish already is that, compared to the earlier proposals, this proposal has a different reception in the various parts of the world. In more than one place, they highlighted the proposals' importance and seriousness, and in most places, in fact, they held out the prospect of thorough study. We, for our own part, would like to trust that this thorough study also means that we will get appropriate proposals to them [as heard], coupled with an appropriate willingness for discussion.

[Announcer] Thank you for putting yourselves at our viewers' disposal even after a whole week of obviously all-demanding work.

CORRESPONDENTS COMMENT ON PACT MEETING

[From the "168 hours" current affairs program with unidentified announcer and correspondents Istvan Kulcsar and Jozsef Barath]

[Text] [Announcer] Our first topic, naturally, is the event which took place in Budapest this week; an event which was in the focus of interest of, I think I can say without exaggeration, the entire world. In the "168 hours" studio we have Istvan Kulcsar, who reported on Mikhail Gorbachev's program in Budapest, and Jozsef Barath, the Moscow correspondent of Hungarian Radio, who naturally returned home for this event. It seems to me worthwhile to ask why was it that the world interested in politics focused its attention on Budapest during this past week, and what sort of attention this was -- an expression of concern, reservations or hope?

[Kulcsar] It was hope. It is obvious that everyone in the world, regardless of his world view or allegiance, wants the international situation to improve. It is clear that the countries belonging to the Warsaw Pact are playing one of the main roles in this, either as initiators or as partners.

[Barath] Nonetheless, I think that from the one side there really is hope, while on the other side there is perhaps concern. The latest initiatives by the Warsaw Pact, in my view, have brought about the moment of truth -- this is something that we have been saying lately, but it is justified in the present instance as well. They have brought about the moment of truth inasmuch as they are calling the bluff originating from U.S. rightwing circles.

[Announcer] It is not at all a matter of indifference how the other half of the world reacts to the documents which have been published here.

[Kulcsar] The first reactions indicate the existence of interest, at any rate. The statements issued everywhere from the Brussels NATO center to the White House, saying that they are studying these documents, are not empty phrases. It is obvious that they are studying them. After all, something new was submitted.

[Barath] At the same time, they could hardly have said anything else, since these proposals are in fact compromise proposals and have integrated a great many Western elements as well. In other words, the Warsaw Pact has adopted what the Western side has been asking for, wanted, hoped for for a long time, or what they used to bring up as excuses, so as to blame the Warsaw Pact for the deadlock in Vienna, for example.

[Kulcsar] Yes, that is indeed so. The classic example of this is the issue of on-site inspection. At various arms limitation negotiations, for example those concerned with chemical weapons and those aimed at the banning of underground nuclear tests, the Western side always came up with the issue of verification. Thus, even though there was no agreement, they were constantly asking how its observance would be monitored. They have always insisted on on-site inspection.

Now I suppose as Jozsef Barath has said, as a matter of compromise, the Soviet Union had adopted this principle, or is willing to adopt it. This has been a part of Soviet political thinking since the 27th congress, and now it is stated in black and white in the appeal of the Warsaw Pact Political Consultative Committee, that if an aggreement is reached, it could be verified on the spot by international organs.

[Barath] Let me add something to that. The proposal now talks about a reduction of the armed forces from the Atlantic to the Urals. One might well ask: Why is this interesting, after all, Europe covers the area from the Atlantic to the Urals? Yes, but for a long time, for example at the Vienna talks, there was a tug-of-war on the issue of whether inspection could include the European areas of the Soviet Union. The fact that the Soviet Union has now offered its own European territories for inspection represents a very considerable step forward.

[Announcer] I do not know whether I understand you correctly, but it seems to me from everything that you have said so far that the compromise has to be built into the initiative, into the first proposal.

[Kulcsar] Yes, this is obviously so. Without this, nothing could be done. Without this we would still be where we were up to now, in deadlock.

[Barath] In a recent speech Mikhail Gorbachev said that the Soviet Union is not willing to accept a U.S. prescription for an agreement. He immediately added that the Soviet Union understands that the United States would similarly not accept Soviet prescriptions. In other words, these should be set aside on both sides and something should be worked out jointly.

[Kulcsar] This is a terribly difficult issue because until there is an arms limitation, it is very difficult to restore confidence; however, while there is no confidence, it is very difficult to come to an agreement on arms limitation, since both sides worry about being cheated. It is in this area that a breakthrough must be achieved.

[Announcer] I would like to hear something also about the speculations which preceded this session in Budapest and Mikhail Gorbachev's talks in Budapest. Incidentally, I would like to ask you, should we treat these two events as one and the same thing or should we separate them?

[Kulcsar] Well, naturally, these are two different events, whether we look at it from a diplomatic perspective or just as a matter of logic. Nonetheless, it is no accident that these two events came together. Obviously, Gorbachev had a valid invitation to visit Hungary, he wanted to come, and of course he saved travelling time by coming for a day and a half before the session of the Warsaw Pact Political Consultative Committee. Thus, from one point of view the linking of the two events is a coincidence but from another aspect it is not.

[Barath] It is very far from being coincidental. So far Mikhail Gorbachev has visited capitals of socialist countries on five occasions.

[Announcer] You mean in his capacity as general secretary? Before that he visited Budapest as well as other capitals.

[Barath] Yes, as general secretary. He has always linked his visits with other events and on 4 occasions in this form or that, in various ways, the general secretaries of the socialist countries were invited for talks. Mikhail Gorbachev's key concept is efficiency. I think that he is trying to make diplomatic life around himself as efficient as possible and also to accelerate events.

[Announcer] I introduced this topic by mentioning that the Gorbachev visit was preceded by various speculations. One of the main speculations concerned the possibility that Gorbachev wanted to hold personal discussions with Hungarian leaders, political and economic leaders alike, in order to gain a personal impression of the Hungarian reform process and of our current situation.

[Kulcsar] It is quite obvious that he was interested in what he would see in Hungary, but it could hardly have come to him as a total surprise. After all, he visited Hungary in 1983 when he visited Hungarian agricultural enterprises. Further, I assume that he is regularly briefed on what happens in Hungary, and I should think that he must have received a thorough briefing on MSZMP policy when he had discussions with Janos Kadar in Moscow. It is quite natural that he also wanted to see things with his own eyes.

[Barath] Many people are trying to present this issue as a sensitive one, or many think of it as a sensitive one. I do not think it is. At a press briefing, Deputy Foreign Minister Petrovskiy said that the Soviet Union is glad to see Hungary's successes and that if the Hungarian methods appear in some spheres as more efficient than the Soviet ones, they would try to adopt them. After all, a process of economic renewal has begun in the Soviet Union in which all useful experience could be very important. I think that there are few people who root so much for the success of the Hungarian reform process as the Soviet leaders.

Let me mention something very interesting here. Prior to the visit the Soviet press naturally published a great many articles about Hungary. The name most frequently mentioned in the Soviet press, besides that of Janos Kadar, was Sandor Demjan.

[Announcer] You mean the managing director of the Skala department stores?

[Barath] Yes. His name appeared in PRAVDA, LITERURNAYA GAZETA, SOTSIALISTICHESKAYA INDUSTRIYA, and always in connection with the key concepts of initiative and risk-taking.

[Kulcsar] Let me interrupt you for a moment. I have also read the interview which appeared in LITERATURNAYA GAZETA. Even in the title there is a little reproach addressed by Sandor Demjan to the director of GUM, asking why they are not more flexible. The Soviet weekly published this and obviously agreed with it.

[Barath] It asks in big letters at the top of the article: Why does GUM not get on the phone? Demjan's answer is that this is because if they were to phone in April in connection with some spring clothing item, the goods exchange would not come about until the fall.

[Kulcsar] Nonetheless, I do not see how this amounts to some sort of comprehensive or official evaluation of the Hungarian reform. However, it is clear that in those areas where the reporter considers that the Soviet economic specialists can learn something from their Hungarian colleagues, they will be glad to do so. This is beyond doubt.

TRADE RELATIONS WITH USSR DISCUSSED, ANALYZED

AU091248 Budapest NEPSZAVA in Hungarian 7 Jun 86 p 4

[Article by "Gagamvolgyi": "The Soviet Economy -- The Number One Partner"]

[Excerpts] The objective basis and conditions for Hungarian-Soviet economic cooperation have changed significantly in the last 1 and 1/2 decades. The first change resulted from the fact that the Soviet Union could no longer assume the role of supplier of raw and basic materials and energy-related materials at the level demanded.

The structure of our economic cooperation reflected in the terms of trade has been even more influenced -- and compared with previous terms has almost been deformed -- by the energy price explosion, the change in price proportions for basic materials and finished goods, and the changeover to sliding prices in order to have some influence on the ripple effect. It is not well known, although it is clear, that until the beginning of the seventies the price ratio between basic materials and finished goods and the cheap energy resulting from the price structure of Hungarian-Soviet trade practically provided a status of preference for our economic development. However, at the end of the seventies the deteriorating trade terms and a significant part of the loss caused by this inevitably affected the Hungarian-Soviet trade turnover.

Reorganized Structure

The new price conditions in reciprocal trade -- when stipulated in value -- have had a large impact on the structure of foreign trade. At present the most important import goods are energy materials, accounting for 50 percent, the second place is taken by materials and semifinished goods at 32-33 percent, the third place is taken by machinery equipment at 12-14 percent, and the last place is taken by manufactured consumer goods at 4-5 percent.

The structure of Hungarian export goods has also changed but not as dramatically. In the previously typical export structure machinery and machinery equipment made up approximately 38-40 percent, manufactured consumer goods 25-28 percent, materials and semifinished goods 17-19 percent, and agricultural products made up somewhat over 10 percent.

Materials, semifinished goods, machinery, and machinery equipment have maintained their proportion, manufactured consumer goods and agricultural goods changed places, with the proportion of the latter increasing to 25 percent and that of manufactured consumer goods dropping to 14-16 percent.

The basic problem and difficulties of economic cooperation, the development in the trade turnover, resulted from the fact that Hungarian-Soviet trade has become unbalanced following the deterioration in the terms of trade. By the second half of the seventies the growth of trade slowed down compared to previous levels. The delaying of the ripple effect caused by the 1973-74 price explosion slowed down cooperation for almost 1 decade. The results of synchronizing the 1986-90 national economic plans have shown that our cooperation, our trade turnover, could again show a balanced increase in the new plan period. Calculating on the basis of unchanged prices both exports and imports will expand by 15 percent and their value could perhaps exceed R51 billion.

Hungarian imports provide most of the materials required for production and for the economy, including energy materials, raw and basic materials, mineral oil, electrical energy, coking coal, industrial timber, iron ore, cotton, etc. (It is in connection with the provision of a secure energy supply that in the new plan period, the Soviet Union will participate with technology and deliveries in the work on the expansion of the Paks nuclear power station by 4x440 megawatt units.)

One-third of the Hungarian-Soviet trade turnover is the result of bilateral and multilateral agreements on specialization and cooperation. Parallel to the synchronization of plans, bilateral agreements have been extended and expanded. (The expansion of the aluminium oxide and aluminium agreement will provide 40,000 metric tons more light metal annually.) The number one "method of payment" in Hungarian exports will remain engineering products, namely, buses, axle housings, communications and computer equipment, metal-working machinery, instruments, etc. However, sales conditions have become tougher. This was indicated by the lower level in expanding possibilities as well as by the requirement in the plan period to replace almost one-third of export goods either with new or modernized ones. The range of export goods has also been modified to a small extent and, because of a more dynamic expansion, the proportion of agricultural goods will increase.

In our case agricultural goods play an important role in Hungarian-Soviet economic cooperation and in the trade turnover. The foreign trade setup, which makes it possible for us to use convertible currency in accounting agricultural exports above the contingency level and energy materials above the contingency level, is also important. While our ruble trade balance has remained passive, one after another or these combined transactions have been closed with a balance surplus and have played a significant part in our attaining an active balance for our entire foreign trade sector.

With Mutual Advantages

It cannot be said that Hungarian-Soviet economic cooperation has already overcome all the difficulties caused by the changes in the world economy. These difficulties have been accompanied by domestic problems such as the decreasing rate of growth, intensificiation, and the demand and necessity for increasing efficiency. As for the near future, one could consider it a positive tendency that the reorganization of the conditions of trade is approaching an end and the price movements are expected to be normalized. All this will enable both sides to expand the mutually advantageous division of labor.

KULERSKI TAKES OVER BUJAK'S ROLE IN SOLIDARITY

[Excerpt] Warsaw, June 13 (AFP) -- Wiktor Kulerski, a 51-year-old school teacher, has replaced Zbigniew Bujak as Warsaw area representative in the TKK, underground structure of the outlawed trade union Solidarity, the capital's underground network RKW said Friday.

Mr. Bujak, wanted since imposition of martial law in 1981, was arrested by political police here on May 31 and charged with preparing a coup attempt. He faces a one to 10 year prison term. Two other activists were arrested with him.

The RKW statement announcing the TKK succession was signed by Mr. Kulerski and Jan Litynski and delivered to Western correspondents here.

The TKK is composed of eight members. Five of them are anonymous. The others, in addition to Mr. Kulerski, are Jan Andrzej Gorny of Katowice and Marek Muszynski of Wroclaw.

Mr. Bujak and Mr. Kulerski were president and vice-president respectively of the Warsaw branch of Solidarity when the union was legal. Both men went underground with the imposition of martial law on December 13, 1981.

Friday's RKW statement said the May 31 arrests had brought about "a reorganization and a certain delay" in Solidarity's clandestine operations in the capital, but that its activities had not been interrupted.

The RKW weekly newspaper, TYGODNIK MAZOWSZE has been published on schedule twice since the arrests.

Bujak 'Well Treated'

AU130802 Paris AFP in English 0319 GMT 13 Jun 86

[Test] Warsaw, June 13 (AFP) -- Zbigniew Bujak, the former leader of the clandestine Solidarity network, who was arrested on May 31, has told his wife in a postcard that he is well treated but is preparing himself for a long spell behind bars.

Mrs. Waclawa Bujak, who works at Ursus tractor plant outside Warsaw, showed journalists a postcard from her husband dated June 9 and bearing the stamp of Rakowiecka Prison in the capital.

The card said, "I am in jail... I am not too affected by my arrest. I am sleeping well. The guards are polite. My cell mates are friendly. We have a sunny cell and there are sheets. The food is bearable. So if things don't change, I won't grow thin...

"We must be patient, for a long time and I must now think about how to organise my time during the days, months, years... I need money to buy food at the canteen. I think I have lots of time to learn foreign languages and to complete several faculty (correspondence) courses. First I want to learn English. Send me an instruction book and tape recordings. I would also like a book to learn Latin...."

Mr. Bujak is charged under Articles 128 and 123 of the Polish penal code which calls for prison terms of between one and ten years for "anyone engaged in preparations aimed at overthrowing the regime of People's Poland."

Meanwhile, Lech Walesa, Nobel Prize winner and former Solidarity union president, said Thursday he would like to visit Italy on July 2 until July 4 at the personal invitation of Prime Minister Giulio Andreotti.

Mr. Andreotti has asked Mr. Walesa to take part in an international seminar for peace organised by Rome City Council and the Italian Foreign Ministry, Mr. Walesa told newsmen here.

The participants will include several Nobel Peace Prize winners, politicians, intellectuals and writers.

Jaruzelski Dinner Address

["Jaruzelski's Welcome Address (Abridged)" -- PAP headline]

[Text] Warsaw, June 13 -- Addressing visiting President of the Republic of Zimbabwe Canaan Sodindo Banana at a dinner given today in his honour, President of the Council of State of the Polish People's Republic Wojciech Jaruzelski said.

Your visit confirms that both our nations and state desire friendship and development of mutually beneficial cooperation.

Poland and Zimbabwe lie on continents that are far apart, have different traditions and specific ways of resolving their internal problems. We are united, however, through common ideals -- struggle for peace, against imperialism, colonialism and racism, the striving to set up a new international economic order, free from exploitation, usury and discrimination. This conviction animates today the entire progressive world, brings closer together socialist countries and non-aligned countries.

Evaluating the present, complex international situation. Wojciech Jaruzelski pointed out that imperialism's adventurous policy has led to serious disturbances in international relations. The threat to world peace has increased. This makes it necessary to intensify efforts to halt the arms race, to abandon the policy of confrontation. No nation can benefit through it.

We demand just settlement of the regional conflicts in Africa, the Middle East, in Asia and Latin America. We demand respect for the dignity and sovereignty of the liberated nations.

The peace policy of socialist and non-aligned states represents a great material and moral force. We come out unanimously for the return to the policy of detente. Numerous peace initiatives of the USSR and the entire socialist community serve this end. We are convinced that the conference of non-aligned countries that is being fruitfully prepared in the capital of Zimbabwe, Harare, will serve this end, too.

Next, Wojciech Jaruzelski stressed that the contribution of the nation of Zimbabwe to the process of decolonialisation, to the struggle against imperialism and racialism and to the progressive transformations in Africa is well known and valued by the world. By Polish society, too.

Peace in the southern part of the African continent is endangered today. The racist regime of the Republic of South Africa, the chief client and highly valued partner of imperialist forces is performing nearly every day acts of aggression, also armed aggression, against neighbour countries, and among them Zimbabwe. It unleashes ever more violent terror against its own people, refuses to grant an independent existence to Namibian nation. We firmly condemn this.

Forces of imperialism continue to block the imposition of international sanctions upon the RSA regime. They would like to push back the wheel of history, to transform the African Continent into a testing ground of armed confrontation between progress and reaction. They are trying to make use of Africa's political and economic difficulties. resulting from the centuries of colonial thraldom, to halt the liberation and progressive transformations.

It was only the day before yesterday, that slaves had been shipped out of Africa, still yesterday -- legitimate hosts of the African land were exploited, today -- neocolonial practices are being continued and efforts are made to preserve at every cost the tyrannical Pretoria regime which is an outrage upon human dignity.

Neither Poland nor Zimbabwe have been spared in the recent years various forms of interference and pressure in the name of illusory belief that it will prove possible to destablize our countries and eliminate them from the world's anti-imperialist front. Our countries, however, have successfully coped with that hard experience and stand firmly on the ground of their sovereign rights.

Banana Replies

["President Banana's Address" -- PAP headline]

[Text] Warsaw, June 13 -- President Canaan Sodindo Banana thanked the party, government, and Polish people for hospitality, and conveyed brotherly greetings to the PUWP Central Committee and the Polish Government from first secretary and president of the Zimbabwe African National Union - Patriotic Front (ZANU-PF), Premier Robert Mugabe, the government and people of Zimbabwe.

"In Zimbabwe, we are looking at the forthcoming PUWP Congress with great interest and hope, convinced that it will adopt significant resolutions and decisions on further socialist changes in your country. We are convinced that it will bring large profits not only to the Polish people, but also the people of Zimbabwe," President Banana said.

Thanking for assistance, which Poland granted to Zimbabwe, President Banana said that both countries became partners in the struggle for a new socio-economic order in Zimbabwe. We are very grateful for this partnership, Banana said.

"As you know, dear friends and comrades, in our region, the Republic of South Africa is still the enemy of democracy, not only in its internal policy, but also in relations with its neighbours. Obviously, the RSA is not the sole example of such a barbarian attitude. It has mighty friends and allies, who equally counteract against the development of democracy in our region. It is these friends and allies, who encouraged it to undertake recent unprovoked acts of aggression against Botswana, Zambia, Zimbabwe. They also shut their eyes to a continual occupation of a part of Angola by the RSA. However, Zimbabwe along with its partners from front-line countries will not give up supporting liberation struggle in the RSA and Namibia".

The international community should bring the maximum pressure to bear in the RSA, including economic sanctions which would force that country to withdraw from Namibia and give up the repulsive policy of apartheid.

We fully reject British and American objections to imposing compulsory, comprehensive sanctions on the Pretoria regime as unjust and double-faced.

The president of Zimbabwe stressed that acts of aggression and intervention in other regions of the world were equally dangerous to the world peace. One should also point to the dangerous alliance between Zionism and apartheid as well as between those two and certain Western superpowers, he said.

The speaker pointed out that the greatest threat to the world peace and the world civilization lay in the danger of nuclear conflict between the two superpowers.

Unfortunately, while hopeful signals are coming from Moscow, Washington has not responded responsibly to them so far, he concluded.

SEJM COUNCIL APPRAISES DRAFT SOCIOECONOMIC PLAN

AU091339 Warsaw TRYBUNA LUDU in 6 Jun 86 p5

["Staffer report" on a meeting of the Sejm Socioeconomic Council held on 5 June]

[Text] The Sejm has been discussing a preliminary draft version of the National Socioeconomic Plan for 1986-90 for several weeks now. The Sejm Presidium has also submitted this document to the Socioeconomic Council.

At the Thursday meeting of the council -- which was chaired by Sejm Deputy Marshal Mieczyslaw Rakowski -- a working group, which had been previously formed, submitted the results of its work in the form of a draft appraisal. Members of the council received copies of this comprehensive document. At the meeting the position of the working group was set out by Kazimierz Rupar, an economist from Rzeszow, who is the group's chairman.

During the discussion, which lasted several hours, members of the council expressed their support for the main points contained in the appraisal, but they also proposed that the position on the council be formulated in a more precise and emphatic manner and that certain other areas be underscored. For example, Barbara Blida from Katowice Voivodship said that the protection of the environment should be among the fundamental goals of the plan. Prof. Zdislaw Dadowski observed that the postulate of accelerating the process of balancing the economy connot be reconciled with the postulate of a statistical acceleration of growth in pay. The main emphasis ought to be placed on the accessibility of goods. The same speaker proposed abandoning certain enigmatic definitions and replacing them with more forthright formulations of the council's position (for example, instead of talking about the "debatable" nature of the cost-oriented formula for pricing, the council should oppose this formula and come out in favor of introducing a parameter-oriented pricing system.) Prof Janusz Gorski observed, inter alia, that the appraisal ought to contain a postulate of accelerated implementation of the provisions of the economic reform.

These are some of the points made in the appraisal: The council agreed that the main strategic goal of the National Socioeconomic Plan ought to be "creating and strengthening the economy's capacity for balanced development. "However, the council believes that it is necessary to arrange these tasks that determine the execution of the plan in order of importance, and to select a main task. This main task ought to be the consistent application of market mechanisms and the strengthening of an active role for money.

The council believes that, to date, insufficient vigor has been displayed in trying to effect monetary and market equilibrium. The council is also critical of the solutions adopted in the preliminary draft version of the National Socioeconomic Plan. In the long term, these provisions will result in the persistence of an inflationary gap. In attempting to find possible solutions, the council draws attention to the need to find ways of increasing the flow of goods to the market. Mechanisms that link pay to the quantity and quality of work also need to be sought. We are still finding that the incentive function of pay is being eroded.

In the chapter dealing with investment the council draws attention to resistance in the restructuring process and warns against the possible loss of promising trends in this area during the last 2 years of the 5-year plan, which holds out the possibility of more tangible changes: The main danger lies in the inefficiency of investment processes. A necessary condition for encouraging enterprise investment is the maintenance of a stable fiscal policy.

The council sets out its position on housing construction in a forthright maner. It regards housing construction as the fundamental social goal of the plan and does not agree with reducing expenditure on construction. While approving the modifications that have been introduced, the council believes they should serve as a factor stabilizing it. In effect, the Socioeconomic Council is calling for that part of the draft National Socioeconomic Plan which deals with housing to be rewritten.

It is also worth adding that the council expresses concern about the food economy beause the proposed solutions do not define the directions of long-term changes. The council also deemed the program for the development of those sectors of the economy that serve agriculture inadequate.

The position of the council on the protection of the environment is that the excessively larg losses arising from damage to the enviornment are obstacles to the country's socioeconomic development. The council proposes assessing the costs incurred by society through these losses.

The general opinion of the council on the instruments for the implementation of the plan is that "they are inadequate in relation to the goals set." The text also contains detailed observations on this subject.

LD121145 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 1700 GMT 11 Jun 86

[Text] A Council of State session was held at the Belweder Palace in Warsaw. According to the reports under review, the justified complaints frequently stemmed from shortcomings in the functioning of state administrative bodies. The Council of State, while stressing the considerable interest of people's councils in the issue of suggestions and complaints, pointed out that sensitivity to these matters and effective response to them constitute an important task for the people's councils in the issue of suggestions and complaints, pointed out that sensitivity to these matters and effective response to them constitute an important task for the people's councils in strengthening the rule of the law and making credible the service function of the local organs of power and state administration vis-a-vis citizens.

SCINTEIA ENDORSES PACT DISARMAMENT APPEAL

["In the Name of Peace, for Effective Disarmament Measures, for Detente and Security in Europe and in the World" -- AGERPRES headline]

[Text] Bucharest AGERPRES 13/6/1986 -- Public opinion in Romania has learned with keep interest about the proceedings of the meeting of the Political Consultative Committee of the Warsaw Treaty participating countries, which was held in Budapest, when opinions were exchanged on the situation in Europe and in the world and a set of realistic and concrete measures were advanced for the achievement of disarmament and the improvement of international relations. SCINTEIA newspaper writes in a commentary on the meeting run under the above headline in its June 13 issue.

The commentary underscores among other things: One can rightly assert that the documents adopted open up a broad and comprehensive vista, they crystallize clear goals of great mobilizing force, apt to step up the peoples' fight for peace, the actions taken by the broadest sections of public opinion, by the peace-loving states for a constructive resolution of the problems facing the present-day world, for the removal and elimination of the war threat.

Through the initiatives it advanced and the conclusions it drew, the meeting once again highlighted the lofty sense of responsiblity which the participating socialist countries show for the fate of peace, their resolve to work so as this year -- The International Year of Peace -- should mark a real turn -- towards removing the threat of nuclear conflict, resuming the sourse of detente in the international life, providing the prerequisites for the peaceful development and progress of their own peoples, of all the peoples.

As is known, Romania was represented at the meeting by a delegation led by the party general secretary and the president of the Republic, Nicolae Ceausescu, who, in that frame, too, brilliantly set forth Romania's principled, consistent and constructive stands laid down by the Thirteenth Congress of the RCP, which are consonant with the vital interests of the Romanian socialist nation, of all the world nations.

Starting from the truth that a lasting security system for all the countries and peoples can be built only by political means, that mankind's only rational option is peaceful coexistence, the dialogue between states with different social system, the communique of the meeting points to the major lines on which efforts should concentrate with a view to putting an end to the arms race on earth and preventing its extension into space, fulfilling the disarmament process.

Reiterating the topical character of the targets and aims contained in the declaration of the Political Consultative Committee meeting in Sofia, last autumn, the Warsaw Treaty participating states underscored, once again, that the cessation of nuclear tests would mean a major step towards nuclear disarmament, and would also bar the way to the improvement of nuclear weapons, calling on the U.S.A. to join in the unilateral moratorium which the Soviet Union has recently extended, as well as on the other states that hold such arms, to halt tests and work for the achievement of an agreement on their immediate ban.

Moreoever, considering the threat posed by the siting of the new intermediate-range nuclear missiles in Europe, the meeting urged the total elimination, on a mutual basis, of the Soviet and American missiles -- which would, naturally, pave the way for the elimination of nuclear arms from the European Continent, in keeping with the peoples' interests and most ardent wishes.

The achievement of tangible understandings at the Soviet-U.S. negotiations on nuclear and space weapons; the strict observance of the accords on the limitation of strategic weapons; the use of outer space for peaceful purposes alone; the elimination, as of this century, of chemical arms and of the industrial facilities that manufacture them; a substantial reduction of troops and conventions arms, globally and regionally, starting with Europe -- where the largest amount of troops and arms are concentrated the realization of an efficient control in all areas and stages of arms reduction and disarmament; the dismantlement of foreign military bases and the withdrawal of troops from other states' territory -- are as many aims, goals and lines of action of paramount significance for the cause of peace, which the states participating in the meeting propose opose to all the states of the world.

Those desiderata mirror ideas, demands and measures which the Romanian party and state e has consistently stated for, taking, as is widely known, several initiatives, demarches, advancing proposals to that effect all along the years. It is well known that Romania is a staunch champion of the implementation of a complex-programme for genereal disarmament, with nuclear arms as its centre-piece, which should also include chemical weapons, as well as all conventional arms and military effectives, with a view to reducing, until the end of the millenium, by at least 50 percent the existing arsenals and troops, and also setting maximum ceilings on them -- in the case of the big powers, more particularly.

It was emphasized at the meeting that the practical measures on reducing arms and on disarmament would lead to the release of huge materials, financial and human resources that had to be used for peaceful construction, for the eradication of the economic underdevelopment extant in numerous regions of the world. It is an objective for which Romania perseveringly and energetically works, considering the substantive reduction of the military expenditures as a most stringent requirement, a concrete measure that would realistically reflect and induce the actual reduction of the military arsenals and effectives, thus standing for the main chain in triggering off a genuine disarmament process. Without affecting the states' security at all, the reduction of the military expenditures would lead to a tremendous saving of forces and resources that are now being wasted and are so needed by mankind, would supply means for economic and social progress worldwide, and first of all of the developing states, would contribute to enhancing the confidence, lessening the tension and consolidating peace in the world. It obvious that all peoples, all states, irrespective of social system, size or development level, would derive only profits from the diminution of the military budgets and the replacement of the arming programs by development programs.

The meeting endorsed "The Appeal of the Warsaw Treaty Participant States to the NATO Member States, to all European Countries, for a Program of Reducing Armed Forces and Conventional Weapons in Europe." This is a very important document which, setting out from the realities of Europe and also from the fact that the destructive power of the conventional weapons has grown so much that it nears that of the nuclear weapon, matches the rousing, mobilizing appeal with a concrete, detailed, comprehensive program of measures in precise terms in point of time. The translation into life of these proposals would greatly contribute to the removal of mistrust and to the lessening of the confrontation between the two military alliances, to heightening the stability in the continent, equally stimulating new measures conducive to the overcoming of Europe's division into opposing blocs, to their concomitant abolition -- a target reiterated also at the current meeting.

The appeal especially stresses how important it would be to create zones free of nuclear and chemical weapons, in favour of which as is known, Romania steadily declares. The participant countries reiterated during the meeting their support to Romania and Bulgaria's proposal to have such a zone created in the Balkans, as well as to other similar proposals.

The proceedings, the meeting of the chief delegates of the states participant in the treaty also singled out the joint resolve to strengthen the collaboration in the field of economic development. At the same time the will was reasserted to develop actively the multilateral collaboration with the other socialist countries in view of advancing along the path of building the socialist and communist society. Intensifying such a cooperation would undoubtedly be of special importance to the development of each and all socialist countries. The significance of such a wide collaboration also resides in the fact that socialism has a word to say in the world development and asserts its superiority as a new system not by way of weapons, not through force, but through economic development and a capacity to provide prosperity to peoples. This is precisely why developing cooperation and solving with joint forces the problems posed by the advancement of society is highly important -- all the more so taking into account the fears of the imperialist circles regarding the rising economic power of socialism, and those circles' undermining attempts.

Likewise one should stress that the goal of continuously strengthening the collaboration among the socialist countries is not conceived in a narrow spirit but on the contrary, in a broad vision involving an expansion of the collaboration with all the states, irrespective of their social and political system. In this respect the meeting pointed out that establishing official relations between the Council of Mutual Economic Assistance as well as each CMEA member country and the European Economic Community is of a nature to open new prospects to mutually advantageous collaboration.

The communique reads in conclusion: The Romanian party and people appreciate highly the activity carried out by President Nicolae Ceausescu at the meeting of the Consultative Political Committee, an activity that went down as a new expression of Romania's resolve to contribute fully, by the side of the other socialist states and all the states and peoples in the world to the struggle for disarmament and peace, for a free and independent development of each people in a better, juster and safer world free of weapons and wars.

Welcoming the proposed measures and the targets envisaged by the meeting, highlighting their great importance, Romania expresses its resolve to do everything to contribute to their implementation, nurturing the belief that they would be studied carefully by the other states and mobilize to a greater extent the peoples' struggle while dynamizing the European and world peace-loving forces' great contemporary movement for removal of the great nuclear danger, for international understanding and collaboration, for a peaceful and prosperous future of the whole world.

MIKULIC SPEAKS TO JOURNALISTS ON FEC WORK

[Text] Belgrade, 13 Jun (TANJUG) -- The FEC has major tasks in further implementing the stabilization program and it will persist in carrying them out, within the limits of its possibilities and constitutional authority. We are working very intensively on putting these tasks into operation. When we finish this, hopefully soon, we will inform the SFRY Assembly about the measures the FEC will take, and we will submit proposals to the Assembly for adopting decisions that are in its competence. At the same time we will suggest to the republics and provinces that they too, in keeping with their constitutional authority, adopt measures, said Branko Mikulic, FEC president, at a meeting of Serbian journalists in Belgrade today on the occasion of the 115th anniversary of the foundation of the Association of Journalists of this republic. The meeting was attended by about 300 journalists.

In one or two articles published in a section of the press, Mikulic added interest in being expressed in what the FEC is preparing, why it is keeping silent, whether it will propose the use of administrative measures and such like. We are hearing -- alledgedly because of the expectation that there will now go up, or that this is a reason for a price and personal income explosion.

It is true that in the FEC, its president announced, we are working on the preparation of decisions with which we will stimulate, by economic measures, the maintenance of production at the level stipulated in the resolution, and if possible above it. Furthermore, we will take measures to stimulate an increase in exports and the inflow of foreign currency, and we will reduce the growth of general (? joint) consumption to the level envisaged in the resolution. We will take measures to curb the further spiraling of inflation and protect the living standard. We wish to implement these goals by economic and not administrative measures. At no time did we consider freezing prices and personal incomes, Mikulic stressed.

Yugoslav society, Mikulic continued, is in a very complex phase of development and all organized socialist forces are confronted with the task of discovering an appropriate program of solutions to the economic, social, and political problems, choosing the basic guidelines of their actions and taking measures that solve these accumulated problems. In order to succeed in this, it is essential that we have the creative teamwork of science, politics, and ideology and concrete progressive measures and social actions. In addition, Mikulic added, we need qualified analyses of the situation, realistically-set goals, and ideo-political and action unity in the realization of these goals on a self-managing basis.

In other words, in the situation in which we now find ourselves, it is essential that we take such measures and actions in order to stop the negative trends, especially in the economic development of society but also in social life as a whole.

Accumulated contradictions in socioeconomic development are manifesting themselves not only in the obvious economic difficulties but also in the slowing down of the practive of socialism especially self-managing socialism.

In Mikulic's judgement, it is a matter of the ideological aggression of etatist and petit-bourgeois consciousness and practice and of the practical consequences of these tendencies, which are also manifesting themselves in some places in a loss of faith in the efficiency of socialist self-management and in the importance of self-managing initiative, as well as in the possibility of extending self-managing democracy in the organizations of associated labor and in society as a whole. This is reflected in a section of the organization of associated labor, among other things, in the distortion of the essence of self-managing organization, the disposal of social funds, in irrational management, low labor productivity, the transformation of social property into group ownership and the reduction of self-management to participation or so-called technocratic efficiency.

Bearing this in mind, the FEC president said the offensive course and development policy should also be supported in the ideological sphere. This means that we must defend theoretically and ideopolitically these directions of development (?and) everything that is pulling the country forward in economic, technological and overall social development. This offensive course and development policy presuppose, therefore, an ideological and political orientation toward realizing dynamic material development, the pooling of labor and resources and other forms of self-managing and business integration and the conduct of an active economic policy, including the removal of weak points in the economic system and in economic policy itself.

Further efforts are necessary by the whole of society, all subjective factors and every individual in order to implement the stabilization program and the medium-term and long-term plan of Yugoslavia's development, in order to implement as fully as possible persistent, synchronized and coordinated activities at all levels of social organization. It has been shown, Mikulic said, that the partial and nonintegrated activities or measures of the FEC and the SFRY Assembly alone cannot achieve much.

Of course, the FEC has an important role in this, Mikulic added, and indicated three main directions of FEC involvement. First, the taking and proposing of measures for stabilizing the trends in social production, starting from the well-known interdependence of production, exports, imports, the supply of the market, consumption and the development of prices. Acting on the totality of the relations of these and other categories is a coition for overcoming the causes of inflation as the greatest social and economic problems, which is consistently weakening the quality of socioeconomic development and the efficiency of basic production relations. With all possible economic measures we shall take up the battle against inflation by stimulating the growth of production and labor productivity. We will do this by harmonizing consumption with real possibilities in income, by interventions from the commodity reserves and the import of essential products and by a policy of an exchange rate for the dinar and interest rates and preventing fictitious incomes from being reported and by using measures for the social control of prices, if necessary, in a word, by strengthening the consciousness that this is the only way out of the crisis into economically healthy development, he stressed.

Mikulic noted, in particular, that great weaknesses in the tax system and in the tax policy have been expressed and this has frustrated the conduct of a more efficient economic policy. The FEC will shortly propose a basis for adopting appropriate solutions in this field, too, or rather, an agreement on the united organization of this segment of the economic system and its consistent implementation. This agreement between the republics and the provinces will contribute to the unity of the economic system and to the more efficient functioning of the unified Yugoslav market. This will not divest the republics or provinces of power in the conduct of a tax policy but, with the harmonized solutions in the field of the tax system and tax policy, which the republics and provinces decide upon, will contribute to the unity of the economic system and the market to give an impetus to development and prevent the embezzlement of obligations toward society.

Otherwise, Mikulic said, tax policy in our country is thought of primarily as a state treasury and not as a very powerful and significant factor for directing and stimulating development.

He even mentioned several examples: You all know that in our country capacities are used very poorly. A contribution to their better use could be made if, in the republics and provinces, decisions were taken on work in the third shift being freed from all contributions and taxes on income and personal incomes, except for health protection and invalid and pension insurance. Such measures could also be applied to the second harvest in agriculture both in the social sector and on individual holdings.

Productive employment could also be stimulated by a suitable tax policy, among other things, in such a way as to liberate all the newly employed from having to pay contributions on their personal incomes, for, let us say, 2 or 3 years, except for health protection and invalid and pension insurance. In this way an impetus could be given to and a reduction made of the number of workers who are in unproductive jobs, allowing them to go into production, in which cases this instrument of economic policy could also be applied.

Surely, through tax policy, the saving of electrical energy could be achieved, among other things in such a way that all the benefits of saving would remain in the organizations of associated labor, and would not be the object of distribution with the other participants in the distribution of income. Then there is great scope in limiting uneconomic, unproductive investments, among other things, in such a way as to introduce a special tax on the previously calculated value of the investment for some product where we already have duplicated capacities -- for example, refrigerators, slaughterhouses, sugar refineries and so on. If someone wants to build a capacity like this and invest in an uneconomic project he must pay such and such an amount of tax and in this way there will be a disincentive.

A tax policy could also significantly stimulate the development of small businesses, export.... also to get a grip on monopoly and inflationary income, limit general and common consumption and so on. Alternatively, contributions and taxes on personal incomes are such that they are making live labor very expensive and organizations of associated labor are shunning the employment of new workers.

The FEC has not yet announced the measures we prepared because it is still at the stage of analyzing and linking together the individual measures. The work has not yet been brought to an end but it will be by the end of the month, Branko Mikulic said.

Then numerous questions were asked by journalists and Mikulic replied. One of them was: Is agriculture a priority matter for the FEC?

Answering in the affirmative, Mikulic added that our priorities, when it came to realizing economic stabilization are agriculture, tourism, and the large number of specialist cadres. It is a great pity, he added, that a great number of specialist cadres are not employed. As for agriculture, we are now at the stage of perfecting a unified, integrated system out of several measures, which we are thinking of proposing at the end of June. A tax on uncultivated land should be introduced. In the republics and provinces regulations on the use of land have been adopted, but they are not being implemented.

One of the questions was: Will the FEC become more open to the public? I hope, Mikulic replied, that no one was expecting FEC sessions to be open to the press, but we shall be making more of a practice of holding news conferences, with which we would acquaint them with the measures we are taking. It is our intention to make progress, too, with the adoption of federal laws. In fact, the proposal of such an act would be tested in a specific number of organizations of associated labor and the suggestions would then be collected. This would be the basis for a more qualified preparation of the law.

Mikulic then said -- replying to a question as to whether or not ideological discussions on commodity production as a way out of the crisis are still going on -- that we have long been in a dangerous position between the representatives of administrative measures and those who took the view that we have an indexing of everything and that in this way we are taking things to an absurd conclusion. The Brazilian, Argentine, and Israeli models are suggested, according to which inflation would be allowed to reach 500 percent before applying shock treatment.

If we had a more peaceful situation with inflation, if we had greater supply on the market, if we had greater foreign exchange funds and carried out imports [as received] and economic pressure on prices in the country, Mikulic believes, we would have been able to revitalize the market in all its elements that are necessary for the economically healthy growth of the economy, for economic competition in the market and thus also for the affirmation of commodity production in the conditions of self-management. At present, however, we do not have the conditions for this, but the way out is not to be sought in a one-sidedly conceived liberalization of prices, nor in the use of administrative measures. In our present conditions we must bring about a combination of both economic stimulation and economic force.

I do not, therefore, think that the legality of commodity production should be brought into question. We are convinced that this is our outlook but at the present time we are not fulfilling the conditions for the complete liberalization of prices. This is not a reason for bringing commodity production and its character into question. No modern society, either capitalist or socialist, is, however, free from the influences of the market, but an uncontrolled situation could lead to a collapse.

In any case, in my opinion, we have become bogged down in problems that we must extricate ourselves from in an organized way, Mikulic stressed.

The FEC does not operate as a body of parity. We have succeeded in freeing ourselves from the influence of the republics and provinces in the questions which are on the agenda. In this regard I am satisfied, Mikulic said, replying to the question on if the republics and provinces influence FEC decisions.

The measures we will take, especially for curbing inflation, will, in the near future, but not this year, lead to the creation of conditions for the gradual stabilization of the dinar and to the transition to some forms of its convertability. When this is at issue, the central question is inflation, and we must solve it. We have a high growth of all kinds of consumption. When we solve this, then we can talk about the solution of the position of the dinar as a whole, Mikulic said, replying to a question related to these problems.

One question was how the FEC will get over the alleged exclusive right of the republics and provinces to have their say in the distribution of energy and other stretegic raw materials.

As for coal, the FEC president said, the problem is smaller, because we already have joint ventures in the constructionn of common electrical energy capacities. This is, however, a current question with respect to the use of the Drina River. On this river capacities have been constructed, some are under construction, and an agreement between three republics, Serbia, Bosnia-Hercegovina and Montenegro, in connection with the solution of the proble of the Tara River, ensures that Montenegro will be, for the most part, compensated for the losses resulting from the power station not being built on this river. Also, he added, the construction of a power station on the Drina River will mean that some small towns will be submerged, so it is necessary to assess if this is profitable. The consciousness as to whether or not the pooling of resources opens up new possibilities for the construction of energy capacities will grow relatively rapidly.

The problem of nuclear power stations, Mikulic added, should be looked at very seriously both from the point of view of the use of one's new sources and from the point of view of the protection of the environment and human health, as well as from the point of view of technological progress.

New technology in this field should also be comprehended. I do not see at this time that this question is so urgent that we should be overly worried about it.

We have formed an FEC Commission for Nuclear Energy. We have not held a meeting yet, but I wish to assure you that all this will be looked at in a very expert way and that a decision will not be adopted hastily nor concealed from the public. We have learned lessons especially from Chernobyl and other catastrophies. This is a serious warning. A few days ago when a comrade asked me what is going to happen with nuclear power stations, I said that I was reminded of the song "Cool Down, Boy." One of the questions was whether the FEC envisages measures with respect to the limiting of official journeys and the adoption of decisions on, for example, the concluding of all contracts with foreign partners in Yugoslavia.

We cannot impose on all foreign partners the signing of all contracts in Yugoslavia, but personally I believe, as this has not yet been discussed at an FEC session, that the conditions of official journeys abroad should be regulated across the board in a suitable way so as to determine the obligations of the organizations of associated labor and other socio-legal entities and that suitable platforms also be established for official journeys with the purpose of the journeys being defined.

It should be established which person could best accomplish a given task, the period of his stay, official travel expenses, and that after the journey a report should be submitted together with receipts for expenses incurred. I believe that order must be introduced into this, just as we have introduced it into the official journeyings of state and other functionaries abroad, replied the FEC president.

Losses in the economy are a major problem. For years we have been dragging along these loss-makers who are pulling us backward, and the losses are increasing. We also need to look seriously at the causes of losses and to what extent they have arisen and are arising from irresponsible solutions in the economic system (for example in the calculation of exchange rate differences). I have a notion to put this question on the agenda this year.

I would say something else, however, in connection with this, he said, in reply to a question concerning the extent to which the maintenance of those making a loss will be tolerated. In those organizations of associated labor for which it is known, quite certainly, that we cannot reverse their loss-making situation, it would be much more profitable for workers to be transferred to the budgets of the sociopolitical communities and for them to be paid a personal income rather than for them to go on producing losses. I, personally, am convinced that in our country very little attention is devoted to the rewarding of cadres who work well in management functions and I would say, also to the economic punishment of those who work very badly.

While we are on the subject of loss-makers, Milulic added, there is also the one-sided view that now this means a writing-off of all social resources, a virtual renunciation both of the workshop and of everything else. Greatest attention should be devoted to changing production programs and closing those capacities that obviously do not have any prospects.

What can you say about restructuring in connection with the relative backwardness of the Republic of Serbia, and what is the FEC doing in this regard, was one question.

Yesterday I obtained a piece of information about this because we are now looking into these problems with which we are confronted in Macedonia, Monetenegro, Kosovo and the implementation of the conclusions of the SFRY Assembly in connection with the halting of the relative decline in the development of the SR of Serbia. According to this information, some of the measures that were adopted have already been taken, some are at the stage of being considered in the SFRY Assembly, or in the FEC, and some are being worked on by the competent federal organs.

With amendments to the law on credit relations with foreign countries for credits of the international bank, the SR of Serbia has been granted a credit line of $130 million for structural adaptation. Also, with the FEC decisions on the increase in the price of electrical energy, the electric power industry of Serbia is in an improved position. Of course, not only it, because Serbia is a big exporter of energy so it has particular interest in this in the framework of Yugoslavia.

Moreover, in the conversion of credit from the new money issue for credits in permanent working assets, the SR of Servia has obtained the same treatment as the economically insufficiently developed republics (I am thinking of Bosnia-Hercegovina). [Word indistinct] is the more favorable position of Macedonia and Montenegro and in view of their specific problems.

The following measures are under consideration in the assembly: Draft changes to the customs tarriff law that would reduce the duty on equipment for the undeveloped regions in the SR of Serbia of 50 percent, as well as a draft law on the covering of exchange rate idfferences on foreign credits which in part envisages the covering of exchange rate differences on foreign credits for artificial fertilizer, copper, and ferrous metals. Draft changes and amendments are being prepared to the agreement for the earmarking of solidarity funds for the removal of the consequences of the earthquake in Kopaonik and a proposal of measures for intended production, Mikulic said.

Branko Mikulic was also asked why Ilija Vakic was elected to the FEC, despite the fact that several hundred veterans from Kosovo who live in Belgrade, requested that a different solution be found. In addition, Vakic was not invited to the Yugoslav veterans congress.

A delegation of the FEC and not anyone individually was invited to the veterans' congress, Mikulic said. It wad decided that Radovan Makic and I would go to the congress. We assumed that at the congress there would be alot of talk about economic questions, about which Makic, who in recent years has been governor of the People's Bank of Yugoslavia, knows a lot. The province of Kosovo proposed Ilija Vakic for membership of the FEC. When I made consultations for the election of FEC members as a whole, this candidacy was discussed in a sufficiently broad circle.

In the consultations I had in the organs of the federation no one objected to the election of Ilija Vakic. When I heard of the objection from the veterans' meeting, I turned to the provincial leadership. They stuck to their proposal and I accepted this. In the SFRY Assembly, too, when the FEC was elected, no one demanded that Vakic should not be elected, Branko Mikulic said at the meeting of the Serbian journalists.

KOMMUNIST ARTICLE ON NONALIGNMENT CRITICIZED

AU152003 Belgrade Domestic Service in Serbo-Croation 0800 GMT 15 Jun 86

[Dragan Colovic commentary from the "Sunday at 10" program]

[Text] KOMMUNIST, journal of the CPSU Central Committee, has recently carried an article entitled "Nonaligned Movement -- An Important Factor of Peace and Progress." According to the journal, the Nonaligned Movement has turned into the broadest all-democratic international association of newly liberated countries which has become an important factor in world politics in recent times.

Even if we leave aside the fact that the movement is proclaimed to be an association, what attracts attention is KOMMUNIST's view that points out, and we quote, that nonaligned countries have always relied and continue to rely upon the leading forces of our planet and that together with those forces they are fighting to solve essential problems. Under the leading forces of our planet the journal obviously means the countries of the so-called socialist community and their most reliable allies. In theat connection, KOMMUNIST several times recalls the joint activity of nonaligned and socialist countries and speaks about the nonaligned countries' support for Gorbachev's ideas, and so on.

Such views deserve special attention, and this is why: Over the past 25 years, the Nonaligned Movement has not acted together with the countries of the socialist community as a joint member. The fact is, that for 25 years the Nonaligned Movement has been active as an independent, non-bloc factor in international relations and that precisely for that reason it has developed into a global, political, and moral force in the modern world. It is true that the views of the countries of the so-called socialist community, and others well, frequently coincided with the views and actions of the Nonaligned Movement. However, views and ideas of the Nonaligned Movement were founded and implemented by Nehru, Al-Nasir, Tito, and their followers, and by such articles an attempt is now made to present those authentic ideas and actions of the nonaligned countries as being one's own, of course under a somewhat different cover.

Apart from this, one notices another attempt of the Soviet journal KOMMUNIST: The United States is declared the main enemy of the Nonaligned Movement, by which the Nonaligned Movement is ascribed a characteristic of exclusively anti-imperialistic orientation, and the entire movement is presented as a broader world anti-imperialist front. By this again, the above-mentioned leading forces of our planet, that is, some other forces, forces outside of the movement, are put to the force again. The Soviet journal also concludes that those other, leading forces, are the main inspiration for the actions of the Nonaligned Movement, too. We quote: The Nonaligned Movement draws inspiration from the fact that its ideals and aims are met with the understanding and support of world socialism. It turns out from this that had it not been for this understanding and support of those leading forces, the Nonaligned Movement would not have presented a large political force of international relations, nor would its struggle in the interest of peace and progress exist.

What is involved are obviously approaches that only differ in form from similar previous ones, but their essence remains the same: The aim is to ring ideological, political, and other divisions into the Nonaligned Movement, and, if possible, to redirect it and finally subordinate it to the interests and needs of one bloc in its ideological and military-politic confrontation with the other bloc.

Finally, what is most confusing to a careful reader of the article carried by the CPSU Central Commettee organ KOMMUNIST is the fact that it quotes many leaders of the Nonaligned Movement, but that it does not even mention President Tito, one of the founding fathers of the Nonaligned Movement, as is pointed out by many other objective and well-intentioned articles on the brief but tempestuous 25-year long history of nonalignment.

President Tito has enjoyed and is still enjoying an exceptional reputation in the owrld as a man of principles and a harbinger of peace, as Sekou Toure put it when he presented President Tito with a special recognition at the Sixth Nonaligned Summit in Havana in 1979. President Tito was not only this, but also a firm fighter for the independent and non-bloc character of the Nonaligned Movement.

Persistently advocating the original nonalignment, he managed during his lifetime to make the Nonaligned Movement be and remain an autonomous, independent, and active factor of world politics. and not someone's reserve. It seems that the real reason for the CPSU Central Committee journal KOMMUNIST to forget to mention Tito's name among those people to whose activity the Nonaligned Movement and international community owe over 4 decades of peace, lies exactly there.

MILITARY DELEGATION RETURNS FROM USSR VISIT

LD151815 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croation 1450 GMT 15 Jun 86

[Text] Belgrade, 15 Jun (TANJUG) -- Colonel General Zorko Canadi, the chief of the General Staff of the Yugoslav People's Army (YPA), who has been at the head of a military delegation on a friendly and working visit to the USSR Armed Forces, has returned to Belgrade today. VJESNIK REPLIES TO ROMANIAN WEEKLY'S ATTACK

AU141548 Zagreb VJESNIK in Serbo-Croatian 11 Jun 86 p 5

[Editorial article: "Attack by Romanian journal ROMANIA LITERARA on VJESNIK: Anger Without Reason"]

[Text] We searched for it in the foreign political columns of VJESNIK (where it would be logical to search); we then searched for it on our page 5 among the commentaries under "In The Foreground"; we searched for it in the cultural columns, in the "7 Days" supplement, in the Sunday VJESNIK...but we could not find anywhere "an unsigned article in VJESNIK which leaves the impression that it represents the view of the editorial board," containing theses that are "reactionary, malicious, and slander the history of the Romanian nation."

Finally, we found it; a small column -- "Daily Lexicon" -- on 24 February 1986 carried an article "Transylvania" containing statements which -- quite understandably -- provoked the critical remarks quoted above and many others by two Romanian university professors, published on 29 May on two full pages of ROMANIA LITERARA, the Romanian writers weekly. In this extensive article, the writers say that "There is no exucse for the daily VJESNIK and for the ease with which it made its columns available to a provocator who is... a dilettante, a falsifier, and an element with revisionist views."

We, too, are of the opinion that there is no exucse. Although the article was published in a modest column, on a page which contains columns intended for the recreation of readers, in a column that is unsigned not because one wants to create "the impression that it represents the view of the editorial board" but precisely because it is of minor importance to the editors and virtually not binding, there is no excuse simply because somebody -- in this case two Romania professors -- felt insulted by it.

Writing about world events and about neighbors, VJESNIK constantly avoids succumbing to demonization, and it avoids senseless praise as well as attacks in a way that anybody could justifiably find insulting.

If one talks about Romania and if we limit ourselves to VJESNIK of this year only, have not -- precisely starting with the New Year's issue, which carried an article about President Ceausescu as one of the protagonists of the happenings in the Balkans -- these columns contained only articles which were objective, considerate, and well-intentioned toward our neighboring country?

We must therefore conclude that ROMANIA LITERARA nevertheless exaggerated, making a mountain out of a mole hill, considering that everything that VJESNIK otherwise writes about Romania refutes some accidentally published nonsense in "daily Lexicon," prepared from the General Encyclopedia of the Yugoslav lexicographical Institute published in 1982. Of course, it was not a reflection of the official Yugoslav policy, simply because VJESNIK, like the other public media in this country, is not an official government organ. Unless some other intent stands behind this "mountain" -- and such speculation is not acceptable among serious people -- we would consider the case closed.

[This article is illustrated by a reduced facsimile of page 10 of VJESNIK of 24 February, 1986, showing the "Daily Lexicon" with the article on Transylvania of about 400 words, squeezed between the "On This Day" column marking an event in 1386 and a feature entitled "From All Sides."]

EDITORIAL HAILS RESULTS OF WARSAW PACT SUMMIT

[Editorial: "Common Task"]

[Text] To defend peace, to stop the arms race, to adopt specific disarmament measures, and nuclear disarmament measures, in particular -- this is the common task of our era. It is possible to return to international relations determined by the spirit of detente. Mankind can and must block the road to nuclear disaster.

Proceeding in an atmosphere of friendship and comradely cooperation, in a spirit of unanimity of views on all questions discussed, the conference of the Political Consultative Committee of the Warsaw Pact member-states confirmed their resolve to create a comprehensive international security system leading toward the establishment of a world free of weapons and wars, a world of hope for all peoples. In order to achieve this universally humanitarian goal the allied socialist states proposed a comprehensive platform of measures and actions aimed at halting the arms race on earth and at averting its extension to outer space, a program of disarmament, a program for the liberation of mankind from the burden of weapons.

The supreme organ of the socialist countries military-political alliance pointed to six basic trends for the achivement of the goals mapped out:

-- stopping nuclear tests and signing agreements on their total ban;

-- liquidating completely both American and Soviet medium-range missiles in the European zone, on the basis of mutual agreements;

-- achieving specific agreements at the Soviet-American negotiations on nuclear and space weapons, by calling on the United States to strictly observe the agreements on the limitation of strategic armaments;

-- abolishing, as early as the 20th century, all chemical mass destruction weapons, as well as abolishing the industrial basis for their production;

-- limiting armed forces and conventional weapons on a global and regional scale;

-- implementing effective control in all fields and at all stages of arms limitation and disarmament through the use of national technical means, as well as international procedures, including on-site inspections.

There is no doubt that the Budapest conference of the supreme alliance organ of the European socialist countries will mark the history of contemporary international relations with the appeal by the Warsaw Pact member-states to the NATO member-states and to all European countries and containing a program on the limitation of armed forces and conventional weapons in Europe. The meaning of this appeal and program reveals an impressive intention: namely, the intention of creating a Europe based on friendly cooperation and good-neighborly relations.

The Budapest document adds a comprehensive and universal character to the previously adopted initiatives and proposals of the Soviet Union and the other socialist countries. This document includes and encompasses all types of weapons -- nuclear, chemical, ground, and space weapons for mass destruction, as well as conventional arms. The other characteristic of the program is its eficiency. It proposes specific scheduled for a prompt reduction in weapons -- during the forthcoming 1 or 2 years, it is envisaged that 200,000-300,000 soldiers of both military political blocks will be withdrawn; at the beginning of the nineties, their number is supposed to attain one million men on each side.

The third remarkable feature of this program is its deeply humanitarian character. The socialist countries are proposing that the tremendous material, financial, and human resources that will be freed as a result of these measures should be used for peaceful, constructive purposes, including overcoming economic backwardness in numerous areas of the world. In this connection the great importance of an international conference on disarmament and development, in accordance with the UN decision on this subject, was pointed out. Other European initiatives, such as the proposals submitted by the People's Republic of Bulgaria, the Socialist Republic of Romania, the USSR, the CSSR, the GDR, and other European countries on the establishment of nuclear-free zones -- in the Balkans, in central and northern Europe, as well as in other European areas -- were highly appreciated at the conference.

At the Budapest conference it was again pointed out how important are the inititives of the allied European socialist states, such as the proposal to sign an agreement with NATO-member states on the mutual non-use of military force and on maintaining peaceful relations, as well as on establishing direct contacts between the Warsaw Pact and NATO organizations for the simultaneous withdrawal of USSR and U.S. naval forces from the Mediterranean, and establishing official relations between EEC and CEMA. The unchanging stand of the Budapest conference participants for the simultaneous disbanding of both the Warsaw Pact and NATO alliances was recalled, as well.

The program adopted by the allied European states, which they proposed to the peoples of the world, is comprehensive, efficient, and feasible. With full justification it was evaluated as the most remarkable contribution to the achievement of the universal, humanitarian goals of the International Peace Year.

The Budapest conference, held at the highest level, brilliantly showed the constructive and innovative strength of the unity of action of our parties, peoples, and countries, of the foreign policy, based on mutual coordination, which was promoted by them, a policy aimed at the prevention of the threat of nuclear war. The participants in the meeting mapped out new initiatives for a more extensive exchange of experience in socialist construction, for an even more efficient economic, scientific-technical, and cultural exchnage, and for increasing direct contacts among the working peoples of our fraternal countries. The readiness of the allied countries for mutual cooperation and comprehensive interaction with all other socialist states was also confirmed at the Budapest conference.

The Bulgarian people express deep satisfaction at the active and fruitful participation of the delegation from the People's Republic of Bulgaria, headed by Comrade Todor Zhivkov, in the work of the Budapest conference, and enthusiastically support the documents adopted at the Budapest meeting. These are documents of historic importance. For us, they represent an inspiring program of action, because they conform to our national interests, to the interests of the cause of socialism and peace throughout the world.

Bilak, Indra Addresses

[Excerpts] Deputies of the Chamber of the People and the Chamber of Nations met today in Prague at their first joint meeting in the new election period and elected leading representatives of the Federal Assembly.

After the agenda of the meeting was approved, Comrade Bilak, on behalf of the CPCZ Central Committee and the National Front Central Committee, delivered the proposal for the election of the leading officials of the Federal Assembly. The deputies of both chambers then undertook secret elections. After the adjournment of the meeting, during which the elections took place and the election commissions were in session, the meeting continued. Visal Bilak then spoke again:

[Begin recording] Esteemed Federal Assembly, I inform you that Deputy Comrade Alois Indra has been unanimously elected chairman of the Federal Assembly of the Czechoslovak SR. [applause] We sincerely congratulate Comrade Indra on his reelection as chairman of the Federal Assembly. Comrade Chairman, we wish you good health and many successes in your work in this important and responsible position. On behalf of all the deputies, I assure you that you will have our full support and help. [end recording]

At the close of the first joint meeting of the Chamber of the People and the Chamber of Nations, Alois Indra, chairman of the Federal Assembly, spoke. On behalf of the elected leading officials, he sincerely thanked them for the trust they had shown. The Federal Assembly, he said, is, according to the constitutional law, the highest organ of state power, and thus it shares responsibility for the realization of all the basic tasks of our country's domestic and foreign policy. Legislative activity must also be subordinate to this,and will, above all, serve the speeding up and improvement in the quality of economic and social development. Comrade Indra went on:

[Begin recording] We emerged from the people; we are part of them. The people elected us and we serve the people. In all of our activity we must remember that in our country the working people have all the power, that it is therefore our duty to strive not only for perfecting representative democracy but also to support the development of direct democracy -- the socialist self-management of the people. In concrete terms, this means that we will not just fulfill our national duty in the organs of the Federal Assembly, that we will only feel like deputies in this building. Our collective disucssion and decisionmaking will be more effective the more we make use of the knowledge of our people. In particular, it is a matter of our activity being undertaken directly in the electoral constituencies. We must act as socialist deputies everywhere and in all circumstances -- in our homes, work places, in public and in private. Together with the deputies to other representative bodies we form a huge army, almost 200,000 strong, of agitators and organizers. Not one of the so-called local problems must be foreign to us; we must not feel ourselves to be above the care of our fellow citizens. The authority of every one of us will be directly dependent on our activity in the election constituencies, our contacts with the voters, with national committees and social organizations. Every deputy to the Federal Assembly must see his main task as being the explanation of the policy of the CPCZ and the National Front -- he must gain people for its implementation; he must take part in fulfilling local election programs; he must learn to blend local interests with those of the whole society, naturally with an emphasis on the interests of society. Let us work in order to take such a part in the implementation of the conclusions of the 17th Congress of the CPCZ as befits the Federal Assembly. [applause] [end recording]

BILAK, VACLAVIK SPEAK AT ARMY PARTY AKTIV

[CTK report: "From Armywide Party Aktiv in Prague; Bringing Up Award Defenders and Builders of Socialism"]

[Excerpts] Prague (CTK) -- Tasks arising from the conclusions of the 17th CPCZ Congress for party organizations and all members of the Czechoslovak People's Army [CSLA] discussed at an armywide party aktiv in Prague on Tuesday 27 May. It was attended by Vasil Bilak, member of the Presidium and secretary of the CPCZ Central Committee; Colonel General Milan Vaclaviik, CSSR minister of national defense; Vladimir Blechta, head of the CPCZ Central Committee department; and other representatives.

In the discussion, Colonel General Milan Vaclavik said that members of the CSLA identify themselves fully with the line of the 17th CPCZ Congress, play an active part in implementing it with their work, and have a responsible approach to fulfilling the tasks connected with ensuring combat and political readiness. The party organization in the Army has an indispensale role in the whole process of improving the Army's combat capability. With their personal example, the members of the party organization help the other members of the Army to fulfill their military duties responsibly, strive to eliminate shortcomings in discipline, and support the commanders in resolving problems in their efforts for more efficient training, education, and mastery and maintenance of weapons and combat technology.

Comrade Vasil Bilak also spoke at the aktiv. In the opening part of his speech, he conveyed personal greetings to the participants from Gustav Husak, CPCZ Central Committee general secretary and CSSR president. He said he valued the results achieved by members of the CSLA with their initiative in the active fulfilment of pledges in honor of the 17th CPCZ Congress and the 65th anniversary of the party's founding.

He noted that the congress of Czechoslovak Communists had soberly, critically, and self-critically assessed the results of building the developed socialist society and adopted a program of accelerated social and economic development. Members of the CSLA, too, must take part in ensuring it. In this regard Communists in the rank of the CSLA Have an exceptional responsibility. The CSLA snd its members are a firm component of our society, fulfilling essential tasks in safeguarding the results of our people's work and, as an integral part of the Warsaw Pact, also tasks connected with the international defense of socialism. At the same time, the CSLA is a school of defenders and builders of the socialist society. From this arises the great responsibility of commanders and political workers for educating youth in the spirit of socialist patriotism and proletarian internationalism.

Vasil Bilak also noted the close interrelationship between domestic and foreign policy. Our plans and resolutions can be realized only in conditions of peace. The historical feud between capitalism and socialism cannot be resolved by war, but by mutual competition. There is no alternative to peaceful coexistence of states with different social systems. All this must be respected. The militarist circles of the NATO countries, led by the United States, do not want to abandon the mistaken notion that they will succeed in gaining superiority over the socialist community and dictate it its idea about the arrangement of the world. Chauvinism in the United States is acquiring dangerous dimensions. Demagoguery and megalomania silence sobriety and realism. Because of the fault of reactionary militarist circles, mankind has come close to a threshold beyond which events could slip out of control and cause a nuclear catastrophe. In this respect, research and the planned deployment of weapons in space are dangerous step.

The Soviet Union takes the initiative in opposing star wars, and instead of a policy of arms buildup it offers a policy of disarmament.

Since imperialist forces cannot afford to implement a policy of military confrontation, intimidation, and blackmail vis-a-vis the Soviet Union and the countries of the socialist community, they are trying to assert their hegemonist plans toward young, progresively-oriented countries of the developing world. They arbitrarily proclaim extensive territories in various parts of the world to be regions of their vital interests, they usurp the right to intervene in the internal developments of independent states, the right to export counterrevolution and to overthrow legitimate governments.

Vasil Bilak also condemned the attempts of revanchism, particularly West German revanchism, which is receiving support from the highest official quarters in the FRG, which encourage forces demanding new borders, the vitation of the results of World War II, and so forth.

In conclusion, Vasil Bilak said he would like the members of the CSLA to be a firm pillar of the peole, and in alliance with the Soviet Army and the other armies of pact be the pillar of the entire socialist community.

At the end of the armywide party aktiv in Prague, its participants sent a letter to the CPCZ Central Committee. In the letter they stress, among other things, that in accordance with the demands of the 17th CPCZ Congress commanders and political workers will step up their efforts aimed at improving organizational and management work and deepening the military skills and moral-political qualities of the members of the CSLA.

[Text] Jan Fojtik, CPCZ Central Committee Presidium candidate member and secretary and head of the CPCZ delegation to the Eight Congress of the DKP, delivered the following speech at the rally with Hamburg working people and DKP members held on 4 May:

Esteemed comrades, allow me first to express thanks on behalf of the CPCZ delegation for the invitation to the eighth congress of your party and for the opportunity to take part in this rally. The eighth congress of your party is convening in a complicated period, in an exacerbated international situation. The reactionary and militarist forces of imperialism, headed by the U.S. Government, are unleashing -- in spite of all peace rhetoric -- crazy armaments races, which they are even trying to transfer to outer space. They brazenly interfere in countries' internal affairs, voicing threats and endangering their freedom and independence. They are placing mankind on the verge of a nuclear catastrophe. The brutual U.S. aggression against Libya, which cannot be excused in any way, is one of the latest proofs of this dangerous policy. One of the imperialists' crimes is the constant heckling against the Soviet Union and the socialist community, the psychologicl war which they are waging against us regardless of any rules. This is a dangerous part of war preparations, camouflaged by phrases about the freedom of information, the fight for human rights, and so forth.

Together with you all, with the fighters of the antiwar movement, the Czechoslovak Communists are convinced that forces do exist which are capable of averting these dark prospects. In this respect we regard the strengthening of class solidarity as an urgent task of Communists, of the Communist and revolutionary workers parties. Their common course decisively contributes to expanding the cooperation of all progressive and peace-loving forces. It is also our common commitment to the legacy of Ernst Thaelmann, the great personality of the German Communist and workers movement, the unforgettable revolutionary, internationalist, and fighter agaisnt fascism, whose 100th birthday we noted a few days ago.

The 17th CPCZ Congress, held in March, dealt with the issues of the fight for peace and social progress, as well as the issues of the further development of our fatherland. It became a manifestation of our party's ideological and political unity, its cohesion, its unwavering loyalty ot Marxism-Leninism, and its devotion to the people, to socialism and peace. It was characterized by a deeply internationalist spirit, by support for the antiwar, anti-imperialist struggle of all revolutionalry and peace forces of the present epoch. The congress indentified itself with the Soviet Union's far-reaching peace program, proclaimed at the 27th CPSU Congress and aimed at the total liquidation of nuclear arms and all arms of mass destruction, at building a reliable security system and a world of a lasting peace and cooperation among the peoples. The congress reaffirmed that the consolidation of friendship and the deepening of cooperation with the fraternal socialist countries, above all the Soviet Union, are the cornerstone of our foreign policy. Today we are mainly concerned with utilizing the advantages of socialism more comprehensively both in individual countries, and within the framework of the entire community of socialist states. This requires a search for new and more effective forms of cooperation in all spheres --the political, economic, scientific-technical, and idological. The 17th CPCZ Congress worked out a strategic line for accelerating economic and social development, based primarily on the intensive implementation of Progress in research and development. It set the goal of achieving, in the next 15 years, the growth of the national income by more than two thirds, and the growth of the social labor productivity by almost tow thirds. It will thus be possible to create the necessary resources for increasing the populations personal consumption by at least 50 percent. We envisage a further increase of social consumption, a more resolute solution of ecological problems, a greater expansion of the working people's participation in the administration of state and public affairs, and the all-round deepening of socialist democracy. This will ensure a richer life of our citizens in the material and spiritual sense, the improvement of their living and working conditions, and a further improvement of Czechoslovakia's living standards.

Our party approaches the fulfillment of this program with full faith in its own strength, in the strength of the workers class and of all people. Throughout its entire 65-year history, it has headed the working people's fight for freedom and socialism. It has always seen the purpose of all its activity, and sees it now too, in serving the working people, in caring for their welfare, in striving to achieve progress and peace. The party's activity, its leading role, and the firm tie of the working people, ensured by Leninist methods and style of work, as well as by the party's loyalty to the revolutionary doctrine, are also inseparably connected with the further dynamic development of our socialist society, Jan Fojtik said.

In conclusion, he appraised the long-term cooperation between the DKPD amd CPCZ, based on the well-tested principles of Marxism-Leninism. He underscored the revolutionary enthusiasm and energy of the FRG Communists, with whom the CPCZ is connected by long-term ties of fraternal cooperation based on the well-tested principles of Marxism-Leninism; and wished them many successes in the fight for democratic changes in the FRG's social life.

KRENZ, NICARAGUA'S RAMIREZ DISCUSS CONTADORA

D16214 east berlin ADN International Service in German 1721 GMT 16 Jun 86

[Text] Berlin, 16 Jun (ADN) -- The firm resolve of their countries to do everything, together with all peace-loving forces, to counter the danger of a nuclear war, to end the arms race on earth and not to permit the militarization of space was underlined in Berlin today by SED Politburo member Egon Krenz, deputy chairman of the GDR State Council; and Vice President of the Republic of Nicaragua Dr Sergio Ramirez Mercado, during an exchange of views.

Both politicians emphasized that the new far-reaching disarmament proposals of the Warsaw Pact states, adopted by the meeting of the Political Consultative Committee in Warsaw, were renewed proof of the striving by the socialist countries to dismantle the danger to mankind posed by confrontation and arms drive policies by implementing constructive joint steps and to solve all disputes by negotiations in the interest of all peoples.

The interlocutors expressed their concern about the conflict in Central America. They condemned the U.S. policy of interference in the affairs of the region and called for an end to all forms of threat and the use of force against Nicaragua as well as for an immediate halt to all support for the counterrevolutionary gangs.

Both politicians were in agreement that all efforts have to be undertaken to continue the Contadora process of negotiation and to reach an agreement on peace and security in the region which is acceptable to all concerned.

Egon Krenz assured the high-ranked Nicaraguan guest that the GDR continues to stand with the Republic of Nicaragua in firm friendship and active solidarity and supported its struggle for the continuation of national and democratic reconstruction. He emphasized the principled position of the GDR regarding the peaceful solution of conflicts in Central America and welcomed the most recent constructive initiative by Nicaragua as well as the efforts by the Contadora states and the states in the Support Group which serve this aim.

Horizont: NATO Should Reconsider MBFR Position

AU121407 East Berlin HORIZONT in German issue No 6 1986 p 9

[Heinz Koenig "Commentary From Vienna: Taking Up Signals Constructively"]

[Text] At the 11th SED Congress Mikhail Gorbachev expounded the proposal to considerably reduce conventional armaments and armed forces from the Atlantic to the Urals. This initiative could also be a new incentitive for the Vienna negotiations that are oriented toward central Europe and the 39th round of which opened in mid-May. However, prerequistite for this is that the NATO states make their own contribution to ensuring that progress can finally be achieved at these talks, ewhich have been going on since 1973.

In the past the Western side has time and again invented pretexts for avoiding concrete disarmament steps in central Europe, for example, by pointing to the alleged superiority of the conventional armed forces of the Warsaw Pact. This also happened in connection with the most recent draft agreement submitted this February by the delegations of the CDR, the USSR, the Polish People's Republic, and the CSSR, which aims at a first result, which is perhaps modest in the military sense but is undoubtedly significant in the political sense.

The draft agreement envisages among other things the withdrawal of Soviet and U.S. ground forces totaling 11,500 and 6,500 men, respectively, with their weapons and equipment, and a freeze on the personnel strength and armaments of the ground and air forces for 3 years. It contains a number of confidence-building measures in that region. The draft agreement was submitted by the socialist countries after the NATO states had in principle approved the idea of such a phase of reduction and nonincrease by the end of 1985 and after they had noted an entire series of approximations or even identity in the views of the two sides in this respect.

Why then was there this sudden turnabout of the Western negotiators?

Aside from the refusal to include armaments in the reduction process now, it is the demand for verification measures that is considered of primary importance. But the socialist countries' proposal provides for various verification measures. thus even now the two sides possess national technical means enabling them to establish in good time military activities of a scope that are potentially dangerous to security -- and this is the only point at issue. In addition, a continuous exchange of information and the announcement in advance of relevant military exercises, movements and of call ups of reservists (exceeding 20,000 men at a time), as well as transit points on the borders of the area in question, constantly attended by inspectors of the other side could be agreed upon and the required verifications could be carried out on the spot. A consultative commission comprising representatives of the participating sides would act in cases of dispute.

All this would apply equally to both sides because the socialist countries are not less interested than the NATO sates in verifying the adherance to concluded treaties. It is now up to the NATO states to reconsider unrealistic positions and to constructively take up the signals that they have received from the Warsaw Pact member states.

DEFENSE MINISTER ADDRESSES GENERALS' MEETING

AU140738 East Berlin NEUES DEUTSCHLAND in German 30 Apr 86 p 2

[Text] Berlin (ADN) -- On 29 April a joint discussion of the collegium of the Ministry of National Defense and the Secretariat of the Political Main Administration of the National People's Army [NVA] dealt with the resolutions of the 11th SED Congress and the tasks resulting from them for the NVA, the GDR border troops, and civil defense. Leading generals, admirals, and officers participated in it.

In his address, Army General Heinz Kessler, SED Central Committee Politburo member and minister of national defense, proceeded from the fact that the resolutions of the 11th SED Congress to continue the tested coruse of the unity of economic and social policy aimed at the well-being of the people and the safeguarding of peace have found universal agreement and initiated numerous initiatives among the working people of the Republic and also amaong the armed defenders of socialism.

This is reflected in the efforts of the commanders, party workers, and field officers as well as in the performance of the soldiers in socialist competitin and in fulfilling the "FDJ assignment -- 11th SED congress." With good results in political and combat training, in the ready alert system, in securing the borders, air space, and territorial waters, they honorably fulfill their class assignment. The peace mission of the NVA includes maintaining a high level of fighting strength and combat readiness of all components and service branches in order to guarantee the creative peaceful work of the people in further shaping the development socialist society together with their comrades in arms.

At the center of attention are those tasks that have to be mastered by the time of the people's elections on 8 June 1986 and in the course of the second half-year of the training to make the party congress yar the most successful to date.

Army Gen Kessler called it a major concern of political-ideological work to hve talks with everyone and to further develop the climate of trust, in which all can fully develop their capacities and can do their best to strengthen socialism. In addition, the comprehensive intensifiction, the qualitatively new connectin of science and military affairs must be given even more attention in the struggle for high combat readiness. This is a broad field of work for innovators and youth research collectives.

The speaker reaffirmed the words of SED Central Committee General Secretary Erich Honecker, that the purposeful expansion of the fraternal alliance with the Soviet Union and the other socialist countries is a comprehensive contribution to universaly strengthen and increase the internatinal attractiveness of socialism. Completely in this spirit the GDR solders will untiringly deepend the comradeship-in-arms with the glorious Armed Forces of the USSR and the other fraternal armies. This is the guarantee to ensure that the Army members and broder solders of the GDR will conscientiously master the tasks set by the 11th party congress together with their allies an thus will at any time meet their duties to the people in safeguarding peace and protecting the socialist achievements.

The Army members, border soldiers, and civilian employees fully support the peace initiative of CPSU Central Committee General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev submitted at the 11th party congress effectively complementing the comprehensive program for liberating the world from nuclear weapons by the year 2000.

MAGYAR HIRLAP COMMENTS ON WARSAW PACT APPEAL

AU161212 Budapest MAGYAR HIRLAP in Hungarian 13 June 86 p 3

[Editorial signed by Jozsef Szaszi: "Appeal"]

[Text] The appeal addressed to the European countries by the Warsaw Pact in March 1969 from Budapest in which they concretely proposed the convening of an all-European conference became a house hold word in the postwar history of our continent. Since then waves of detente and chill have alternated in European and world politics, but Budapest is now again making an appeal: The appeal made by the session of the Political Consultatve Committee of the Warsaw Pact held in Budapest this week to the NATO member-countries and all the countries in Europe contains a concrete and realistic program aimed at reducing armed forces and conventional arms in Europe.

The 17 years separating the two appeals have been rich in events and experience. The first appeal was formulated on the eve of the seventies, considered to be the decade of detente, and it became a sort of overture of this detente. The appeal provided important negotiating subjects for the bilateral and multilateral diplomatic contaccts and encouraged the creation of a network of intricate relations. This system of relations tended in favor of a return to detente even during the period of the end of the seventies and the beginning of the eighties when Soviet-U.S. relations became strained and new sources of crisis appeared in world politics with markedly unfavorable effects on interstate relations in Europe.

If there were lessons of world political importance to be drawn from the European development of the last 17 years, then we must obviously list among these lessons the recognition of the fact that there can be no lasting political detente without parallel military detente. The unrestrained proliferation of the means of military confrontation on our continent -- something that we had to witness with sorrow even in the "heyday" of detente -- inevitably affects European policy in the form of an increasein the elements of political confrontation.

Another equally important lesson of this period is the fact that the European continent cannot build its own lasting peace as an isolated island separated from the rest of the world. Our earth is too small for that, and besides, the participation of the United States and Canada, as well as of the Soviet Union which spans the Asian Continent in the all-European processes, provides a tricontinental dimension to European affairs from the outset. Although the starting point of two world wars, Europe could come up with initiatives and could provide guidelines to world affairs. It is a particular mission of our old continent to consciously play this role for the benefit of a new era of detente.

Taking into consideration these important lessons of the last 17 years, the Warsaw Pact, accepting responsibility for peace in Europe and the world, concludes that "halting the arms race, switching to genuine disarmament, carrying out firm actions aimed at avoiding the threat of war, and taking concrete measures in this respect are today more necessary than ever." The new Budapest appeal contains a program of troop reductions affecting more than half a million soliders on both sides by the end of the century, a reduction of conventional arms, including a 25-percent reduction of strategic offensive air forces, and a reduction in operational-strategic nuclear arms with a range shorter than 1,000 km.

These proposals are aimed at reducing the level of military confrontation in Europe, and the second phase of the Stockholm conference in the MBFR talks in Vienna -- which could be expanded according to the appeal -- could serve as forums for concrete debate on these proposals. A new, all-European forum with the participation of the European countries, the United States, and Canada could also deal with these proposals. This proposal for a new forum creates a striking similarity between the Budapest appeal made in 1969 and the one signed in Budapest this week.

As to what will be the fate of the new initiative emanating from our capital, it is still difficult to perdict. The NATO secretary general's spokesman has promised a "careful analysis" but, in addition to welcoming praise among the reactions coming from the NATO countries, we also find disdainful reluctance. The future of the new proposals made by the Warsaw Pact will no doubt be determined by the results of the "careful analysis" of these proposals within the NATO circles.

At the latest session of the supreme forum of the Warsaw Pact in Budapest, it was often mentioned that nowadays the situation in world politics is critical. This conclusion stems from the lack of implementation of the expectations connected with the Geneva summit; the U.S. Administration's actions threatening the futue of the SALT treaties and of the entire SALT process; the rude assertion of the so-called "neoglobalism," with the intention to apply military force as a decisive political factor in areas remote from Washington; the renewal of the sharp rhetoric against the Soviet Union and the other socialist countries; lack of progress at the arms limitation talks and silence about or rejection of the new Soviet disarmament initiatives; the decline in the hopes for a summit meeting this year, and so on.

All these, of course, are harming the international milieu of the initiatives which the press agencies have been reporting from Budapest this week. And here we mean not only the proposals contained in the appeal but also the new and the previously outlined and renewed initiatives included in the communique of the Political Consultative Committee (on halting nuclear arms tests; on mutually eliminating the Soviet and U.S. intermediate-range missiles in Europe; on reaching concrete agreements at the talks on nuclear and space weapons; on eliminating chemical weapons; on considerably reducing armed forces and conventional arms on a global and regional level; and so on.)

The not exactly favorable developments of recent years and of the months following the Geneva summit are causing concern, and this concern is also reflected in the documents of the latest session held in Budapest this week. A ray of hope, however, is piercing the fog of concern.

The fact that the Warsaw Pact has today become a fundamentally important factor in world politics is a good reason for hope; everyone must take into account its strength, the unity of the socialist countries, and the strength of this unity and collaboration. It is also hopeful that the many achievements of detente have nevertheless overcome and are still overcoming the winds of the cold war, inter alia, in the form of strengthening relations, consultations, and confidence between the two parts of the European Continent. And this inevitably leads to the hope that the believers in understanding and cooperation and in the joint analysis of the rational proposals made in the latest Budapest appeal will increase both in numbers and in political weight in the other camp, too.

REAGAN INFLUENCED BY WASHINGTON 'HAWKS'

[Commentary by Endre Aczel]

[Text] First of all news connected with summit diplomacy, according to which U.S. President Reagan has proposed to Moscow a Soviet-American foreign ministerial meeting in order to prepare for the summit meeting scheduled to take place this year. The letter, in which Reagan made his proposal, was allegedly conciliatory. The following should be added to this: The Shultz-Shevardnadze meeting could have already taken place if the United States had not bombed Libya. Since it did bomb it, however, the Soviet Union called off this meeting. Since then Libya has come off the agenda; on the other hand, in a negative sense, SALT II has come to the forefront, which Reagan's spokesman has described as defunct.

Now, in order that the Soviet Union might give substantive consideration to Reagan's initiatives, whether or not connected with the foreign ministers' meeting, it would like to know if SALT is really dead in the eyes of the U.S. If so, the USSR might judge that in the field of strategic armament reduction the Reagan administration is deliberately stepping back. And on such a basis a summit meeting can hardly fulfill its mission, which is of progress.

The situation at the moment is a little enigmatic -- at least Moscow finds it so. It has been given a reason for this by the old man Armand Hammer, president of Occidental Petroleum, who, as MTI reported from London, had a meeting with Prime Minister Thatcher and Soviet Ambassador Zamyatin over the weekend. He told them that President Reagan has temporarily come under the influence of the Weinberger-type anti-SALT group; in reality, his views are not identical with their theirs. With this, therefore, he was advertising Reagan's good nature in a confidential circle. Today's PRAVDA, on the other hand, gave credit to the power take-over of the Washington hawks, and was of the view that a frontal attack is unfolding with regard to every kind of arms limitation discussion and agreement.

PRICES OF CERTAIN FOODS, BEVERAGES RISE 9 JUNE

[Text] The canned food industry enterprises, the oil-manufacturing factories, the Gabonatrost enterprise, the Budapest distilling industry enterprise, the municipal baking industry enterprise, and the marketing enterprises have informed the population that, due to the increase in production expenses, the consumer price of certain products will increase as of 9 June.

The consumer price of mass-produced noodles will increase by an average of 10 percent -- including an 8 percent increase in the price of cheap white noodles and those made with two eggs.

As a result of last year's increase in the production price of sugar, the price of various syrups will increase by an average of 5 percent.

Some Maggi and Szeged dehydrated soups and cubes, as well as food flavoring products manufactured by the canned food industry, will be more expensive by an average of 9 percent.

As a result of an increase in the price of basic materials, the consumer price of baking yeast will increase by an average of 9.5 percent, and that of vinegar by 13.8 percent. The price of 50 grams of prepacked baking yeast will increase from 1.20 forints to 1.30 forints, and that of 1 liter bottle of 20 degree vinegar will increase from 11.20 forints to 12.70 forints.

HOUSING, TRANSPORT, POSTAL BUDGETS DISCUSSED

[Sandor Csillag report]

[Summary] At its session today, the National Assembly's Construction and Transport Committee discussed a report on the implementation of last year's budgets of the construction and construction materials industry, transport, the post office, and telecommunications.

For the most part, the deputies discussed the damage done to the economy by the small number of homes to be built, owing to the cold weather, by the small number of people to travel full price, owing to the greater cost of transport, and by the ban on the installation of new telephones in many places, owing to the number of overburdened telephone exchanges.

In the construction industry, the cold winter of 1985 caused production losses of roughly 4 and 1/2 billion forints, from which the industry was unable to recover. Last year, 43 percent of the year's total number of homes were handed over in the fourth quarter, in Budapest, with numerous qualitative objections. Private home building slowed down; because of this, a supply surplus of certain building materials developed on the market.

In transport, the new establishments inaugurated during the year such as new streteches of the M-1 and the M-5 highways, the electrification of railway lines, and the No. 2 traffic building at Ferihegy Airport in Budapest caused perceptible improvement in travel conditions. However, the general condition of the roads is greatly deteriorating.

As for the post office: As a consequence of the price change in postal services, the number of posted and registered parcels decreased, but the number of parcels sent express increased. Furthermore, less money was sent by post, and Hungarians sent fewer telegrams last year then previously. Illes Toth, director of the post office, also said that the Hungarian Post Office had produced 80 billion forints in 1985; its expenditures were 58 billion forints, and it had profits of 22 billion forints. Sixteen billion of the 22 billion forint-profit were payed into the budget, as various taxes; out of the remaining 6 billion forints' profit, 4 billion went into a development fund, and 2 billion served workers' interest.

Received by Kadar

[Text] Janos Kadar has received the president of the Republic of Zimbabwe, Canaan Sodindo Banana. In the cordial discussion, they informed each other about their countries' predecements and exchanged views about international issues, including the situation which has developed in the southern Africa. They affirmed their readiness for the further expansion of bilateral relations and agreed that the present visit of the head of state of Zimbabwe was a valuable contribution to this.

The president of Zimbabwe, who arrived in our country today, earlier discussed with Pal Losonczi, president of the Presidential Council, the development of interstate relations and established that since their last meeting, progress has occurred in cooperation. The visits of ministers and other officials has been useful. They agreed that well-developing political relations create a favorable opportunity for the expansion of multilateral cooperation; both our country and Zimbabwe have a special interest in the development of economic-trade relations.

Particular attention was devoted to the situation on the European and African Continents, and they expressed their anxiety over the most recent developments in the southern part of Africa. Pal Losonczi and Canaan Sodindo Banana both emphasized the need for effective international action against the South African Government's apartheid policy, its increasing internal terror, and its aggressive acts against the surrounding independent African countries.

Dinner Toasts

[Text] Budapest, June 16 (MTI) -- Monday evening in Budapest, Pal Losonczi, president of the Presidential Council, and his wife hosted a gala dinner in honour of Canaan Sodindo Banana, president of the Republic of Zimbabwe, and his wife. Present were several members of the Hungarian Presidential Council and the government, and several leading personalities of Hungarian political and economic life.

Toasts were given by Pal Losonczi and Canaan Sodindo Banana.

Pal Losonczi stressed in his toast that his visit to Zimbabwe last year, and the current meeting, form parts of the friendship of the two peoples and the fruitful cooperation of the two countries. He highly appreciated the results which the young African state has attained in the difficult world economic situation and amidst the tense conditions of the South African region, in developing economy, improving the living conditions of the people and in establishing national consensus.

"We highly appreciate your consistent stand against imperialism and the apartheid policy, and for the just settlement of the problems of the South African region, your support to the national liberation movements, to the front-line countries, and your commitment to safeguarding international peace, promoting the cause of disarmament. The extensive appreciation towards your country is also apparent in the fact that the next meeting of presidents and prime ministers of the non-aligned countries will be held this August in the Republic of Zimbabwe."

Pal Losonczi assured the forces fighting against apartheid, including the African National Congress, of the solidarity of the Hungarian Government and people. He stressed: "We stand on the side of the African peoples, the African unity organization, in the self-sacrificing fight for eliminating the burdens of the past, for strengthening political sovereignty, and assuring economic independence.

"Besides our excellent political relations, we sincerely wish to attain progress in reciprocally advantageous economic and trade cooperation, the possibilities of which we have not exploited. The Hungarian Governmental and economic organs are consistently working in this interest. We are certain that the soonest possible founding of the inter-governmental joint commission will have encouraging effects on our economic relations", said Pal Losonczi.

In his toast Canaan Sodindo Banana voiced his belief that in the course of negotiations the sides will explore new possibilities for expanding bilateral relations, for cooperation in various fields. He pointed out that the mutual relations, which the leaders of the two countries strengthened with their visits, began in the period when the Hungarian people provided material, moral and diplomatic support to Zimbabwe in its liberating fight.

He voiced his hope that Hungary will participate in realizing several programmes in the first five-year development plan of Zimbabwe. In connection with his country's internal political situation he stated that the policy aimed at national consensus has resulted in genuine peace and national commitment.

"As is known, the racist regime of Pretoria commits direct open aggression against Angola, Botswana, Mozambique, Zimbabwe, Zambia, and Lesotho. However, the peace-and justice-loving people of our region have firmly decided, in spite of all blackmail and threats, that they will not only defend their freedom won from colonialism through struggles, but will attest full solidarity and will provide assistance to the South African masses, and to the people Namibia."

In the following he stressed that Hungary and Zimbabwe evaluate the developments that take place in several regions of the world in the same way, and show mutual concern for the cause of international peace and security.

Zimbabwe, as a non-aligned country, supports every effort aimed at strengthening international peace. "We sincerely hope that the results of the summit meeting of the non-aligned countries, to be held in Harare this autumn, will take us closer to strengthening world peace", said the president of Zimbabwe in conclusion.

JANOS BERECZ DISCUSSES ARTISTIC FREEDOM

[Text] Those in charge of cultural policy are aware that our social and economic aims cannot be realized without raising the educational-cultural level of the people. This statement was made at the opening of an exhbition today.

An international figurine and medal exhibition opened today in Nyiregyhaza. This exhibition is a summary of the work completed during the past 10 years. It was opened by Janos Berecz, secretary of the Central Committee. He said, among other things, the following:

[Begin Berecz recording] Hungarian artists live in a society engaged in the building of socialism. The overwhelming majority of artists identify themselves with this socialist reality and strive to depict it faithfully, participating in the struggle for making improvements, even though there are not only materialists among them but also those who hold other world views. Our policy toward the arts is characterized by openness. Our goal is to realize creative freedom to the fullest possible extent and to (?utilize) it together.

It follows from our principles that the cultural administration does not interfere with the internal processes of creative work. It respects the relative autonomy of the arts. It is aware that debates concerning styles or taste cannot and must not be decided by political means, by resorting to authority. We are working to ensure that the artistic works being created should be multifaceted, that many values should be reflected in them. [end recording]

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON BUJAK INVESTIGATION

LD162003 Warsaw PAP English 1846 GMT 16 Jun 86

[Text] Warsaw, June 16 -- Poland's Bureau of Investigation, acting under the supervision of the main Military Prosecutor's Office, has been conducting an intensive investigation in connection with the arrest of Zbigniew Bujak and his associates, a spokesman for the Polish interior minister reported today.

Hearings of Bujak have been going for a few days, and sequestered materials and documents are being scrutinized. According to preliminary estimates, the people under custody had been using equipment, information coding, and a communications system applied in classical espionage activity. By way of example, computer-coded information was found.

Meanwhile, according to the same report, cells printing and circulating illegal publications and leaflets were liquidated in Warsaw. The spokesman said two people who he named as Marta Ch. and Wladyslaw H., executive members of the so-called regional executive commission of Mazowsze chapter, were detained, among other people. Printing equipment and a considerable number of illegal periodicals, including "MAZOWSZE" weekly, printing moulds, transparencies, printing paper, and other materials alongside financial records and organization documents were sequestered, the spokesman said.

[Text] Warsaw, June 16 -- By the permission of Poland's military prosecutor's office, the main TV news tonight broadcast a part of Zbigniew Bujak's hearings during which he was questioned about the source of the U.S. dollars confiscated on his arrest. Zbigniew Bujak said that the 2,000 U.S. dollars found on him were royalties earned by granting interviews to representatives of Western mass media. Usually, interviews are not paid, but the ones he granted were of special kind, he said.

The Polish TV also presented the equipment, documents and materials sequestered upon his detention. According to preliminary analysis, the equipment, information records and communications system at his disposal were of the kind usually applied in classic intelligence operations.

Urban Statement

[Text] Warsaw, June 17: Polish Government spokesman Minister Jerzy Urban told foreign journalists at a press conference today that an official from one Polish ministry, Zbigniew Wroniak, had been detained on charges of obstructing the investigation against Zbigniew Bujak. "I cannot, however, confirm the fact of Wroniak's cooperation with the underground," the spokesman said.

Asked about a possibility of a political amnesty in Poland, Urban said such a decision could not be ruled out in the long run when domestic conditions are conducive to such a move. "As to a possible timing, I have nothing to say at this moment," the government spokesman told the conference.

Referring to latest attempts at disrupting public order in a locality outside Krakow, southern Poland, urban said Anna Walentynowicz, who was taking part in them, had been detained for refusing to produce her identity card. She was released after questioning, he added.

Minister Urban also stated that the case of Piotr Niemczyk and Jacek Czaputowicz, members of the illegal organization "Pokoj i Wolnosc" (Pease and Freedom) was transmitted from the regional prosecutor's office in Warsaw to the chief military prosecutor's office due to the fact that the two were found to have links with foreign services acting against Poland's interests.

ORZECHOWSKI DISCUSSES INTERNATIONAL SITUATION

[Text] Warsaw, June 13 -- The Warsaw evening daily express WIECZORNY carries today an extensive interview with Polish foreign minister Marian Orzechowski on the current international situation. Excerpts:

"The international situation is characterized by an accumulation of many tensions," the minister said. "We know well where to look for their sources -- in the aggressive policy of the U.S., in its strive to change the present balance of forces, to impose 'Pax Americana' upon the world, to hinder creative transformations underway in the community of socialist states. Our greatest concern stems from the prospect of transfering the arms race into outer space. Facing those dangers, we feel awe, but, fortunately enough, we are not left defenceless."

"The real way to free the humanity of the treat of nuclear disaster is defined by Soviet initiatives and the policy of the socialist states community. These express the most vital interests not only of our nations, but exactly of the entire humanity."

"It is obvious that Poland is vitally interested in strengthening trends of detente as it repeatedly expressed this stance."

Speaking about Poland's foreign relations, Miniter Orzechowski said: "In the divided world, ties with the socialist community provide the opportunity to live in peace, and are a foundation of our national security."

"Our political, economic, cultural and scientific contracts with ccapitalist states have served for years not only bilateral interests but paved the way for the policy of detente as well. They got limited not by fault of ours."

"The strive to set up optimal assumptions fr international security and equal cooperation of all European countries was and remains to be a significant goal of our foreign policy."

"Increasingly more political forces and governemnts in the West depart from their hitherto policy towards Poland. This came as a result of the process of internal stabilization in Poland, strengthening our position and role in the socialist community."

"Our return to full normalization also entails a return to honest approach towards documents concerning Europe -- from Yalta and Potsdam to the most significant acts of the CSCE process, towards what established and reinforced the current political-territorial shape of our continent."

"Another firm direction of Poland's foreign policy is that of our relations with the Third Wold where we have been observing an animation of political, economic, cultural and scientific contacts in recent years."

IAEA DELEGATE ON RESULTS OF 10-13 JUNE SESSION

[Text] Vienna, June 15: Chairman of the Polish delegation, the chairman of the Polish Atomics Agency, Mieczylsaw Sowinski told PAP about the course and outcome o the routine session of the Board of Governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency IAEA, held June 10-13 at the agency's Vienna headquarters.

Sowinski, who also holds the post of the board's vice-chairman said that the session was mainly occupied with the reactor breakdown which occured at the Chernobyl nuclear power station. Sowinski noted that a "general tendency to work out international standards ensuring full use of the information and experience acquired in the course of this breakdown was clearly perceptible throughout the conference."

According to Sowinski, the board recongnized the necessity to promptly prepare two draft international conventions: One concerning the establishment of a system of early information and warning of other states in case of a breakdown, and th other on providing assistance to a state where the breakdown occured.

The two draft conventions are already being worked out by the IAEA secretariat, and will be distributed next week among the IAEA-member states, Sowinski added.

At a conference scheduled for the end of August in Vienna, Soviet experts will present some 250 IAEA representatives a "report" from Chernobyl. A high-level international conference will be held by the end of September, just prior to the IAEA general conference annual meeting. All these undertakings best prove the fact that all the countries approach the matter seriously and are genuine in their desire to solve problems resulting form the Chernobyl breakdown, he stressed.

"Poland will actively participate in both the preparation of draft conventions and the agency's future activities," declared Sowinski. "It is very important for us to take maximum advantage of this experience in the implementation of our own nuclear programme. Most probably, it will come to the elaboration of a coordinated cooperation programme encompassing various international organizations, and aimed at improving security and finding effective countermeasures to the results of a possible nuclear breakdown."

Speaking on current radioactivity levels in Poland, Sowinski said that since mid-May they are nearly back to normal, but every once in a while increased-radioactivity spots are still being reported.

"For this reason we are closely monitoring the situation," he said. "The iodine-131 levels do not exceed their initial values by more than 1.5 percent. There are some other isotopes still present, though, but their concentrations are very low. But as far as food is concerned, these minute contaminations do not actually pose any threat, they are even below the very strict standards imposed by the EEC states."

JARUZELSKI GREETS GDR-POLISH YOUTH MEETING

[Message by PZPR First Secretary Wojciech Jaruzelski to the Cottbus Meeting of GDR and Polish Youth]

[Text] Dear friends, on behalf of the PPR party and state authorities I wish to extend to you our most cordial greetings. Your meeting of youth and friendship is taking place in the vicinity of the Polish-GDR border, which links us instead of dividing us. Last year's meeting was also held near the border -- in Szczecin.

Thanks to the sacrifices of the Soviet and Polish soldiers and the German antifascists and thanks to socialism, which has changed history, the PPR and the GDR have created a border of lasting peace and fraternal cooperation along the Oder and Nysa rivers. It is with special emotion that we recall the days of 41 years ago and pay homage to the heroes who gave their lives so that succeeding generations might live in peace. Our neighboring peoples and countries, which are allied with the USSR and all the socialist countries, continue to develop and to tighten their political, social, cultural, and economic links. We are jointly approaching the 21st century, which we will enter across the bridge created by the program that the PZPR will adopt at its 10th congress and by the program that the 9th SED Congress already adopted

Efforts to build a favorable future are possible only under conditiions of peace. It is our wish that the tragic war experience of your elders never becomes the share of the young generations. Our peace is in danger. American imperialism continues to promote the mad programs of "star wars." We are shocked by the U.S. Government's brutal armed interventions and by reports of the innocent victims in Libya and Nicaragua. It is with great anxiety that we see the growth of the forces of revenge and militarism in the FRG -- forces that have been unequivically condemned by history. It is with satisfaction and hope that we welcome Soviet initiatives. By supporting them we stand united in the struggle against the forces of imperialism and international reaction, which continue to push the world to the brink of nuclear annihilation. Old and new experience shows that peace is not something that can last forever. We must protect it through daily efforts in military service, in schools, and in various jobs, including scientific and artistic jobs.

Dear friends, this summer even more Polish and GDR chidren will cross the Oder and Nysa Bridges to spend vacations in Poland and the GDR. These will be our fourth exchange vacations. It is good that you are able to hold this meeting, to compare impresions, to establish lasting friendships, and to find out that it is possible to go forward faster in unity. Constant efforts to strengthen the friendship between our generations and to promote internationalist ties are an extremely valuable experience, the significance of which reaches far out into the 21st century. I wish you interesting meetings, fruitful discussion, satisfaction with your work, many joyous impressions of joint vacations, and a fine sunny summer on both sides of the Oder and Nysa rivers. May the participants in the third meeting of friendship and the authorities of Cottbus enjoy many successes and unforgettable experiences.

CONGRESS DELEGATES EVALUATE DRAFT RESOLUTION

[Text] A meeting of more than 200 delegates to the 10th PZPR Congress who represent the Katowice Voivodship party organization was held in Katowice today. The meeting was devoted to discussion of the draft resolution of the 10th congress. It was conducted in five issue teams and included suggestions and conclusions that had been put forward earlier. The delegates approved the submitted draft resolution without questioning the fundamental assumptions. It was unanimously emphasized during the discussion that the most important task now is to achieve an improvement in the standard of living of work teams and their families while preserving and adhering to the principles of social justice. It was stated among other things that the 10th party congress should define investment priorities in areas important to the economy with particular emphasis put on the processing industry. An important issue is to intensify export and at the same time to exercise stricter control over import activities. One ought to eliminate effectively all signs of mismanagement, waste, and the phenomenon of unjustified increase of incomes in the private sector.

Premier Zbigniew Messner met the Katowice Voivodship delegates to the 10th party congress. Answering questions, he discussed, inter alia, issues relating to Poland's participation in the IMF and the urgent social problem that is the matter of pensions and annuities.

The meeting, which was chaired by Bogumil Ferensztajn, first secretary of the party voivodship committee in Katowice, was attended also by Jerzy Romanik, member of the party Central Committee Politburo, and Depouty Premer Manfred Gorywoda.

FINANCE MINISTER OUTLINES DEBT PROBLEMS

[Quotation marks as received]

[Text] Warsaw, June 13 -- Students' weekly ITD published a report on a statement made by Poland's minister of Finance Stanislaw Nieckarz at a students' discussion centre in Warsaw and concerning Poland's debt and exports.

Following are excerpts of the report:

Volume of Debt: Poland's debt will affect her position and developmental capabilities for many years to come, and we shall have to deal with the problem of paying it back, till the end of the century. On January 1, 1986 the debt totalled 29.3 billion dollars and its structure was as follows:

Poland owed 16 Western countries the total of 16.7 billion dollars, USSR and CEMA banks -- 2.3 billion dollars, Arab countries -- 0.7 billion, other countries of the world (Latin America, Asia) -- 2.3 billion, unpaid interest -- 4 billion dollars, various financial and deposit operations, short term credits -- 3.3 billion dollars.

Poland owed the largest sums to:

FRG -- 3.7 billion dollars, U.S. - 2.7 billion, France -- 2.2 billion, Austria -- 2.2 billion, Britain -- 1.6 billion.

Over the first quarter of the year, the debt grew by some 2 billion dollars and at the end of March it totalled 31.2 billion. This was a nominal growth ensuring from the drop of the dollar rate in relations to other world currencies. Poland's balance of payment shows 5.8 billion transfer roubles debt in relations with CMEA countries.

Export and Creditors: These are a number of figures which in themselves, however, do not visualize the scale of debt (many Western countries have much higher debts). Comparison between various countries has its significance when debts are juxtaposed with export incomes. At Poland's annual incomes of 6.2 billion dollars, 31.2 billion debt is an enormous sum, and in respect to this proportion we are in the group of countries in the most difficult payment situation. The scale of problem is also illustrated by other calculations.

In terms of debt per capita, annual export incomes are low. They give us the last position in Europe.

Thus, the problem of debt is the problem of volume and value of export. To maintain our debt at the present level, Poland would have to allocate more than 3 billion dollars a year to service interests alone, which at our incomes is of course impossible.

Therefore, government conducts double-stream negotiations with creditors, with the Paris Club that is with creditors who gave us government guaranteed credits and with representatives of some 550 private or commercial banks from all over the world. The talks concern rescheduling of payments. But the rescheduling costs.

In talks with creditors, Poland presents a stance that in our conditions we cannot afford to repay debt at the expense of weakening the country's economic development or of further lowering population's standard of living. The only way out is to boost exports which requires an influx of new money from the West to modernize and to up-date Poland's economic potential, to create larger and more modern export production. Certainly, growth of Poland's export capabilities must be linked to corresponding changes in the structure of production and economy.

Western countries show deep restraint towards offers of granting us fresh credits but they also realize that without new money we shall not service old debts. The point is, however, to properly use the credits, that is to boost production and not consumption. Both sides are concerned about this. Our financial cooperation with Western countries gradually improves although full normalization is still a far long away.

"We must fully use all chances to develop export. If we do not increase export capabilities of Poland's economy, you will have to take into account that we shall not be able to handle the problem of our debt before you retire, and you are still young," said Nieckarz.

The only way out is to base the export dynamics on higher import of capital goods. This is the stance we present in the Paris Club. For the time being we assume that some 20 per cent of incomes from export of goods will be allocated for servicing the debt. Still the realization of the task will not be easy as there is a strong social pressure to increase outlays for social needs such as housing and the whole non-productive sphere.

Debt Servicing in Relation to Volume of Export: The point is to fix servicing at a level corresponding to exports. Poland has a detailed script in this respect even up to 1995 and if we implement it consistently, we stand a chance to win financial balance.

Private Dollar Accounts in Poland: Asked about the amount of dollars on private accounts with the PKO bank [general savings bank], Nieckarz said: "We are informed on the issue every month. In the first three months of the year, the quota rose by close to 100 million dollars. The joint value of currency deposits on population's bank accounts totals 1.5 billion dollars.

Pro-Export Bank: Such bank will be actually set up on the principle that it will receive for example 20 million dollars and several billion zlotys as a credit quota and will have to multiply the money.

"Let its employees go from an enterprise to an enterprise, offer them credits in currency and zlotys to be later serviced by export incomes," Nieckarz said.

MIODOWICZ ADDRESSES OPZZ PRESS CONFERENCE

[Teresa Grabczynska report]

[Excerpts] On 23 May at the OPZZ headquarters, there was a press conference attended by OPZZ Chairman Alfred Miodowicz and representatives of the trade union team responsible for matters connected with collective labor agreements.

The hosts presented to journalists arguments in favor of the rapid introduction of new collective labor agreements based on the trade unions own concept.

A. Miodowicz stressed in his introduction that the trade union movement may still function without collective labor agreements while the repeated accusations about the OPZZ-proposed model for collective labor agreements being a violation of the economic reform are being examined. But we are striving to introduce these agreements because they provide new institutional solutions to all issues raised by an employee to his superiors and vice versa. And we are not hiding the fact that the greatest number of conflicts and misunderstandings arises during this process.

Those who oppose the trade union proposals wrongly identify the current collective agreements with those that were concluded in the sixties and seventies. Those were merely an ostentatious collection of obligatory rules for the entire industrial branch. Today we are dealing solely with framework agreements which merely establish a minimum level of wages and benefits for workers in a given branch. What is new about these agreements, however, is that they are social accords concluded inside work places.

Why are we insisting on such solutions? Because they reflect the reality of the economy without breaking its legal rules, and because they stem from the structure of our movement. They transfer the entire burden, the entire "game" to the factories in which independent and self-governing trade unions -- which we in the trade federations and in the OPZZ are merely representing -- are the partners of the state administration.

A. Miodowicz explained that controversies occur most often when factory agreements are identified with the wages systems already existing in factories. We intend to abolish nothing in this sphere, but to "consummate" these wages systems by means of accords if that is the joint wish of the managements, unions, and self-management bodies.

Neither do we fear bargaining between branches. They must accept the fact that if they include factories that are economically weak, they would merely condemn these factories to bankruptcy if they demanded higher wages.

Here we are presenting our interests, but the government also has its own. We respect opinions mutually. It is the deputies of the Sejm who will give a final decision on these, concluded the OPZZ chairman.

POLITBURO'S RAKOWSKI VIEWS RISE OF SOLIDARITY

AU031415 Budapest MAGYAR NEMZET in Hungarian 31 May 86 p 6

[Interview given by Mieczyslaw Rakowski, member of the PZPR Central Committee Politburo and vice marshal of Sejm, to correspondent Miklos Ritecz in Warsaw: "Warsaw Is Looking to the Future -- Dialogue With Mieczyslaw Rakowski" -- date not given; first paragraph is paper's introduction]

[Text] People in Poland reckon that the coming party congress could turn out to be a signal for the end of a very difficult period and people will rather start looking ahead to the future. However, both party members and non-party members wish to learn the lesson of the past and to make use of the experience gained in order to solve urgent social and economic tasks. This, among other things, was the subject of a conversation with Mieczyslaw Rakowski, member of the Politburo and vice marshal of the Sejm, who received our correspondent in his Warsaw office for an interview.

Democratization Process

[Ritecz] Apart from your other important assignments, you are now also the head of the Socioeconomic Council of the Sejm. What was the reason for forming such a commission in Poland?

[Rakowski] Following the storms of our recent past, it was necessary to establish an organization where everyone could express their views on the most important issues. The main purpose of the council is to provide a forum for independent workers' groups and various factory committees where they can directly participate in political life and in decisionmaking. The council was formed as an experiment after the declaration of martial law and it incorporates some 250 members who represent all strata of prominent scientists, youth, and society. I would like to emphasize that this body's function is to submit opinions and give advice on various matters; it could have an influence on the Sejm when it deals with vital issues. The establishment of this Socioeconomic Council services to strengthen the process of democratization taking place within the system. At the moment we are at a point where we can ask: Do people really need this organization? I think it is useful. The point is simply that in socialism, where education is increasing, it is a natural requirement for the masses to take a direct part in shaping politics.

[Ritecz] What sort of changes in social development have you noticed which might have affected legislation in the period since 1972, that is, in the time you have been a member of parliament?

[Rakowski] We could write a whole book about analyzing this era. In any case, I would call the seventies a complete and particular period, the opening of which was marked by the optimistic economic plans. Actually, society had accepted the targets and participated as a partner realizing them. However, in the middle of the decade a certain decline appeared. The reasons for it should not be sought only within the country; one could also add the oil crisis, which caused significant changes in the world's economy.

A New Chapter

After a good start, one should have stopped the big investments and sudden developments of that time. The administration did not do this. In other words, it did not understand the effects of the world crisis. It was also false to think that the problems of capitalism would not affect socialism. It seems strange, but it was as if the leaders had forgotten about our close ties with the West at that time. These mistakes led to a deterioration in public mood, and we can talk about serious dissension as early as the mid-seventies.

This is why such groups as the KOR [Worker's Defense Committee] could start their oposition activities and penetrate various social groups and, from 1976, exert their influence even in factories. They are the ones who prepared the cadres of the subsequent solidarity. We can describe the strikes in the summer of 1980 as the final period of this process, the reasons for and the scale of which had again been not recognized by the upper circles. In addition, we can also talk about a crisis in management which people tried to solve by changes in personnel.

[Ritecz] This is the time when they signed the coastal agreements as well...

[Rakowski] Yes, and in August 1980 these agreements opened up a new chapter in Poland's modern history, which ended with the introduction of martial law. What happened in this eventual year has been widely discussed and I think people in Hungary know this period very well. The workers' protests were justified, but unfortunately, anarchist forces exploited the rightful anger and infiltrated Solidarity.

[Ritecz] Does this mean that at the beginning the new leadership treated the trade union as a partner?

[Rakowski] Of course. However, efforts to eliminate extremist activities did not bring the desired result. There was a sudden economic decline, which resulted in increasing attacks on the party. People wanted to get rid of the basic PZPR organizations in factories.

[Ritecz] As deputy premier, you lead the talks with Solidarity. What do you think was the reason that no common ground was found during the long dialogues?

[Rakowski] Above all, the reason was that the trade union representatives did not show the least indication for cooperation. This, of course, did not mean that the masses wanted the same. Unfortunately, Walesa's group was strongly influenced by some "advisers" who were known for their antisocialist views. Perhaps it seemed possible in the first half of 1981 to think about an agreement, but the leaders of Solidarity exploited the intuitive emotions of the masses and turned part of the general public against the authorities.

Historical Reasons

By the end of 1981 they openly attacked the system and the introduction of martial law was inevitable for both historical and national reasons. The critics of that time today acknowledge that in taking that step, the utmost consideration was given to the Polish people's interest.

[Ritecz] Did you participate directly in preparing martial law?

[Rakowski] No, because the details of martial law were prepared and executed by the People's Army and the Ministry of Interior. Of course, I was aware of the concept, and thought that the step was inevitable. I sensed this even in October when we had conducted the fruitless talks.

[Ritecz] To what extent were you able to make society accept the measures, since according to the reports at the time, many people opposed this step?

[Rakowski] I would not say that. A few months after the December events, we took an opinion poll and the result was that 63 percent of the population agreed with putting an end to anarchy. In my opinion, by then the Poles were tired of the situation. I am not talking about the demonstrations alone; the empty shops and everyday difficulties increased pessimism. Had the masses been against the martial law, the streets would have been covered with barricades. On the other hand, small-scale protests seemed insignificant, compared with our important measures.

[Ritecz] Were you not afraid that all this could happen?

[Rakowski] Of course we were. However, we were later criticized for waiting until December to introduce order and for not having done it earlier.

It became urgent to provide conditions for order, because in Radom Solidarity was calling for an open confrontation and Modzelewski declared that "this will be their final battle." As you see, the extremists had completely lost their sense of reality and it was time to wake them up.

High Expectations

[Ritecz] From then on things began to improve, if slowly and gradually...

[Rakowski] Indeed, 13 December 1981 opened up a new chapter in Polish history. Since then the economy has been picking up and the party is regaining its prestige. Of course, the PZPR has had to struggle constantly, because as you well known, it lost 1 million members in those critical times and this certainly caused some psychological crisis in its ranks. However, if we compare the party then with the party today, we see a great difference; naturally to the advantage of the present one.

[Ritecz] Is it possible that the high expectations prior to the congress at the end of June are based precisely on the renewal?

[Rakowski] It is because people are traditionally waiting for something new, and this present conference could mark the present level of stabilization within society. Besides, we have moved on from the verv important 9th congress, the thoughts of which we must carry forward. It is a fact that we have arrived at a new phase in the development of Polish society, and from now on we will be paying attention to our future tasks.

GLEMP GIVES SERMON ON CHURCH'S DIFFICULTIES

AU270404 Krakow TYGODNIK POWSZECHNY in Polish 18 May 86 p 2

["Excerpts" from sermon delivered by Jozef Cardinal Glemp at the 11 May Krakow religious service marking St. Stanislaus Day]

[Text] Some 907 years ago, the Vistula flowed past the Wawel Castle exactly as it now still flows, but the country was oppressed by enormous tensions and by discontentment with the unrestraint of those in power. Stanislaus, bishop of Krakow, whose task was to guard divine laws and human rights, could not be indifferent to growing discontent and the violations of these laws and rights. That is why he continued to invoke these laws and rights, which every ruler should respect. However, King Boleslaw the Bold solved the growing conflict the only way he knew -- with the sword. But the sword would not always bring peace, especially when the people continued to be wronged. The king was the loser; he lost his kingdom. Those who defended human rights, which it is the church's mission to defend, won the day.

Some 900 years after the conflict, we wonder what progress the world has made in more effectively eliminating various wrongs and the causes for the present ills. It is true that progress has been made under the impact of two epoch-making inventions: Nuclear energy and dialogue.

When we think of the past, we notice that it can be linked to the present and we are curious to know about the foundations of the present dialogue. No doubt the dialogue is a difficult proposition for both sides. We could list endless examples of the nations within which dialogue and revenge exist side by side and within which dialogue is not a universal feature.

However, today I am not interested in listing complaints and wrongs. I want to ponder the effectiveness of dialogue, which came into vogue not so long ago, and on its obstacles. Have we produced any results? I think we have, all the more so since dialogue involves more than just ecclesiastical matters. It also involves the problems of people in our fatherland and abroad. It involves the dignity and freedom of man, as well as his right to practice religion in public, in his own parish and temple, to dispense neighborly love, to organize charitable help, to promote initiative in his community, to combat wrongs, and to foster honesty and not make gestures that are mere window-dressing and lip-service. These are rudimentary results.

The present dialogue is experiencing two basic difficulties -- changing of partners and efforts to snarl up the truth. I have no idea how long ideologies are able to survive, but I know that since they are created by human beings, they are fickle and undergo evolutions. On the other hand, possessing god's unchangeable principles ("My kingdom is not of this world"), the church continues to carry its own truth amid the changes in the world and to adapt its inner existence to the conditions of the times, while being a touchstone of opposition. Meanwhile, our partners continue to forecast our prompt demise. Real and sham followers of ideology continue to tell us that the discovery of the new laws governing the world -- scientific and objective laws -- augurs a new era of withering of faith. They say that if anyone should indulge in a private hobby [preceding word in English] of "believing," he will not be harassed. Mankind will ultimately comprehend that a human being is a function of highly organized protein and that, having freed itself from religion, the human being will submit itself to a single rule, which will ensure peace, blissful happiness, and culture that will satisfy even still higher functions of protein. The so-called follows of the new ideology assert that at one time Christianity converted mankind by force, that rulers were christened by foreigners by purely political procedures, and that after a time the heathens incited by heathen priests would rise, but were promptly smothered and Christianity was able to rule in peace. (Passage deleted in line with censorship law of 31 July 1981)

In addition, they continue to publish data to the effect that alcohol consumption usually increases in August, a month during which the church appeals for sobriety by revoking religious and national considerations. The conclusion is obvious: The church has no influence whatsoever on the nation's moral attitudes. When we ask the managers of liquor shops about sales in August, they say that sales go down by about one-third. Enterprises tell us that in August the number of work accidents caused by alcohol decreases considerably. This is reality, but official statistics show that alcohol consumption increases. Is this not snarling up the truth in order to make dialogue difficult? (prolonged applause)

LEFTIST CHRISTIAN STANCE ON CHURCH-STATE DIALOGUE

[Article by Kazimierz Morawski, chairman of the Christian Social Association main administration: "To Wait or To Cooperate?"]

[Excerpts] Some organs of the conservative Catholic press continue to grumble that there is supposedly no climate for a state-church dialogue and no progress in agreement and even to assert that conditions for a dialogue still have to be created. The truth is that the period before the Sejm elections and the present precongress campaign have demonstrated that the dialogue between the center of power and the people is not an empty slogan.

As proved by reality, there is a place in this dialogue for all who want to participate in it, regardless of their views and attitudes, provided the principles of our socialist state are respected. Those who would like to do away with the socialist state are necessarily bound to find themselves in a vacuum. Perhaps this is why they assume that there is no dialogue and no progress in national agreement.

It is impossible to come to terms with the view, which not only the conservative Catholics profess, that a true dialogue is one that would concern the restoration in our national and state life of the old concepts, couched anew, that brought our country to the brink of a national catastrophe not so long ago. It is enough to take a look around to see that, despite the resistance of the people harking back to the past, the dialogue continues to be productive at various level of life. Take the church-state dialogue, for example, about which Cardinal Glemp often says that it is continuing and is not unproductive.

Participation in the dialogue on our people's important matters is neither a privilege or a concession to anyone. This participation and efforts to improve our country's situation are a patriotic duty of anyone who opposes the principle that the worse the situation, the better it is. Some so-called true Catholic journalists hailing from conservative circles, who usurp for themselves the exclusive right to represent social Catholicism and Catholic opinion in our country, often assume the pious attitude of national oracles when discussing public matters, and judge and instruct all and sundry. They have much arrogance, but no modesty.

The position of leftist Christians on public affairs has been clear for a long time now. We are for active participation in the country's socialist development as allies of the workers party. Our alliance with the party and socialism has never been a seasonal or opportunistic feature. It is an expression of our ideological choice and of our solicitude for the cause that we think is of the best service for Poland's development and security.

To those who sham dialogue, usurp the right to represent true Catholicism, and lead the faithful into a blind alley, we say that the only way to ensure the development of Christianity in socialist Poland is to actively participate in the efforts to improve our socialist reality in line with the requirements of the time and with the people's aspirations.

What hopes can responsible Christianity entertain in connection with the orientation of negation, withdrawal, and of waiting for socialism to pass away? The only result of such hopes is that the position of Christianity in social, cultural, and educational life and the presence of Christian values in the socialist development of our reality will diminish and not gain in strength. Let us be aware of the fact that the stream that is activated by various trends of anticonstitutional opposition and by various forms of negation is the cause of enormous damage to the issues of Christianity and to the church in our country.

At time people are afraid that efforts allegedly are being made to destroy religion and the church. I do not think so. There are certainly figures who regard themselves as adversaries of God, rather than as politicians or state officials, but they do not represent state policy, which as we know, is wholeheartedly for agreement and cooperation with various factions of our society and for winning and not repulsing various allies. On the strength of their experience and as socialism progresses worldwide, the Communists in Poland and in other countries continue to an increasing extent to tackle socioeconomic and political problems that they must solve in common with the believers. And there will be more and more of these problems. I think that the issues of differences in outlooks continue to lose significance in view of the great challenges facing all of us in connection with the new century.

The socialist state and its institutions are the property of all the people, including the faithful and practicing believers. That is why, in the same way as the school, the state and its institutions should not be used as a means to an end and should not be areas of the struggle for world outlooks because such a struggle produces bad results for our entire national community and for the prospects of socialist development. At the same time, everything should be done to ensure that Christianity and its institutions are not carriers of obsolete ideas. That is why even more intensive efforts should be made to resist the activities of those Catholic and Christian centers that, believing in the past, want to gear pastoral activities and religion itself to the political activities that disintegrate and destabilize our social and economic life. These activities must be resisted because they have a negative impact on church-state relations and their prospects and on the increase of non-party people and believers in public life, an increase we all desire.

We will be unable to improve our people's moral health on the basis of the so-called double standard and of disrespect for our state and its institutions. If the state does not belong to us, then why not swindle it? Why work? Why make efforts for the sake of the state's prosperity? If the state does not belong to us, then everything is of equivocal significance, including respect for the laws instituted by the state. We are interested in speeding up our socioeconomic development, and this is why it is worth pondering what should and should not be done to ensure that the people's awareness and attitudes best serve this task.

REPORTAGE ON CEAUSESCU VISIT TO BRASOV COUNTY

Visits Industrial Units

AU132032 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 1608 GMT 13 Jun 86

[Text] Bucharest, AGERPRES 13/6/1986 -- On June 13, President Nicolae Ceausescu and Mme Elena Ceausescu started a working visit to Brasov County. The goal of the visit is to analyse the activity carried out by collectivities in industrial and farming units in the first semester of the year, and to set modalities whereby Brasov County may fulfill its important tasks for 1986, for the whole five-year period and for the future.

The first industrial unit to be seen round was the "Rulmentul" enterprise in Brasov, which manufactures roughly 1,200 standard dimensions and variants of ball bearings, including high-precision special bearings to be used in motor vehicle manufacture, shipbuilding, the production of machine tools and of equipment for various installations and outfit, for installations to equip nuclear plants included. The bearings made in Brasov are exported to more than 20 countries on all continents.

The visit continued at the new unit of the "Hidromecanica" enterprise which produces hydraulic gear, turbo-blowers and converters. Following the commissioning of the new unit, production went up four times or so.

In Brasov too, seen round was the tractor manufacturing enterprise, a modern Romanian machine-building unit, which has been strongly developed and updated to meet the requirements of the national economy, as well as the exigent demands of foreign markets. Along the years, Romanian tractors have been exported to more than 90 countries on all continents. The hosts outlined tractors manufacturers' current concerns for the diversification of production and the improvement of the technical and economic performance of tractors.

At the truck manufacturing enterprise, the analysis focused on the organization and modernization of production processes by applying technical progress. President Nicolae Ceausescu was shown tractors and transport and special motor vehicles of various powers and capacities, including the series of motor vehicles built by units under the central department, such as tip lorries of 6.5-to-55 tons, large-capacity buses, microbuses, pick-up trucks and vans. The truck manufacturing enterprise in Brasov currently produces a wide range of motor vehicles equipped with 135-to-360-h.p. diesel engines, boasting useful loads of six to 50 tons.

The same day, President Nicolae Ceausescu visited the chemical combine at Fagaras, as well as a state farming enterprise.

Meets Officials

[Text] Bucharest, AGERPRES 14/6/1986 -- During the working visit to Brasov County, Nicolae Ceausescu and Mme Elena Ceausescu met on June 13 in the afternoon with the members of the Bureau of the Brasov RCP County Committee.

During the meeting they continued the analysis made earlier that day in industrial and agricultural units the county, starting from the conclusions drawn, from the important objectives of socioeconomic development incumbent upon Brasov County in this five-year period, in tune with the county's big potential and possibilities.

The first secretary of the country party committee and other members of the bureau reported in a critical and self-critical spirit the way how the county party committee worked for the fulfillment of the plan provisions for 1986, of the current five-year plan tasks, of the resolutions of the 13th RCP Congress.

Referring extensively to the need for the integral fulfilment of the productive plan at an all-county level and in every individual unit, the RCP general secretary requested that resolute measures be taken for the integral in this connection that greater heed be paid to the improvement of the organization of productive activity and professional training of the working people, to the full use of the extant capacities, increasing the capitalization of the raw and auxiliary materials, fuel and energy, cutting down production consumption and expenditures, raising the products' quality and technical standard, increasing their competitiveness in the foreign markets.

Nicolae Ceausescu pointed out that the county had every condition at hand, powerful enterprises, a large number of research units, well trained cadres, worker collectives with tradition and assessed that communists, all working people had the ability to get better results up to the extant potential.

Referring to the activity in Brasov agriculture, the RCP general secretary pointed out that, considering the county's conditions, the productions ought to be by far bigger than the reported ones.

In rounding off the meeting, Nicolae Ceausescu stressed that the fulfilment of the important tasks incumbent on Brasov County demanded the improvement of organizational and political-educative activities, of the work style and methods of the county party committee, of the party bodies and organizations, a powerful communist, revolutionary spirit, so that they may cover all domains, ensure the exemplary fulfillment of the resolutions of the 13th Congress of the RCP.

Meets Party Veterans

[Text] Bucharest AGERPRES 14/6/1986 -- RCP General Secretary Nicolae Ceausescu and Mme Elena Ceausescu met in Brasov on Saturday with a group of party members since the underground period.

They showed their profound satisfaction at meeting Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu considering it an opportunity to pay him homage on behalf of the party members since the underground period and thank him for his steady concern for the development of Brasov County and the whole country, for the happiness and prosperity of all the homeland's citizens.

The participations in the meeting expressed the feelings of profound love and high valuation the communists, the working people in Brasov just like the entire party and people nurture for the RCP and Romanian state leader. The speakers recalled the difficult years of RPC's underground activity for the attainment of the aspirations after social justice, liberty and independence, showing that Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu asserted his personality in his early youth, in the fight for the achievement of those ideals.

Reference was made in the context to the May-June Brasov trial of a group of communists -- a crucial moment in the RCP's fight to rally all the progressive and democratic forces of Romania in the struggle for the observance of working people's major rights, the safeguarding of the homeland's independence and freedom, against the fascist peril. In the attendance there were also participants in that memorable event in the RCP's fight, who praised Nicolae Ceausescu's activity inspired by revolutionary enthusiasm, sense of sacrifice and full devotion, his heroic attitude during the trial which he managed to turn into a brilliant antifascist action, becoming an accuser of the capitalist system, a fearless defender of the loftiest national interests. They stated that the Communist Party had been the sole genuinely patriotic party that fought for the people's ideals, for the attainment of its aspirations after liberty and happiness.

The participants in the meeting were highly appreciative of the role of Nicolae Ceausescu and Elena Ceausescu in the years of fight against fascism, in defence of the homeland's independence and territorial integrity, and later in the heroic years of building the new society, for the triumph of socialism and communism in Romania.

The attendance wished President Nicolae Ceausescu and Mme Elena Ceausescu good health and power of work as well as ever greater successes in the activity devoted to the homeland's advance and prosperity.

Expressing his joy to have met with party veterans, RCP General Secretary Nicolae Ceausescu underlined the role of communists, their sense of sacrifice in the fight for the overthrow of the old system, for the revolutionary transformation of society, for the homeland's independence and sovereignty. I wish to thank you for the activity each one of you carried out within the party before and after August 23, 1944, and urge you to further contribute to the activity of the county party organization, to the implementation of the Thirteen RCP Congress resolutions and the progress of our socialist society, Nicolae Ceausescu said.

Speaks at Rally

AU141746 Bucharest Domestic Service in Romanian 0826 GMT 14 Jun 86

[Speech by RCP Secretary General Nicolae Ceausescu at a mass rally in Brasov municipality on the occasion of his working visit to Brasov County -- live]

[Text] Dear Comrades: I would like to extend to you, all residents of Brasov municipality and Brasov County, on behalf of the RCP Central Committee, the State Council, and government and on my own behalf, warm revolutionary greetings together with best wishes. [cheers, chants]

We have come to Brasov on a working visit. We have visited some enterprises and a state agricultural enterprise. We noted with great satisfaction the good results attained in various sectors of activity and an important increase in industrial production for this year. Nevertheless, we must openly state that the county has not fulfilled the overall plan for this year. Had it fulfilled the plan, the increase in production would have been 10 percent and not 8 percent. But 8 percent is a good result, too. Nevertheless, a 10 percent increase is an even better result and it lies within the Brasov working people's capability to attain such results. [cheers, chants]

Brasov is among the counties with a strong and developed industry. We have improved a lot; we have strongly developed our production capacities. Now, in accordance with the 13th RCP Congress decisions on the intensive development of industry, agriculture, and the other sectors of activity, we must see to it that Brasov's industry moves on to intensive development and the rising of the quality and technological level of products and achieves an increase in efficiency and work productivity. Thus, the means available to Brasov's industry and to the wonderful collective of hundreds of thousands of working people in Brasov working in industry will enable them to utilize everything we possess and will increase Brasov County's contribution to the general development of the country. [cheers, chants]

For the results attained in the first part of this year, I would like to extend to all working people in Brasov -- in industry, agriculture, and the other sectors -- warmest congratulations and wishes for appropriate fulfillment of this year's plan, thus making a solid foundation for the fulfillment of the entire 5-year plan. [cheers, chants]

Throughout the country, in the first 5 months of this year we registered an important increase in industrial production, somewhat higher than in Brasov. This means that we have started this year and the 5-year plan period well. We have all the conditions to fulfill the plan for 1986 with good results and to move on, with the first year of the plan and with all our forces, to the implementation of the measures for improving the entire activity of a better organization, with a view to more markedly increasing production in all the fields of activity. We have everything necessary to achieve this. That is why I would like to extend from Brasov, from this great mass rally, to all the working people throughout the country warmest congratulations for the results attained in the first 5 months of this year and to urge them to do everything possible to fulfill this year's plan under the most appropriate conditions and to proceed, with all their forces, to the implementation of the objectives of the new scientific-technical revolution, and of the requirements for a new quality in order to raise our homeland to new peaks of progress and civilization. [cheers, chants]

The Eighth 5-Year Plan period, which we have begun this year, is particularly important for the implementation of the party program on building the comprehensively developed socialist society and the country's advance toward communism. During this 5-year plan period we must attain our country's passage from the stage of a developing socialist country to the stage of a socialist country of average development. We must raise the general development level of our homeland and lay the foundations for implementing, by the year 2000, the party program and assert more strongly the communist principles of work and life in all fields of activity. [cheers, chants]

The implementation of the objectives formulated by the 13th RCP Congress and of the party program, the passage to intensive development, and the achievement of a new quality of work and life requires the greater assertion of science, education, and culture and the intensification of the activity for perfecting all sectors of activity.

We must never forget that only on the basis of the latest scientific and technological knowledge, and generally of human knowledge, and only by raising the educational level, the professional and technological training, and the general cultural level of our people can we successfully implement the objectives of our program and can we advance confidently toward communism. [cheers, chants]

We must more resolutely act to develop the energy and raw materials base. We must resolutely act to implement the measures on reducing energy and raw material consumption and on reusing materials by recovering them and reintroducing them into the production flow. We must do everything possible, in all fields of activity, to attain a maximum reduction of consumption and an increase in the quality and technological level of products. Only in this way can Romanian industry, and thus Brasov's industry as well, which plays an important role in our national economy, be competitive and assert itself more strongly on the international market with increasingly better quality products that have an increasingly higher technological level. It is possible to attain this. All of Brasov's industry must unite their forces, starting from the worker and going up to the engineers and scientists, and must act in close unity to attain, as of this year, a radical improvement of the entire activity and of the quality and technological level of products. [cheers, chants]

Both in Brasov and throughout the country we have at our disposal modern equipment and production capacities, but most of all we have wonderful collectives of working people who represent a decisive force and are a guarantee for implementing the 13th party congress targets. [cheers, chants]

Although Brasov is a largely industrialized county, it also has proper conditions for agriculture. A number of positive results have been achieved; however, they are not up to possibilities. We have discussed these problems now. It is necessary for agriculture to register a radical improvement in overall activity, too, so that beginning next year agricultural yields in Brasov County will be up to the possibilities and requirements of the national economy. Here, too, we have everything necessary available. Thus, in both industry and agriculture we must vigorously increase output and labor productivity and, thus, the general contribution to Romania's development and to improving our people's standard of living. [cheers, chants]

It is necessary to take very determined action in all areas to cut back on material expenditures and production costs and to more vigorously increase economic efficiency, net production, and profits -- a secure way to increase the national income and the funds needed for both the further development of our homeland and for improving the material and cultural standard of living of our whole nation, which is the supreme goal of the party's policy and the essence of the comprehensively developed socialist society which we are successfully building in Romania. [cheers, chants]

Determined measures are required in all sectors of activity to fulfill the export production plan on schedule and at the highest qualitative level and to fulfill the export plan by taking into consideration that our homeland's development is directly linked with developing international cooperation -- with the CEMA member-countries, all socialist countries, with the developing countries, and with the developed capitalist countries. Participation in the international division of labor, in the exchange of material assets, exports, and imports, constitute an important aspect of our economic activity. Without fulfilling the export plan in conformity with plan provisions, we will not be able to ensure the necessary conditions for securing the material base and for developing the national economy.

This is why all working people's collectives, party organizations, and the communists, managerial councils, the general meetings, and all of you must understand that exports constitute a particularly important aspect of our activity and must be given attention every single day and hour so that the fulfillment of export production will constitute the basic concern of each unit linked to the technical and qualitative level. Only by fulfilling the export plan will we be able to say that each party organization and each working people's collective is fulfilling its duties toward the people and toward the cause of socialism. [cheers, chants]

Dear comrades, I had decided to pay this visit this month because 50 years ago in the same month a group of Communists, including myself, was tried here at the military tribunal. Since then, 50 years have passed. Certainly, the way the communists fought during their illegal period to defend the interests of our nation, of our working people, and of all our people, their firm position toward the class enemy, and their determination to unite all our people to bring about a revolutionary change in our society demonstrated the potential and capability and of our party to overthrow the old system based on exploitation and oppression and to achieve the most just society in the world -- the socialist society, and to propose to firmly proceed toward communism. [cheers, chants]

Not long ago, when we celebrated the 65th anniversary of our party, I spoke about the glorious struggle waged by the Communists. Today I only want to mention that life and facts have demonstrated that only to the extent to which the revolutionary party proposes to consistently protect the interests of the people's masses, which are identical with the interests in freedom and independence of the whole nation, will it be able to fulfill its historic mission, enjoy the support of the people, and be sure of its victory in the struggle for social and national liberation, and only thus will it be sure of the victory of socialism and communism. [cheers, chants]

Class struggle and revolutionary struggle have required devotion and love for the workers class and people, and the communists have largely done their duty, thus demonstrating that there is nothing more important than the interests of the people, the cause of socialism and communism, and the cause of Romania's independence. [cheers, chants]

At this big mass rally in Brasov, once again I would like to pay fervent homage to the Communists, antifascists, and to all democratic and patriotic fighters, and to all those who fought and sacrified themselves when this was required for the people's freedom, for communism, and for guaranteeing Romania a dignified place in freedom and independence. [cheers, chants]

In focusing our attention on implementing the 13th party congress decisions and the party program, we also act with great determination to achieve disarmament and peace, in the belief that only in conditions of peace will we have everything necessary to implement our development targets; and not only ourselves, but all peoples will be able to develop solely in conditions of peace. This is why the struggle for disarmament and peace constitutes today the basic problem of the international struggle waged by all peoples in the world. [cheers, chants]

The international situation continues to be particularly serious. The arms race, particularly the nuclear arms race, continues. Nuclear tests continue, and they themselves cause great damage to the whole of mankind because of the effects of these nuclear tests on the environment.

This is why we believe that everything possible must be done to halt the arms race, primarily the nuclear arms race, to definitively stop all nuclear tests, and to proceed to reduce nuclear weapons until they are completely eliminated. For this purpose, we have supported and continue to firmly back the stage-by-stage disarmament program proposed by the Soviet Union up to the year 2000.

At the same time, at the recent meeting of the Political Consultative Committee of the Warsaw Pact a program was adopted aimed at reducing by 1990, conventional arms by some 25 percent. We believe that this is an extremely important program because a 25 percent cutback in arms, troops, and military expenditures by 1990 will permit us to proceed to new measures so that by the year 2000 we will be able to reduce both conventional arms and military expenditures by at least 50 percent, thus being able to develop trust and vigorous cooperation by utilizing the huge resources thus made available -- both material, financial, and human -- for socioeconomic, development and for improving the general well-being of each nation. [cheers, chants]

From this big mass rally in Brasov, we want to appeal to all European peoples to do all they can to proceed to reducing both nuclear weapons and conventional ones. It is the duty of governments, heads of states, and of political figures in Europe to do all they can to guarantee each nation and the whole of Europe peace and quiet and to protect European peoples against the destruction that can be caused as a result of using nuclear weapons. All of you are acquainted with the effects of radioactivity from the Chernobyl nuclear power plant accident. And if such an accident caused so many problems both to Romania and other peoples, all the more must we realize the seriousness of nuclear weapons. This is why halting the deployment of intermediate-range missiles and eliminating them and all nuclear weapons from Europe constitutes a vital requirement for the very existence and life of European peoples and, in fact, of all peoples throughout the world. [cheers, chants]

Romania advocates with great determination the cessation of all military conflicts and the solution of disputes between states by negotiations alone. We believe that relations among all states must be based on the principles of full equality of rights, respect for national independence and sovereignty, noninterference in domestic affairs, complete renunciation of the use or threat of force, and respect for each nation's sacred right to free development in keeping with its desire, without any outside interference. [cheers, chants]

Our country acts with great determination to solve the serious economic problems, and primarily the problem of underdevelopment; to achieve a new world economic order in which current inequities will be curbed and economic relations based on equality and mutual advantage and on the opportunity to utilize the excellent achievements of science will be ensured for each nation in order to secure the progress, well-being, and happiness of each people. It is necessary and we act firmly to strengthen solidarity among developing countries, nonaligned countries, small and medium-sized countries because only by acting in greater solidarity will they be able to bring about the settlement of economic problems through negotiations and ensure a new world economic order. [cheers, chants]

Although international problems are very complex, we are fully convinced that progressive, anti-imperialist forces everywhere and peoples on all continents will be able -- by acting unitedly -- to change the dangerous trends of events, impose a new policy of detente and cooperation, determine disarmament, and ensure peace and cooperation among all nations in the world. [cheers, chants]

Dear comrades, in conclusion, once again I would like to mention with great satisfaction that we have gathered particularly positive impressions about what we have seen during our visits to enterprises in agriculture and in various areas and thus about the activity carried out by the working people. and about their determination to act to fulfill development plans. Most of all, we have gathered particularly positive impressions about the meeting with the workers, the peasants, and the intellectuals, with men and women, with young people, children, with our wonderful people, with the citizens in Brasov who, like all our people, puruse with great trust our party's policy and are firmly determined to make an increasingly greater contribution to our homeland's general development and to raising it to new heights of progress and civilization. [cheers, chants]

I am convinced that the party organizations, the working people's councils, and the general meetings -- this wonderful democratic framework for the masses' participation in the management of all areas in our country -- will take very firm action to perfect the overall activity. And please bear in mind that I have not dealt very much with failings; I have avoided certain criticism. I confined myself to what we discussed with the county bureau. I did so proceeding from the fact that both the party organization and all working people's collectives will understand that thus I want to voice my trust that they -- each of them -- will draw the conclusions needed, will act to eliminate failings, and will perfect and raise the overall activity in order to be up to the level of targets put forward by the 13th party congress. [cheers, chants]

With this conviction, I wish you and all working people in Brasov increasingly greater successes in your overall activity and much good health and happiness. [cheers, chants]

CULAFIC HOLDS TALKS WITH SECURITY SECRETARIES

LD162057 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1340 GMT 16 Jun 86

[Text] Ljubljana, 16 Jun (TANJUG) -- Dobroslav Culafic, federal secretary for internal affairs, today held a regular meeting with the republican and provincial secretaries for internal affairs in Brdo, near Kranj, where they discussed the immediate tasks facing the organs of internal affairs in the realm of security.

They also established the program direction and the main tasks until the end of this and the next few years, for which the adopted program documents will contribute to an even greater effectiveness and work integration of the Yugoslav organs of internal affairs and to a more successful implementation of tasks on curbing hostile, criminal, and other socially damaging activities. The aim of this is to raise to an even better level the protection of constitutional order, public order and peace, socially owned property, personal and property security of citizens, and the security of the country as a whole through further strengthening of the functional unity and the action ability of the internal affairs organs.

Stress was laid on the need for better cadre training and technological equipment of the internal affairs organs, in accordance with the demands and needs of our socialist self-managing society. In this context they expressed the full readiness of the republican and provincial secretariat to give concrete support in this area to the Federal Secretariat for Internal Affairs and to become directly involved (by stimulating cadres to better work and through other forms of successful and developed cooperation), as it was jointly assessed that the effectiveness of the work of the internal affairs organs throughout the country depends to a great deal on the effectiveness of the Federal Secretariat.

France Popit, president of the Presidency of the SR of Slovenia; Andrej Marinc, member of the Presidency and president of the Republican Council for the Protection of Constitutional Order; and Dusan Sinigoj, president of the Executive Council of the Assembly of the SR of Slovenia, also held talks with Dobroslav Culafic and with the republican and provincial secretaries for internal affairs. Culafic and Slovene Republican Secretary for Internal Affairs Tomaz Ertl acquainted them with the topics and results of the meeting. The highest-ranking officials of the SR of Slovenia stressed that the internal affairs organs played a significant role in the system of social self-protection and made an important contribution to the protection of the main values of our society. They supported the program orientation of the internal affairs organs as well as the efforts made for their overall modernization.

1985 POLITICAL CRIMES STATISTICS RELEASED

[Text] Belgrade, 16 Jun (TANJUG) -- According to an analysis of the Federal Public Prosecutor's Department, 763 people were reported in the SFRY last year for political crimes, which is the same as the previous year. Charges were brought against 451 people, 14 fewer than in 1984, and 335 were sentenced. The number of people charged with political crime accounts for 0.31 percent of the total number of charged persons (145,575), or 2 per 100,000 inhabitants. This is by a fraction less than in 1984.

By and large it was brotherhood and unity that were the target of intensified enemy activity of all complexions, the Federal Public Prosecutor Department notes. This is confirmed by the rise in the number of people who were reported for and charged with fomenting national, racial, and religious hatred, division and intolerance throughout the country with the exception of Slovenia.

The work on uncovering the "old" and the new enemy organizations and groups which operate surreptitiously and perfidiously has continued.

In Bosnia and Hercegovina three such groups were uncovered: one in Montenegro, two in Macedonia and two in Croatia. What is characteristic of Croatia, the analysis says, is verbal enemy statements, that is, demonstrations of Croatian nationalism and chauvinism, which is partly of explicit Ustasha origin, and demonstrations of Serbian nationalism and antisocialist statements. Widespread daubing of "U" and "NDH" signs and drawing of swastikas is also a characteristic, and enemy statements among young people -- especially in schools and student halls of residence -- is also on the rise.

In Slovenia the number of people reported for political crime is decreasing, and all the reports presented referred to verbal offenses in coffee houses committed by people under the influence of alcohol. However, the Prosecutor's Department believes that in view of the statements made on some platforms and the content of some cultural magazines one is entitled to talk about the existence of "groups which operate in a provocative fashion."

In some municipalities in central Slovenia, the analysis says, leaflets appeared last year containing nationalist slogans signed by a Slovene liberation movement; it is not known at the moment whether individuals or a group is behind it.

Despite the fact that the number of people reported for political offenses in Serbia was down, it is believed that not only has enemy activity not been reduced, but that it has become more aggressive with changes in tactics and forms of its activity.

The analysis says that pressure for the emigration of Serbs and Montenegrins for Presevo, Bujanovac and Medvedje has virtually ceased. However, instead of that enormous sums of money for the purchase of their property are being offerred and paid. It is believed that the funds for this derive from international smuggling activity in which a great number of people in those areas are involved.

The number of reports for acts of political crime in Kosovo was reduced last year, but the same does not apply to the activity of Albanian nationalists and irredentists exemplified by organized and group activity. Some criminal acts are on the rise.

As is known, during the last quarter of last year, two big enemy groups were uncovered in Kosovo -- they have been tried or are in the process of being tried -- and several smaller groups. All the groups had the same objectives.

Of 451 defendants on trial for acts of political crime the majority, 288, were charged with enemy propaganda and fomenting of national, racial and religious hatred, 101 were charged with lighter offenses such as ciolating the reputation of the SFRY and dissemination of untrue reports, while 62 people were charged with the gravest acts, such as counterrevolutionary threat to our social set-up, conspiracy to commit an act of enemy activity, and others.

Compared with 1984 the number of people charged with serious and light offenses was up, and the number of people charged with the more serious crimes (Articial 15 of the SFRY Criminal Code) was down.

Of the total number of people charged 389 were charged with the so-called verbal offenses, 20 more than last year. This is the result of the higher number of charges associated with fomenting national, racial and religious hatred and insulting the reputation of the SFRY.

Among those who were charged 154 were Croatians, 137 Albanians, 77 Serbians, 25 Muslims, 15 Slovenes, 13 Montenegrins, 9 Macedonians, 3 Hungarians, 6 others, and 2 foreigners.

As far as the social background of the defendants is concerned, workers continue to predominate, but this category embraces also white-collar workers and not only workers in material production. Farmers now "hold" second place, intellectuals are third, and they are followed by pupils, students, pensioners, and so forth.

Public prosecutor's offices last year operated also on curbing enemy and harmful statements in the press and other forms of public information media, preceeding from the premise that to curb harmful manifestations is mainly a matter for political reaction. The analysis says that the public prosecutor's offices operated preventively, but repressively too when legal conditions for that typeof action were to hand.

Last year four people had criminal charges instituted against them for acts commited through the medium of the press, and all four were in Croatia. In seven cases a temporary ban of was imposed on distribution of printed material, and in four out of seven cases the court imposed a permanent ban.

MONTENEGRO LC DISCUSSES ECONOMIC, PARTY PROBLEMS

[Excerpt] Titograd, 11 Jun (TANJUG) -- The Montenegro Central Committee will primarily focus its attention on issues of further developing self-management and workers' control of income and means of social reproduction during the coming year. The Central Committee's duty ot direct its political action in this direction results from the resolution adopted at the recently held Ninth Montenegro LC Congress which also has been used as a basis for the guidelines for the Central Committee's work until May 1987 adopted at this body's plenary session today.

Stressing, in his introductory report, that the inadequate system of income distribution and the workers' unsatisfactory positionin expanded reproduction are having a negative effect on the working people's political mood, Samo Sekaric, Montenegro LC Central Committee Presidium secretary, warned of the consequences of a lack of motivation among the employed for more productive work.

He stressed that production is stagnating, exports are slackening, and prices and inflation are rising uncontrolably. In Montenegro, personal incomes also are rising which is not reflecting manufacturing result.s The League of Communists must therefore launch concrete actions in each collective and sociopolitical community to speed up the exploitation of untapped capacities and to create conditions for an increasingly modern and productive manufacturing industry. Any shortcomings in the political system functioning which are an obstacle to the workers' control over social reproduction also must be eliminated.

However, in order to carry out its tasks successfully and to resolve mounting problems and shortcomings in society, the LC must, Sekaric emphasized, rid itself of weakenesses and deformations and must constantly enhance its grassroots' capacity for revolutionary action. As long as a single member in the LC violates legal norms and usurpes socially owned property and the working people's rights, the party's reputation will be tarnished and it will not be capable of realizing its fundamental role. Judging by the views expressed by Sekaric and all the participants at today's Central Committee session, the Leagued of Communists of this republic would benefit from ridding itself as soon as possible of those members who, either because of their work or their conduct, have no place in the party.

Expels Member for 'Recipes'

[Text] Titograd, 16 Jun (TANJUG) -- Because of his denigration of the achievements of the revolution and the Stalinist "recipes" which he recommended from the rostrum at the Ninth Montenegrin LC Congress as a solution to social problems, Slobodan Brnovic, a delegate of the highest party gathering in the republic, has been expeled from the LC.

Members of the basic LC organization of the village of Goricani in the municipality of Titograd, elected Brnovic to represent them at the congress, assuming that in the debate he would stick to basic statutory norms and the LCY program. However, in the 15 minutes envisaged for the debate, he launched a general attack on the achievements of our revolution and the struggle of Yugoslav Communists in the postwar development of the country.

Brnovic's address, especially his "recipes" about what the party should do in the future and which examples it should follow, provoked a reaction at the congress itself and among the public at large, and then stimulated members of his basic organization to examine and establish the political responsibility of its delegate for the unacceptable claims and stances which he declared from the congress platform.

At last night's meeting members of the basic LC organization from the village of Goricani assessed that Brnovic and the ideas and stances which he represented and which have nothing in common with the LCY program have no place in the party.

REPORTAGE ON 12TH YOUTH FEDERATION CONGRESS

President's Address

LD131127 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 0545 GMT 12 Jun 86

[Silvija Zugic-Rijavec report]

[Excerpts] Belgrade: Over the last 4 years the youth organization reacted to the worsening of the social conditions and, by implication, the position of young people, by generally applying the instruments of the past, that is, verbal commitments to continue the revolutionary development. This kind of "ostrich-like" behavior only helped to drive the Federation of Socialist Youth of Yugoslavia further to the periphery of social developments and to reduce its role as a genuine subject of social changes.

Continuing the Youth Federation Presidium's report -- the role of the Socialist Youth Federation in the struggle for the Development of socialist self-management -- Silvija Zugic-Rijavec, president of the Socialist Youth Federation Presidium, stressed that young people gradually became aware of the fact that only by turning their attention to the key issues of the country's social development could they expect to replace their peripheral role with that of main protagonists. It took the organization a while to realize that this would not be possible to achieve unless it ceased to concentrate primarily on itself as well as some minor organizational issues or problems "reserved" for young people only.

The youth organization president went on to say that the preparations for the 12th congress had confirmed the young people's ability to think for themselves and form their own views. She emphasized that the amount of social "weight" and youth organization can carry depends to a large extent on its capacity to form its own independent stance as regards pressing social problems. This issue is at the center of attention in the report which stresses, inter alia, that one of the main causes of the developing difficulties affecting the country lies in the failure by Yugoslav production forces to satisfy the demands and standards of the world market. Autarky has replaced the efforts to become integrated in the international division of labor, while voluntarism, in determining the strategy of the country's socioeconomic development, has brought the country to the verge of state bankruptcy, thus threatening its political sovereignty.

In the part of the report devoted to the political system, Silvija Zugic-Rijavec expressed the view according to which etatism is the main cause behind the halt in the development of self-management and the resulting deformations. Having stressed that the Critical Analysis is a sound foundation for overcoming such a situation, she said that the document also represents an important point of departure for the youth organization's united activity within the political system.

Silvija Zugic-Rijavec stressed the need for our peoples to become even closer to one another. The prerequisites for this are the development of uniform relations in production, elimination of all forms of dependence on foreign technology, measures to prevent capital from being retained within national border, and so forth. For, objectively speaking, state monopoly and etatization of socially-owned property are among the most important generators of nationalism. Differences are also caused by unequal economic development of different parts of Yugoslavia. All this was behind the counterrevolutionary attempts in Kosovo, MASPOK [as received -- expansion unknown] in Croatia, and liberal tendencies in Serbia.

Increased nationalism among the young cannot be explained by the inferiority of "the generations that are coming," the president said. For as long as young people are prevented from finding jobs and playing a role in the decisionmaking process as a result of insularity and bureaucratism we will be faced with the threat of nationalist manipulations of the young. The young generation can contribute to the development of self-management but not by propaganda slogans and fair-like, old-fashioned celebrations.

Noting that the intercongress period had revealed a crisis in the way young people were politically organized, Silvija Zugic-Rijavec went on to say that this had forced young people to search for ways to express their interests outside the existing institutionalized framework.

These negative tendencies in the organization's development will continue unless the youth federation embarks on an organized development proceeding from the pluralism of the ideological, scientific and political thought an interests of the young.

The most sinister form of the domination of particular interests over the general ones is the aspiration held by a small section of young bureaucrats to impose their ideas and vies an place them above young people's numerous self-managing interests. By opposin this kind of relationship the young generation is not only refuting the dogmatic view of itself as a disinterested section of society, but is alo exposing the readiness on the part of a section of its leadership always to acquiesce to those "above" and ignore those "below." Although there is increasing evidence of young people wanting changes, a narrow circle of the youth leadership refuse stubbornly to realize that times have changed.

The tendency toward creating a state-party apparatus and to subordinate all subjective forces to etatism has resulted in attempts at etatizing the youth organization and subordinating it to the interests of technocracy. In other words, young people are expecting to carry out, in a disciplined way, decisions made by others, regardless of whether they are good or bad.

In the preceding period the subordination and lack of independence of the youth organization was quite evident, Silvija Zugic-Rijavec said. However, no one else is to blame for this but ourselves. This practice is gradually changing, but there are still young people who, in order to retain their own positions, are using undemocratic methods and crude manipulations. We must, on our own, create conditions for democracy in decisionmaking within the organization and for the delegate principles of electins and organization, which have never been implemented properly. No one outside the organization can change things for us and solve our problems. To put it in a nutshell, our future work must be consistent and dedicated.

Self-managing socialism cannot develop of its own accord or by slogans and support in principle. Young people's place is at the stage of self-management and not in the audience. Tito's name and work continue to be our lasting source of inspiratin in the far from easy struggle for existence worthy of man. We have learned not to give up that struggle. And be assured, we never shall, Silvija Zugic-Rijavec said in conclusion.

Plenary Session

[Excerpts] Belgrade, 14 Jun (TANJUG) -- The 12th Congress of the Federation of the Socialist Youth of Yugoslavia (SSOJ), which is taking place in Sava Center in Belgrade, resumed its work this morning. The plenary session adopted reports on the work of five congressional commissions in which 300 delegates took the floor and nearly 100 submitted written contributions.

It is stressed in the report of the Commission for Ideological Trends in Society and Ideopolitical Education of the Young that the existing system of ideopolitical education is unsatisfactory and is dominated by stereotyped work. The report therefore urges the drawing up of a joint strategy of ideopolitical education within the SSOJ with particular attention being devoted to the youngest generation.

The report also stresses the importance of the struggle for Yugoslavia's unity and for equal international relations. The youth organization calls for concrete action in suppressing the nationalist activity in Kosovo and empahsizes the responsibility of all the subjects for it since, it was said, young people regard the problem of Kosovo as being a problem concerning the entire country.

The report also draws attention to the importance of the set of issues raised in the Commission Concerning Religion, the Church, Society and Young People. The constitutional and legal provisions relating to the religious freedom and the activity of religious communities must be consistently respected. Sectarian attitudes towards religious believers are inadmissable but so is clericalist conduct and the use of religion for poltitical purposes. In implementing its program tasks the Federation of Socialist Youth (SSO) should muster all young people committed to socialism regardless of whether they are believers or atheists while at the same time it must limit the scope for the church's manipulation of the young.

We insist that the name and work of Comrade Tito be respected and preserved and stress the need for more efficient measures to prevent any attempt at their cheap commercialization, the report stresses. We are against abolishing the youth relay race but do support the suggestion that the existing events should be made more meaningful with emphasis on work, creativity and friendship instead of their public gathering and fairground-like aspect.

The report by the Commission for the Issues of the Position and Role of Young People in the Political System of Socialist Self-Management, which was presented by Milka Puzigaca, emphasized that the role which young people have in the political system considerably lags behind their contribution to the country's social development. This is happening as a result of society's material proverty and the fact that the working class has been left out of the decisionmaking process. It was stressed in the report that one of the subjective forces most important tasks is to strengthen the role of the delegate bodies since they are the most important but at the same time the weakest link in the delegate system.

The Commission for the Political System adopted the view about the need for a public debate about collective responsibility within the youth organization and for the greater involvement of the unemployed in the system of self-management. The report ends with the statement that it was decided in a vote to reject the proposal to open up a debate on abolishing the death penalty and to change Article 133 of the SFRY's Criminal Code.

The rejection of these proposals was preceded by a discussion initiated by the delegates from Slovenia (Dusko Kos and Dusanka Vajs) who asked the congress to express its views on these issues because, as Dusanka Vajs said, whether or not to open the debate to change Article 133 of the Criminal Code (the so-called "verbal offense") cannot be decided on by a majority vote. Milan Popovic stressed that one gained the impression at the congress that the aforementioned proposals have been brought up only by the delegates from Slovenia, but this is not true because in the commission there were other people who supported this view.

Some delegtes, including Jugoslav Tomic, Milan Rekle, and Branimir Djukic, explained why the initiatives to abolish the death penalty and to change Article 133 of the SFRY Criminal Code are unacceptable. In their view the rise of crime, nationalism, theft and the like, and also the fact that very few heavy sentences are pronounced in our country, all indicate that there is no reason to abolish it.

The question was asked whether Artukovic, too, ought to have been freed even if he was a war criminal. As far as verbal offense is concerned it was pointed out that no criminal offense figures in our legislation which could be described as being an offense against freedom of thought.

The proposal that a Chamber of Associated Labor be formed within the SFRY Assembly that had been set out during the plenary session was rejected by a majority vote; 295 delegates were "for" and 343 "against".

It was decided in conclusion that the stance should be incorporated in the Report by the Commission for Political System that the Socialist Youth Federation will work to ensure that in keeping with the principle of equality of our nations and nationalities the status of the Romanies as a nationality in the SFRY should be regulated on a uniform basis.

In the 2-day debate the delegates made assessment that unemployment is the number one problem. They stress that the constitutional right to work cannot be identified with the right to a job, that is to say, they demand that idlers should give up their jobs to capable and worthy people.

Great attention also focused on the development of agriculture and it was stressed that agriculture must be given the same treatment as associated labor. We must fight, says the report, against the notion that agricultural production is not socialist production and that the people working in it are a necessary evil. The young people believe that to finance the underdeveloped areas mainly through the fund [for the Development of Underdeveloped Republics and Kosovo] is unacceptable.

The Commission for Scientific and Technological Development has proposed a special resolution which protests against nuclear power plants. The resolution will be tabled before the plenary session with a recommendations to be adopted. Taking his cue from the message inherent in this resolution Zarko Jovanovic presented badges with the inscription "Nuclear Power -- No Thanks" to Vidoje Zarkovic and to the "front row comrades" as a reminder, as he put it, of joint responsibility for any possible consequences of a nuclear catastrophe.

Rajko Blagojevic and Boris Milat proposed that a broadly based social-political discussion be held in our society about reducing the length of working life by 5 years, or alternatively to have the length of the working day reduced. The congress approved these amendments.

The present forms of the organization of the SSO, and especially the way it operates in practice, are unsatisfactory -- this was stated by delegates of the commission for questions on the development of the SSO as a front of the socialist-oriented young generation, on whose behalf a report was submitted by Jasminka Kukec.

The organizations and organs of the SSO, in the judgement of the delegates, have not succeeded, to a satisfactory degree, in articulating the authentic interests and needs of the broadest membership and of the young generation as a whole. Frequently dealing with a narrow circle of so-called "youth questions" and formal organizational changes, the SSO has remained outside the process of decisionmaking on key social questions.

Delegates of this commission supported the concept of the united organization of the SSOJ. In this connection note was taken of a series of concrete questions that should be settled in a uniform way at the level of the SSOJ -- voluntary youth work, criteria for membership in the SSO, subscriptions and finance policy, membership records, and activity in the basic organizations of the SSO. Particular stress was laid on the SSOJ Conference not being able to be reduced to merely coordinating the work of the republican and provincial conferences, but on it also having to determine the unified program of basic SSO policy.

Delegates advocated that in all elections in self-management organizations and socio-political organizations, there must several candidates for all functions, especially for the most responsible ones -- the executive and political ones.

The commission, said Jasminka Kukec, was acquainted with the whole text of the petition, which as signed by a number of young people from Ljubljana on the occasion of the celebration of Youth Day. The commission dissociated itself from the petition as an inappropriate method of communicating within the SSO -- as a socio-political organization -- and it even assessed some parts of it as ideologically unacceptable. In this connection, the commission adopted the stance that the celebration of Youth Day is fixed in principle in the basic program, and on the basis of the public debate that has gone on in the whole SSO organization and in other social structures, but that this concept of the celebration of Youth Day needs to be further improved in practice and enriched with new meaning.

The delegate Joze Skoljc criticized the report in that in the commission there was not even a mention of the debate about the initiative for doing so-called military service as a civilian [civilno sluzenje vojnog roka]. I am not advocating, he said, that we have a vote on this here, because the SFRY Assembly is the place for that, but I am for a public and specialist debate on this question being started in all environments.

Mijalco Ristov disagreed with the initiative to do military service as a civilian because, he said, conditions have not ripened for such a thing, as a result of complex military-political conditions.

Owing to differing views, the working Presidium proposed the formulation that the congress some questions of doing so-called military service as a civilian were discussed. It was stated that these questions, are, in any case, currently being looked into by the competent organs and that they would consider them with the active collaboration of the SSO.

"The principles of the nonaligned foreign policy of the SFRY are an enduring basis for and source of the international activity of the SSOJ" -- it is stressed in the report of the commission for questions on the international activity, solidarity, and cooperation of the SSOJ, which was submitted by Ignac Krivec. The international position and reputation of our country can only be preserved by a consistent, united, and independent foreign policy.

Young people do not recognize -- it says in the report -- the existence of "unpleasant questions" in foreign policy. Our questions, it stresses, include "the friendly visits" of naval ships of foreign fleets to our harbors, the conflicts between the nonaligned countries, one or two dictatorial and fascist regimes, and the failure to make a statement on "the Waldheim case."

Election Commentary

[Text] Belgrade, 16 Jun (TANJUG) -- The electoral conference of the Yugoslav Socialist Youth Federation, held a few hours after the end of the 12th Socialist Youth Congress, was a clear indication that delegates at this gathering were fully justified in thier 3 days of criticism of the youth leadership. It could even be said that the ascerbic accusations of the alienation, isolation, careerism and bureaucratization of the youth forums could have been even more virulent. How else, if not with these "epithets," can the fact that a new leadership of the youth of Yugoslavia was not elected at the electroral-constitutive session of the Socialist Youth conference be explained?

The old story of the manipulation which accompanies virtually every electoral youth gathering, has been repeated -- the difference being that this time the attempt failed. Many delegates demonstrated that the time of reconciliation with undemocratic cadre solutions in the Socialist Youth Federation has simply gone. Knowing that they have the right to slow down the undemocratic electoral proceedings, the youth at the Socialist Youth Conference (like their counterparts recently in Bosnia-Hercegovina) finally used it.

The nonelection of a new youth leadership of Yugoslavia has confirmed that young people no longer want to vote for people who impose themselves as "democratic," "elected representatives," if they really are not this. Although it was asserted at the session that the young people delegated to the Socialist Youth Presidium from Croatia were proposed after "extensive discussion," it could not be concealed that, in fact, they had been "pushed into" this by the cadre commission. When to this is added the fact that the electoral procedure was not carried out properly in Socialist Youth Federation organisations of Serbia and Macedonia either, then it is no wonder that the conference was adjourned.

It is worrying that this decision was made only once it has become clear to the working presidium and to quite a few youth officials -- after 4 hours of debate -- that there was no other choice. In the meantime, the most varied solutions were being offered to the "delicate situation," which the majority of delegates, invoking the Socialist Youth Conference Statute, interpreted as it suited them -- in their own interests. According to some, this document enables the election of a "truncated" presidium; according to others it allows the conference itself to elect delegates from Croatia and, according to yet others, it envisages a repetition of the electoral procedure for all candidates. Young people finally "got their fingers burned" over the fact that they did not have the strength, or the will, to bring the statutory debate, begun before the 12th Socialist Youth congress to an end. Those who claimed that the statute is a "technical" and not a fundamentally political question were obviously refuted.

The question arises as to how youth officials, a few hours after the end of the highest gathering of young people, were able to act contrary to the document and stances adopted at the final plenary session. It was absolutely amazing to be present during the adoption of a new rule on the work of the conference which would allow the lists of the proposed leadership to be adopted on a simple majority, instead of a two-thirds majority. Young people were not bothered by the fact that the statute envisages that this change must be accepted by two-thirds of the total number of conference delegates, although they knew that at that moment, not even half of them were in attendance.

INDIAN PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION ARRIVES FOR TALKS

[Text] Belgrade, June 10 (TANJUG) -- Yugoslavia-Indian cooperation along the lines of the policy of nonalignment is of a broad international significance, particularly due to the current unfavourable trends on the international scene, it was assessed here today in talks between a delegation of the Assembly of Yugoslavia and a delegation of the Indian Parliament which is on a six-day official visits to Yugoslavia.

The delegations are headed by President of the Yugoslavia Assembly Council of the Republics and Provinces Milenko Bojanic, and by Indian Parliamentary Affairs Minister H.K.L. Bhagat.

Both sides stressed the need for the nonaligned and other countries to invest maximum efforts towards disarmament, especially the reduction of nuclear and chemical weapons arsenals, and take actions to eliminate wars and focuses of crisis.

Members of the Yugoslav and Indian delegations emphasized the two countries' commitment to te authentic principles of nonalignment, pointing to the major importance of the upcoming nonaligned summit in Harare. They also expressed the two countries' readiness for close cooperation in preparations for the summit and during its deliberations.

The delegations recalled that Yugoslavia and India are linked by traditional friendship the foundations of which were laid by Presidents Tito and Nehru. Regular contacts between the two countries' top leaders reaffirm closeness of their views and constitute a good basis for the further promotion of bilateral cooperation, it was stated.

Bojanic said Yugoslavia is interested in the promotion of economic cooperation, which has been stagnating in the past few years, and for the development of its more advanced forms.

The Indian delegation was received later today by vice president of the Yugoslav State Presidency Lazare Mojsov. The ensuing cordial and friendly talk focused on further promotion of bilateral relations and the nonaligned countries' preparations for the Harare summit.

Harare Summit Discussed

LD132124 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1933 GMT 13 Jun 86

[Text] Belgrade, 13 Jun (TANJUG) -- Raif Dizdarevic, federal secretary for foreign affairs, and Benjamin Mkapa, minister of foreign affairs of Tanzania, tonight continued official talks with the exchange of views on the preparations for the Harare summit of the nonaligned countries.

Both sides laid stress on the need for more organized activity by nonaligned countries and a more active attitude to topical international issues. This also refers to the political and economic problems of the modern world. They noted that developing and nonaligned countries do not have an organized form of mutual agreement-seeking and coordination, which is the case with developed countries.

Raif Dizdarevic and Benjamin Mkapa expressed their optimism as regards the outcome of the summit. Such a conviction was said to be the result of more consolidated unity among nonaligned countries concerning the original principles and their position on the international scene as a global and independent factor.

This brings to an end the talks between Raif Dizdarevic and Benjamin Mkapa. The visitor from Tanzania will stay in the SR of Croatia tomorrow where he will have talks with republican offícals and representatives of the Ingra work organization which fosters fruitful cooperation with its partners in Tanzania.

[Text] Zagreb, June 15 (TANJUG) -- Prior to his departure from Yugoslavia today, Tanzanian Foreign Minister Bemjamin Mkapa described his several-day visit to Yugoslavia as very successful. Mkapa stressed that traditionally friendly relations between Yugoslavia and Tanzania were revived during the visit. He also pointed out that the new Tanzanian Government wished to continue along the road paved by Presidents Josip Broz Tito and Dr Julius Nyerere.

The Tanzanian foreign minister said that, during his meetings with Yugoslav officials, views were exchanged on topical international political questions and the forthcoming non-aligned summit in Harare. In Mkapa's view, this was useful to both sides.

During his visit to the Yugoslav Republic of Croatia, Benjamin Mkapa toured the Josip Broz Tito memorial museum in the late Yugoslav president's birthtown of Kumorovec.

The Tanzanian foreign minister stated satisfaction with his talks with Yugoslav State Presidency President Sinan Hasani, Premier Branko Mukulic and Foreign Secretary Raif Dizdarevic as well as Croatian businessmen in Zagreb.

VIENNA RADIO INTERVEWS MILOVAN DJILAS

AU160653 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1600 GMT 12 Jun 86

[Report on interview with Milovan Djilas by Vienna Radio reporter Gustav Chalupa -- date and place unspecified; Djilas statements recorded in Serbo-Croatian fading into German translation]

[Text] Milovan Djilas is critical of himself and skeptical about his achievements. He thus assesses his influence on Yugoslavia's socialist road as rather insignificant. This influence is at best indirect because the rulers of that time, primarily Tito, were compelled to adhere to certain democratic rules vis-a-vis the outside world. Djilas never tried to make his peace with Tito. The self-conscious Montenegrin was convinced of the correctness of his criticism of the new class in Yugoslavia. In 1966, after his release from the Sremska Mitrovice prison, he addressed a letter to Tito in which he has contributed to the disintegration and to the decline of the system, as Djilas stated in a very assertive manner.

[Begin recording] [Djilas] It is not Yugoslavia, but its Titoist system, that is breaking appart. The party is disintegrating as a Leninist party. It no longer exists as such, not even in the member republics. Perhaps under police pressure it still exists in Bosnia-Herzagovina and in Croatia. It is some sort of an oligarchy that exists in parts of Yugoslavia, and at the center as well, but by and large it is no longer effective.

The orthodox are still holding the key positions in the country, primarily in the army and police, which are decisive in the communist system. But their influence is slowly decreasing. New ideas are spreading among the intelligentsia, the journalists, and the people.

Strong discontent has acquired a distinct shape within the Communist Party itself, a discontent which is mixed with an awareness of the fact that there is no way out of the difficulties. Nobody is showing a new road, although this does not imply that the Yugoslav federation has no future. But the wheel of development cannot be turned back. The member republics have politically asserted themselves and have developed their self-consciousness. As a result of the decline of communist values, Yugoslavia is proceeding toward a democracy. There is no way of stopping the disintegration of ideology, Milovan Djilas stated.

[Chalupa] Mr Djilas, you have spent many years of your life in prison, I think nine years altogether, after you dissociated yourself from politics, from the way power was exercised by Tito and his new class. Did you ever regret this decision or was it worth the sacrifice?

[Djilas] No, I do not regret my decision as far as I am personally concerned. I only regret that my family has suffered because of all this. In retrospect, I naturally perceive certain blunders, failures, and mistakes and even today I am in a quandary as to whether I wanted to remain or become a politician or a writer. It is a good thing, though, that I dealt with politics because I thus found my way to a dimension in literature which I could have hardly achieved otherwise. [end recording]

AXEN CRITICIZES NATO DECISION ON CHEMICAL WEAPONS

AU131122 East Berlin HORIZONT in German No. 6 1986 pp 3-4

[Address by Herrmann Axen, SED Central Committee Politburo member, at a press conference in Prague on 13 May]

[Text] Allow me to express thanks to the CPCZ Central Committee on behalf of the SED for the initiative leading to this joint CPCZ, SPD, and SED press conference. Proceeding from the great joint responsibility for peace and security, our parties think it necessary to inform the international public about the following at this press conference:

On 22 May in Brussels, the NATO states' defense ministers intend to definitively approve starting the production and deployment of new binary chemical weapons in the NATO armed forces. On 29 and 30 May, the foreign ministers of the NATO states plan to sanction this resolution on the production of the most dangerous chemical mass destruction weapons at their council meeting in Halifax.

On behalf of the SED Central Committee, I want to declare here: This decision of the NATO bodies is a new, utterly disasterous step toward preparing for a war of destruction. The adoption and implementation of the above-mentioned resolutions mean a new spiral of the arms race for chemical means of mass destruction. What are the plans of those interested in intensive armament for binary chemical weapons?

First: In November 1985 Mikhail Gorbachev and Ronald Reagan adopted a joint declaration at the Geneva summit in which the acceleration of negotiations on a global ban on chemical weapons within the Geneva 40-state disarmament conference was categorically agreed upon. To implement this agreement, the Soviet delegation to this Geneva disarmament conference recently submitted new, far-reaching, constructive proposals that are designed to facilitate and bring about the conclusion of the planned international convention on a ban on all chemical weapons as soon as possible. The Geneva disarmament conference will include a discussion of these proposals at the routine meeting starting on 9 June.

But even before this representative body starts its consultations, the NATO meetings in May present -- under pressure by the U.S. Government -- dangerous faits accomplis, namely the decision to start production and subsequent deployment of chemical weapons of a new kind, binary weapons. This is a direct violation of an important stipulation of the joint declaration of the Soviet-American summit meeting in Geneva. At this summit, the accelerated removal and destruction of all chemical weapons throughout the world was allegedly demanded. In diametrical opposition to that and in flagrant violation of this stipulation of the two world powers, NATO now decides to take rearmament for chemical weapons to a new, extremely dangerous stage.

Second: The production and introduction of binary chemical weapons is not only generally directed against the Geneva disarmament negotiations on banning chemical weapons; the NATO resolutions also aim to make practically worthless the results achieved in the 10 years of difficult negotiations in the 40-state disarmament conference, for instance in the disputed question of international control. The components for binary weapons are to a great extent simply civililan chemical products for which no control would be possible.

Third: The acceleration of chemical armaments by NATO is already threatening enough to mankind. By creating new previously-unknown destruction dimensions, the approximate military-strategic balance is to be broken in favor of a superiority of the United States and other NATO powers in the chemical weapons sector.

Fourth: With the NATO decision on the production and the introduction of binary chemical weapons, extreme circles of the miltary-industrial complex of the United States criticize all East-West negotiations on arms limitation and disarmament going on at present. They thus complicate the Soviet-American negotiations in Geneva on preventing the militarization of space, on the reduction of strategic and intermediate-range nuclear missiles. They create new stumbling blocks to the great possibility of achieving a reduction and disarmament concerning conventional weapons, in accordance with the proposals of Mikhail Gorbachev at the 11th SED Congress.

The resolution on the new binary chemical weapons is directed against the aims both of the Vienna negotiations on the reduction of armed forces and armaments in central Europe and against the Stockholm Conference on Disarmament and Confidence Building.

Fifth: With this new intensive armament in the sector of chemical mass destruction, the circles of the military-industrial complex of the United States want to discourage the peace-loving people in all countries of the world who have expressed their will for peace with new confidence since the proclamation fo the grand plan for the USSR to liberate our planet from nuclear weapons by the year 2000. Here the SED publicly protests against this new dangerous attack on peace in Europe and in the world, on this imminent aggravation of tensions through the chemical weapons arms race.

We do not protest. We appeal to the peoples, the political forces and parties, the parliaments and governments of Europe and also the United States:

1 -- Avert this new attack on world peace! A resolution on the production and subsequent deployment of new binary chemical weapons must not enter into force and must not be implemented! All peoples and states, in particular those chosen for the deployment of the new binary chemical weapons in Western Europe, should work to accelerate the negotiations on the global ban on all chemical weapons in accordance sith the agreement of the Geneva summit meeting.

2 -- Now it is even more urgent to intensify the negotiations of the GDR, the CSSR, and the FRG on the creation of a zone free of chemical weapons in Europe, together with the negotiations on a global liquidation of chemical weapons. We turn to all parliaments and governments interested in the creation of such a zone on our continent to contribute to the success of these negotiations.

Allow me to substantiate this as follows: The SED and the GDR are, in principle, in favor of securing peace, by means of an efficient arms limitation and disarmament. At the 11th SED Congress, the general secretary of our Central Committee, Comrade Erich Honecker, expressly declared in the five points of the GDR foreign policy: The SED works to "create zones free of nuclear and chemical weapons, to establish a zone free of nuclear battlefield weapons in Europe."

Mikhail Gorbachev, who from the rostrum of the 11th SED Congress further expanded his great peace plan of 15 January 1986 with trailblazing proposals for the conventional disarmament, stressed in his address: "We regard all constructive ideas as valuable and are prepared to discuss them, for instance the idea of a zone free of chemical weapons in Europe jointly worked out by the SED and SPD." The 11th party congress stressed the great significance of the joint struggle of Communists and Social Democrats to safeguard peace and to create a stable partnership of security between East and West. The preservation of peace is the paramount question. Of course, the ideological, philosophical contradictions remain. To solve them peacefully and to avoid a nuclear and chemical holocaust -- this is the aim that today links Communists, Social Democrats, Greens, churches and religious communities, and realistic respresentatives of the bourgeoisie to an ever greater extent.

To save our continent, our beautiful earth, this calls for the united and active power of the reasonable, of all who feel responsibility. Common sense can really only be the cause of reasonable people. Common sense today means disarmament instead of rearmament, cooperation instead of confrontation, circumspection instead of an adventurous balancing at the brink of a world conflagration.

The chemical weapons are a category of the most inhuman and insidious kind of weapon. Carried by missiles, grenades, and bombs, they serve to completely and surprisingly bring "silent death" to the command centers and defense lines of the Warsaw Pact armies, on all attacked states, killing millions, according to the official military plans of NATO.

A potential area of deployment of this inhuman mass-destruction weapon is logically that region in which the major part of the chemical weapons now lies. This is in the densely-populated areas of Europe, in central Europe, in particular, in the territory of the FRG.

There are constructive, life-preserving alternatives: The new Soviet proposals of 22 April 1986 at the Geneva disarmament conference, as well as the proposals of the SED and the SPD, of the GDR and the CSSR from June and September 1985 to create a zone free of chemical weapons in Europe.

The GDR and the CSSR are among the first and are directly threatened by the new NATO arms systems. However, today security can no longer be against each other but only with each other. The proposals of the GDR and the CSSR of 13 September 1985 directed the Bonn government to join state negotiations on a chemical-free zones also proceeded from this fact. Thus, the key question of the relations between the two German states was touched upon at the same time. Some Bonn politicians consider so-called human relief as the key question. But what is the biggest relief for men? A strengthened peace, a return to detente would liberate all men from the horrible nightmare of the danger of war and would let them breathe again. This is the paramount question of our time.

As Erich Honecker stressed a few days ago in his PRAVDA article, it is not decisive how often one talks about peace but what one does for peace.

Medium-sized and small states can and must also take active steps to safeguard peace, particularly in central Europe. The creation of a zone free of chemical weapons -- that would be a real step toward "creating peace with ever fewer weapons."

This would serve the national interests of all European peoples and states, as well as of international security. No one, except those profiting from armament and the war adventurists would lose. All others would win! The chance that the GDR, the CSSR, and the FRG can promote and alleviate the dialogue and the further relationship between East and West is not definitely lost yet. The preparation of a very painful death by poison for millions of people of our continent must alarm the Europeans! This is a planned organized mass murder! After Western Eruope has been transformed into a launching pad for the American Pershing's and cruise missiles -- by this action Europe will become Euroshima -- the overseas "chemists" want to transform it into a continental "binary" gas chamber. What millions of people from the most diverse nations had to suffer in the gas chambers of the fascist concentration camps is now planned for the nations of Europe, for our continent as a whole.

In view of the upcoming NATO Council meeting, we once again appeal to the conscience of the peoples and the politicians' feelings of responsibility: Awake! Defend your vital interests, the future of your children! Everything for peace, everything against war!

CHNOUPEK SPEAKS AT GENEVA DISARMAMENT SESSION

[Text] Bohuslav Chnoupek, Czechoslovak foreign minister, spoke today in Geneva at the session of the Conference on Disarmament. He said that the importance of the conference has particularly increased now, in the time of general concern over the more tense situation in the world. The world is passing through a radical turning point. The pressing issue of its future demands a new way of thinking.

Minister Chnoupek went on to say that no state or group of states could today build its own security and happiness on the idea that it can dictate its will on other countries and nations with the aid of military power. The most sensible way out of the current tense situation is to halt feverish armament and to start to make concrete steps toward disarmament. The Soviet programs of the entire elimination of nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction by the end of this millenium, and other peace proposals of the socialist countries, are in full harmony with these goals. The further militarist plans of the United States and its NATO allies entirely contradict these sensible ways. In this situation, Czechoslovakia considers it its duty to continue to seek and to investigate the possibilities of freeing mankind from the threat of war. It proceeds from the cardinal principles of its foreign policy based on peaceful coexistence and cooperation.

Minister Chnoupek stressed that Czechoslovakia's policy in respect to the Geneva negotiations has always been guided by the criterion of effectiveness. Urgent questions must be tackled, not shelved. Talks must be aimed at effective measures for the complete and general elimination of nuclear weapons. Czechoslovakia therefore comes out in favor of beginning specific talks on all aspects of a nuclear weapons test ban. Bohuslav Chnoupek went on to stress at the conference on disarmament that the efforts to ban nuclear tests and for the complete eradication of the nuclear threat were also connected with the task of ensuring the safe development of nuclear energy. We cannot in one breath speak about the fears resulting from the failure of peaceful energy reactors and at the same time make preparations for much greater devastation by nuclear weapons. The safety of nuclear power stations can be increased primarily by setting up an international system for the safe development of nuclear energy, as the Soviet Union proposed this year. Czechoslovakia fully supports this proposal.

Bohuslav Chnoupek went on to speak about the intentions of the United States to renege on its commitments arising from the SALT treaties. He stated that these steps are evidently aimed at undermining the equilibrium, at causing sharp retaliatory measures, and at jeopardizing the positive aspects of the Geneva talks, whose pledges remained unfulfilled up to the present day.

Going on to speak about the development of space strike weapons, the Czechoslovak minister of foreign affairs recalled the basic outline of the realistic disarmament program put forward by the Soviet Union on 15 January. He also spoke in detail about the Warsaw Pact summit last week in Budapest. He explained in detail the main ideas of the appeal that was issued at the Budapest meeting. He stated that it was a thoroughly worked out and carefully considered undoubtedly important program for deep cuts in conventional weapons. He noted some positive reactions from the West to this appeal and stated that if the Western countries showed good will, this program could become a real basis for appropriate agreements.

Minister Chnoupek also spoke about the soviet and U.S. medium-range missiles in Europe. He said that in Budapest the Warsaw Pact states unequivocally called for their elimination. He went on to say that Czechoslovakia also assigns key importance to the talks at the conference on the entire ban and elimination of chemical weapons. He said that Czechoslovakia, along with the GDR Government, already proposed to the FRG Government on 12 September 1985 adoptions an agreement on the creation of a chemical-weapon-free zone in Central Europe, He emphasized that Czechoslovakia was ready to continue its contacts with the Bonn government and the governments of the other states involved.

At the conclusion of his speech at the Geneva Conference on disarmament, Bohuslav Chnoupek described as the main cause of the tense situation in the world the dangerous foreign policy and neoglobal ambitions of the imperialist groups in the United States. In spite of this, Czechoslovakia remains convinced that there is a realistic possibility of creating reliable security for all countries and of securing peaceful conditions for their development. Czechoslovakia sees the way toward this possibility in political means and in the joint effort of all states. The ban on nuclear tests, nuclear disarmament, abandonment of space militarization, the ban and elimination of chemical weapons, as well as other disarmament measures could lead to the creation of peace for Europe and the world, said Foreign Minister Bohuslav Chnoupek.

GDR GENEVA ENVOY SUBMITS PAPER ON TEST BAN

[Excerpt] Geneva, 17 Jun (ADN) -- Ambassador Dr Harald Rose, the GDR representative to the Geneva disarmament conference, submitted a working paper on the draft treaty on the total ban of nuclear weapon tests to this body on Tuesday [17 June].

This proposal underlines the high priority which the socialist countries attach to the immediate ban on nuclear weapon tests, and appreciates the USSR resolution to forgo nuclear explosions for a full year, Dr Rose emphasized. He expressed the hope that the United States will follow this example.

Stopping nuclear tests will make the solutions of still more complex issues such as the reduction and removal of nuclear weapons easier. Continuing tests and rejecting a negotiated settlement would be a strike not only in the viewpoint of the overwhelming majority of the members of the disarmament conference but also of world public opinion.

The Budapest Warsaw Pact session showed how the trend of the growing danger of war can be reversed and international relations returned to the tracks of detente, the GDR representative underlined. The session placed special emphasis on stopping all nuclear tests, just as much as on the complete abolition of USSR and U.S. medium-range missiles in the European zone, on achieving concrete results in Soviet-U.S. negotiations on nuclear and space weapons, on the abolition of chemical weapons, and on the significant reduction of armed forces and conventional arms.

The delegations at the Geneva disarmament conference should not be satisfied with pointing out negative trends in the international arena and their influence on this conference. Rather one should reflect on how the disarmament conference could increase its role as a factor for detente and disarmament.

LEADERS' MEETING CELEBRATES BLAGOEV ANNIVERSARY

AU132009 Sofia BTA in English 1732 GMT 13 Jun 86

[Text] Sofia, June 13 (BTA) -- An official meeting was held here to mark the 130th anniversary of the birth of Dimitur Blagoev, the founder of scientific socialism in Bulgaria and of the Bulgarian Communist Party.

The meeting was attended by Mr Todor Zhivkov, secretary general of the CC of the BCP, and by other party and state functionaries and public figures.

Mr Yordan Yotov, member of the Politburo and secretary of the CC of the BCP, read a report on the significance of Dimitur Blagoev's lifework and on his contribution to the Bulgarian and world communist and working class movement, and to human culture in general.

"We are clearly aware of the fact that the lapse of time has had no negative effect over his thinking and revolutionary lifework. We regard him as our own contemporary," noted the speaker. Dimitur Blageov is a contemporary of ours before all with his most remarkable achievement: the foundation of the Bulgarian Communist Party, on of the first revolutionary Marxist parties in the world.

"What also makes him our contemporary is his consistent political approach in the assessment of the social phenomena and processess, his patriotism and consistent proletarian and socialist internationalsim."

"Dimitur Blagoev is our contemporary with his deep-rooted humanism, his ardent struggle for peace, hatred for war, which he defined as the greatest evil in the world."

'Let's open war on all wars', is and should be the slogan of the proletarial," wrote Dimitur Blagoev. This slogan must be the main task of all social strata. The consistent and active struggle for the preservation and strengthening of peace is the most important global issue standing before our generation," Said Mr. Yordan Yotov.

"We can now say with great satisfaction that the Bulgarian Communist Party, which is following the traditions established by Dimitur Blageov and is pursuing a Leninist policy, is giving a valuable contribution to the fulfillment of socialism's historical mission: the building of a world free of wars and armaments," said he.

The great victory of the socialist community and of the struggle for peace in general is the achievement of a military balance between the two social systems. This will be the main stabilizing factor in international affairs, noted Mr Yordan Yotov. The realistic and comprehensive peace program adopted by the 27th CPSU Congress, and the numerous constructive initiatives by the U.S.S.R. and the other socialist states, members of the Warsaw Treaty, manifest socialism's inherent love for peace.

The member of the Politburo and secretary of the CC of the BCP noted the address, adopted by the Budapest session of the political consultative committee of the Warsaw treaty member-states. The initiatives featured in it offer concrete steps for the general improvements of the political and military situation in Europe and world-wide.

The report also examines Bulgaria's policy on the Balkans, directed at the strengthening of the good neighbor relations and the improvement of understanding of all Balkan states and peoples. The speaker emphasized upon Bulgaria's initiatives aimed at turning the Balkans into a zone free nuclear weapons, and on the Bulgaro-Romanian initiative to free the region of all chemical weapons.

[Sofia Domestic Service in Bulgarian at 1730 GMT on 13 Jun, in reporting on the Dimitur Blagoev anniversary commemoration, adds: "The honorary presidium included Comrades Georgi Atanasov, Milko Balev, Ognyan Doynov, Pencho Kubadinski, Stanko Todorov, Chudomir Aleksandrov, Georgi Yordanov, Crigor Stoichkov, Dimitur Stoyanov, Petur Dyulgerov, Stoyan Markov, Dimitur Stanishev, Kiril Zarev, and Stoyan Mikhaylov.]

Dzhurov Speech

AU271132 Sofia NARODNA ARMIYA in Bulgarian 13 May 86 pp 1,2

[Report on speech delivered by Army General Dobri Dzhurov, minister of national defense, at a meeting of the all-Army party aktiv on the tasks of the army Communists for the implementation of the 13th BCP Congress decisions; held on 12 May in Sofia]

[Text] Comrade Dobri Dzhurov, minister of national defense, read a report on the tasks of the soldiers of the Bulgarian People's Army in connection with implementing the decisions adopted by the 13th BCP Congress.

Our all-Army party aktiv is holding its meeting at a time of exceptional importance, Comrade Dzhurov pointed out. The responsibility stems from the great historical tasks assigned by the 27th CPSU Congress and the 13th BCP Congress. As was noted in the decision of the BCP Central Committee Politburo of 18 April, "the 13th BCP Congress raises the Leninist April general line of the party and both specifies and expands the party program; it maps out both the long-term strategy and the paths and tasks for the further development of the People's Republic of Bulgaria."

Having taken place at an extremely complicated time, at a turning point in the development of real socialism, and in the world as a whole, our 13th BCP Congress will be remembered in the party's history for the documents submitted to it and adopted by it, and in particular for Comrade Todor Zhivkov's introductory and closing speeches. This is a bold, extensive program for a more resolute and expanded implementation of the scientific-technical revolution in our country, as a sequel to social revolution under present-day circumstances.

In assessing the path covered since the 1956 April plenum, the achievements of the last 5 years in particular, the 13th BCP Congress also pointed out the considerable achievements in the development of the Bulgarian People's Army and in our country's preparation for its own defense.

Our congress was preceded by the 27th CPSU Congress, which approved the recent thorough changes that have occurred in all sectors of life in the Soviet Union and mapped out gigantic new tasks in the field of the Soviet country's economic and social development for the period up to 2000.

The importance of our 13th BCP Congress is also determined by the complicated political processes that are now taking place all over the world.

As we are all aware, the approach of the United States, in all its aspects, is directed toward the achievement of an historical revenge, toward the economic exhaustion of the USSR and the socialist countries with the final goal of liquidating socialism. We are witnessing aggressive actions of unrestrained state terrorism and neoglobalism against Libya, Nicaragua, Angola, and Mozambique, and against many other countries by the United States and some of its allies. If the imperialists do not dare to unleash a world conflagration, it is because a parity of forces exists between the United States and the Soviet Union, between the NATO bloc and the Warsaw Pact.

It is precisely in this very urgent appeal of our time that dialectical links are revealed, the links existing between the problems of peace and war, on the one hand, and the decisions adopted by the 27th CPSU and 13th BCP Congresses, on the other. These decisions relate to the acceleration of a large-scale scientific-technical revolution and the implementation of its achievements. All this shows once again how far-sighted and wise the policy of our parties is, because these parties are doing and will do everything within their power to maintain the combat readiness of their countries' armed forces at the level of contemporary requirements.

The goal of the present party aktiv meeting is to discuss the results, the trends, and practical tasks emanating from the 13th BCP Congress. It is to accelerate these processes by mastering the laws of the scientific-technical revolution and by rapidly applying its achievements. Under the present circumstances the technical equipment of the Army is one of the chief factors of its combat strength. This means that the military leadership must devote the greatest attention to this particular aspect of military organization. The basic efforts must concentrate on fully mastering various types of equipment and the main efforts must be devoted to the full maintenance of this equipment so that it is technically perfect and fit to be used in combat.

Army General Dobri Dzhurov further pointed out that the implementation of the organization and leadership of all training and educational work in the Army is the basis on which the fighting capacity of the Bulgarian People's Army rests. It is necessary to raise this work to a qualitatively new level through the further introduction of the achievements of scientific-technical progress.

This demands that we raise the standard of planning in combat and political training. Planning is a key question, the question of questions, which essentially determines the standards of all our future work. Particular attention must be devoted to current and future-oriented planning. For this purpose it is necessary to adapt all planning documents to the achievements of scientific-technical progress.

The role of instructors must be enhanced. They must play the role of a main, decisive factor in the training process. The commanders, political organs, and party organizations must cooperate very closely with the instructors in order to organize measures for improving the theoretical and methodological education of these instructors, and in order to increase their self-confidence. We must create conditions that are likely to inspire the instructors and equip them with the necessary ideas, as well as train them in their working habits and improve this skill in working with army personnel.

The standards of party-political work must be improved to ensure the most active participation of army personnel in daily training activities. The political organs, the party and Komsomol organizations must daily and constantly assist the commanders in organizing and implementing the training process. It is their duty to ensure the vanguard role of the Communists and the model behavior of Komsomol members in the training process, so that they serve as examples.

We need a training-material base today that will help personnel master the training and educational subjects even more thoroughly, save time and resources, and make the training process more efficient.

The minister of national defense stressed: It is necessary for us to understand that the extensive application of the achievements of the scientific-technical revolution to the training process in the Bulgarian People's Army is a necessary prerequisite for the implementation of the party's appeal for high combat readiness and the implementation of this task is therefore the basic duty of commanders, political organs, and party organizations in the Army.

Army General Dobri Dzhurov dwelled further on the movement for the scientific-technical creativity of youth, the further improvement of discipline and vigilance among soldiers, and the development of cadres and their professional training. Particular attention must be devoted to ensuring a greater contribution by scientific cadres and scientific-research work in higher educational institutions. Following this, the minister of national defense pointed out that the new tasks demand an improvement in educational work.

Comrade Dzhurov further stated: As Comrade Todor Zhivkov pointed out in his introductory speech to the 13th BCP Cognress, "the enhancement of the role of the human factor in our development is the basic task of the ideological front today." The army personnel will act the more successfully, the better they master, ponder, and strain the 13th BCP Congress decisions through their hearts and minds.

The solution of all problems depends to a great extent on the fighting capacity of the party organizations within the Bulgarian People's Army. It depends on the party organizations today; whether they assume the leadership of the innovative processes and whether they guide Communists and all personnel in the battle for the implementation of the congress decisions. Life convincingly confirms that party organizations in the army have frequently demonstrated their skill in responding to the appeal for innovation and in mobilizing the people to implement the new tasks. Today again, in order to respond to the congress demands, it is necessary for the party organizations in the army to develop and strengthen the ideological and organizational aspects of their own work and to proceed further in their development.

On the basis of a strict organization, a businesslike spirit, and a creative approach, the party organizations must become an efficient factor in shaping the new attitude of the Communists toward scientific-technical progress. It is the duty of every basic party organization to involve the Communists in the struggle for the most complete mastering and use of the combat possibilities of the existing, modern military technical equipment and arms, and for a permanent improvement in the military-professional training of leading cadres and all army personnel.

The minister of national defense stressed that the basic army party organization is a political leader and of the collective to which it belongs. The party organization implements its leading functions through the Communists and through the commander who is one of its members.

Army General Dobri Dzhurov further poitned out that the decisions of the 13th BCP Congress and the tense international situation determine the important and responsible tasks of ideological work in the army. These aforementioned factors demand perfection in the form and content of ideological training, and the assertion of a new approach in the organization and leadership of ideological education.

The speaker dwelled on the expansion and consolidation of intellectual relations between commanders, political organs, and party organizations, on the one hand, and army personnel, on the other, upon the improvement of the scientific standards of ideological work. Army General Dobri Dzhzurov dwelled on certain questions pertaining to the style and methods of work, stemming from the decisions of the 13th BCP Congress.

ZHIVKOV, ATANASOV HAIL CZECHOSLOVAK HOLIDAY

AU262006 Sofia RABOTNICHESKO DELO in Bulgarian 9 May 86 p 2

[Text] Todor Zhivkov, general secretary of the BCP Central Committee and chairman of the Bulgarian State Council, and Georgi Atanasov, chairman of the Council of Ministers, have sent the following telegram to Gustav Husak, general secretary of the CPCZ Central Committee and CSSR president, as well as to Lubomir Strougal, premier of the CSSR Government.

Dear Comrades,

On behalf of the BCP Central Committee, the State Council, and the Council of Ministers of the People's Republic of Bulgaria, on behalf of the Bulgarian people, as well as on our own behalf, we convey to you, to the CPCZ Central Committee, to the CSSR Government, and to the fraternal Czechoslovak people, our most sincere congratulations and wishes on the occasion of the CSSR national holiday.

The liberation of your country from fascism with the decisive assistance of the Soviet Union, which was the climax of the national liberation struggle waged by the Czech and Slovak peoples, was a turning point in the recent history of Czechoslovakia. Under the leadership of your party the CSSR Communists and working people expanded their consistent struggle for deep, revolutionary changes and for the construction of a new society, a struggle which was crowned with full success in 1948.

We rejoice at the fact that in the years of socialist construction, the CSSR people, headed by the CPCZ, its tested vanguard, achieved remarkable successes in all fields of sociopolitical, economic, and cultural life, and that Czechoslovakia today is a country with a highly developed economy and a constantly increasing living standard for its population. The CSSR's achievements are a convincing confirmation of the advantages of the socialist social system.

The Bulgarian working people highly appreciate the CSSR contribution to the consolidation of the unity and cohesion of our socialist society, to the development of socialist economic integration, and to the further strengthening of the defense alliance of the Warsaw Pact, as well as to peace and security in the world.

We point out with great satisfaction that the relations of fraternal friendship and comprehensive cooperation between the BCP and the CPCZ, between the People's Republic of Bulgaria and the CSSR are constantly expanding and being intensified on the basis of Marxism-Leninism and socialist internationalism. We express our deep conviction that these relations will continue to develop and further improve in the spirit of the decisions adopted by the 13th BCP Congress and by the 17th CPCZ Congress, for the benefit of our two countries and of the entire socialist community.

On the occasion of the CSSR national holiday, we wish the Czechoslovak people, as well as you, dear comrades, personally great new successes in the construction of a developed socialist society in fraternal Czechoslovakia, as well as in the struggle for peace and social progress in Europe and throughout the world.

Strougal, Husak Speeches

[Excerpt] After the swearing-in ceremony for the new government, held in Prague Castle, Federal Premier Lubomir Strougal thanked Gustav Husak, president of the republic, for the trust given to the government. He said that we are entering a challenging period, not only from the point of view of the interests and needs of our people, but also from the point of view of the entire socialist community. The responsibility which rests with the government is great. Under the leadership of the Party, he said, we have achieved great successes. However, we do not try to hide our weak points. (?We view our work critically). We tried to express this also at the 17th CPCZ congress, at CPCZ Central Committee sessions, and at other party and government sessions. From this point of view it is necessary to view all questions, all challenging tasks. A new approach toward tasks facing the government concerns both the foreign-political and social sphere, but above all the economic and scientific-technical sphere. We have to manage more effectively; we have to be more strict toward ourselves and toward others; we have to utilize all reserves in the planning and everyday work. It is necessary to analyze more deeply the causes of some negative social and, above all, economic phenomena. It is necessary to look for new ways, learn from Soviet comrades and from comrades form other socialist countries how to approach, in Czechoslovak conditions the solution of the most important tasks and problems. This is a creative, brave attitude toward removing the causes of existing shortcomings.

Lubomir Strougal went on to say that shortly the government will present the Federal Assembly with a government program predetermining its activity for the next 5 years. The start of this year, he said, has not been successful in every respect. This is why this year, too, it is necessary to look for and to adopt certain measures for a qualitative development which corresponds to our strategy toward the intensification of the national economy, to be implemented better than so far. rom this point of view we do not want to pay attention only to outlook questions and to medium-term questions but also to operative questions, to questions of the present because the starting point from 1986 is very important for the future years.

In conclusion, Lubomir Strougal assured the president of the republic that the federal government will work on the guidelines set by the 17th party congress, and as it is demanded by the interests of advanced socialism, our people, and socialist society.

President Gustav Husak, in the introduction to his reply, cordially congratulated the premier, vice premiers, and ministers of the federal government on their appointment into important state offices. He recalled that new representative and legislative bodies and organs of the state power are now constituted throughout our country after the general elections. The appointment of the new federal government -- the supreme executive body of state power in the CSSR -- plays an important part in this process.

In the current period, Comrade Gustav Husak went on to say, our society and the entire socialist community face exceptionally important tasks in internal development and in the international sphere. They were described comprehensively by 17th CPCZ Congress and the congresses of the fraternal communist and workers' parties, particularly the 27th CPSU Congress, which approached the tackling of crucial issues of our times in a novel way.

The federal government is facing increasing demands: Securing a materially and spiritually richer life for our peoples; improving their living and working conditions; advancing the creation of a socialist way of life, which demands firmer and more thorough progress in the implementation of the strategic line of accelerating the socioeconomic advancement of our society; and substantially increasing the output and efficiency of the national economy,,

It is our foremost duty to implement gradually and efficiently the 17th CPCZ Congress program. This will require daily hard work, great activity and utmost responsibility of every part of the state mechanism, the application of novel approaches, the improvement of the style and methods of work, and increased efficiency by the managerial system in all spheres of our society. The federal government must carry out its coordination task more actively, and unify the proceedings of all territorial, state and economic bodies.

We must bring more energy into the work of the ministries and their bodies for a thorough implementation of the course of the 17th party congress to eliminate the barriers between sectors and branches of our economy; in this we have great reserves. At the same time it is necessary to develop further and deepen the socialist features of our society, to remove negative phenomena everywhere and in everything and to reinforce state and work discipline. The new government, in tackling the difficult but quite realistic intentions, Comrade Husak said, has what to build on and what to lean upon. [as heard]

Czechoslovakia entered the second half of the eighties as a politically strong, consolidated and economically and socially advanced state with high living and cultural standards for its people. Its international position has been reinforced. An inexhaustible resource of our strength rests in the trust and support our peoples expressed for the CPCZ and National Front program for the domestic and foreign policy at the recent elections to the representative bodies of all levels. The program of economic and scientific-technical cooperation with the USSR, and the Comprehensive Program of Scientific-Technical Development of the CEMA Countries Until 2000, are the base for the long-term trends of the advancement of the socialist community and is a firm support for our intentions.

Our main foreign policy task is to preserve peace. Therefore, in cooperation with the USSR and the other socialist countries we concentrate on settling the topical task of the fight for disarmament, for restructuring international relations, for strengthening Europe and general security, and for the development of cooperation between states with differing spcol system. This was reconfirmed in the Warsaw Pact appeal that was adopted at the recent session of the Political Consulative Committee of the Warsaw Pact in Budapest. It appeals to the NATO states and all European countries with important proposals for the reduction of armed forces and a conventional arms-build-up in Europe.

In conclusion, Comrade Husak wished the new government all the best in its responsible and highly demanding work, and assured its members that they have the full support of the CPCZ Central Committee, the National Front, and himself in their work for the benefit of our country and the well-being of all our peoples.

RUDE PRAVO COMMENTARY ON WARSAW PACT SUMMIT

[Editorial: "A Programmatic and Urgent Appeal"]

[Text] The Budapest session of the Warsaw Pact Political Consultative Committee is an international political event of prime importance. The session was followed by a meeting of the delegation heads of the participating countries. Both events are of exceptional importance for the joint and coordinated foreign policy of the countries of the socialist community.

A significant document was signed at the close of the session of the Political Consultative Committee: The "Address of the Warsaw Pact Member-States to the Member-States of NATO and European Countries," containing major proposals for the reduction of armed forces and conventional armaments in Europe.

The Budapest session voiced concern at the tense international situation, and at its continuing exacerbation, as a consequence of the antipeace policy of American imperialism. The most important task in the present situation is to halt the arms race. in the nuclear as well as conventional fields, to prevent the militarization of outer space, and to establish prerequisites for a new stage of international detente, for the resumption of a process that started in the preceding decades and which was interrupted through the fault of the militaristic policy of the United States.

Not only European, but also global international politics cannot be visualized without the Warsaw Pact Organization, the socialist countries' defense alliance, which has in the more than 30 years of its history demonstrated that it is an effective instrument of strengthening peace and averting the danger of a nuclear war. The Warsaw Pact's growing weight exerts a steadily increasing influence on the international political situation and is a factor that significantly contributes to the peaceful development of the world.

The socialist countries consider the safeguarding of a solid peace and the averting of the danger of war to be the main task of their foreign policy. This was stressed anew in the address to the NATO states and all European countries on reducing armed forces and conventional armaments, which formulates an urgent task: To reduce the numerical strength of armed forces and reduce the arsenals of conventional weapons.

The address constitutes an all-embracing and specific program leading toward military detente. It follows up on the proposal presented by Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, at the recent SED Congress in Berlin and on the initiatives contained in his declaration of 15 January this year. These important peace proposals are in full harmony with our country's foreign policy and received the support of all Warsaw Pact member-states in Budapest, which incorporated into them their collective experience.

The reduction of troops and conventional weapons and the reduction of risks arising from the stockpiling of nuclear arsenals are of special importance to Europe, a continent where two large groupings of troops -- those of the Warsaw Pact and of NATO -- are facing each other. They are equipped with the latest types of tanks, aircraft, missiles, artillery, and other weaponry. The enormous concentration of military units and combat technology increases the military, and thus also, the political tension.

A reduction in the numerical strength of armed forces and in their weaponry would significantly contribute to normalizing relations on the European Continent and to detente.

However, the need for disarmament steps follows not only from the concentration of armaments in Europe, but also from the development of military technology, which has drawn nearer the moment in which the destructive effects of weapons that are labeled as conventional will match the effects of mass destruction weapons.

The states of the Warsaw Pact have come up with a specific program, which they present to the states of NATO, other European governments, and the entire world public. It is a program about which it is possible to negotiate instantaneously, a program whose implementation can start without any delay. It is a programmatic, yet a highly urgent task. The implementation of the Budapest address would lead to detente in the military field and also to the creation of new positive prerequisites for the development of cooperation in the economy, science, and technology. It could thus help to reactivate a process that would signify a new stage in strengthening European security and cooperation, a process that would significantly contribute to general international security.

In this serious moment, no one can dodge responsibility vis-a-vis the present and future generations. The fate of the world must not be left at the mercy of American militarists. It was precisely this idea -- responsibility for the fate of the present and future generations -- which the Budapest session of the Political Consultative Committee used as its point of departure. It was with this in mind that it turned to the states of Europe and also to the United States and Canada with proposals that concern the entire continent -- from the Atlantic to the Urals. The initiative touches upon all aspects of the disarmament process and complements and develops further the program of nuclear disarmament.

The address proposes a radical reduction in the numerical strength of Warsaw Pact and NATO armed forces and in the weaponry of their ground, as well as air forces. It comprises nuclear armaments, missiles with a range up to 1,000 km.

The proposal provides for specific stages of the disarmament process. In the first stage, which would last 1 to 2 years, Warsaw Pact and NATO would reduce their troops by 100,000 to 150,000 men. This would be followed by further cutbacks in the subsequent stage. In this way, there would be a reduction by about 500,000 men on each side by the beginning of the nineties. The concentration of military forces in Europe would thus be reduced by 1 million men.

The initiative provides for a balanced and mutual reduction process, in the course of which parity would be maintained. This would help to strengthen military-strategic stability. The concentration of troops along the line of contact, tactical air force and other types of weaponry, and arms arsenals would be reduced. Exchanges of data on exercises and movements of troops, alongside an all-embracing system of national and international control, would form an integral part of commitments under the treaty.

Proposals of exceptional importance have come out from Budapest. Europe and the whole world have been given a new chance. There are realistic prerequisites to stop the arms race and free mankind from the risks of a conflict. It is necessary, however, that the states of NATO display more good will than they did on similar occasions in the past.

The CSSR is a firm link of the Warsaw Pact. Our people will do everything they can for the important results of the Budapest session of the Political Consultative Committee to be implemented. Together with the other socialist countries, we will step up our efforts to bring about peace and to change the restless world of the present into a world of peace and a guaranteed future for this and the coming generations.

[Interview given by Svatopluk Potac, deputy premier and chairman of the State Planning Commission, to Svatopluk Smutny on behalf of RUDE PRAVO and Bratislava PRAVDA: "The Eighth 5-Year Plan's High Demands"]

[Excerpts] The resolution of the 17th congress on the Main Guidelines of the Economic and Social Development of the CSSR for the 1986-90 Period and the Outlook Up to the Year 2000 charge the CSSR Government with the task of concluding in the course of the first half of 1986, the work on the draft of the Eighth 5-Year Plan. The progress of the work is the subject of a RUDE PRAVO and PRAVDA interview with Comrade Svatopluk Potac, CSSR deputy premier and chairman of the State Planning Commission.

[Smutny] When will you submit the draft of the Eighth 5-Year Plan to the CSSR Government for discussion?

[Potac] The Main Guidelines of the Economic and Social Development of the CSSR for the 1986-90 Period and an Outlook Up to the Year 2000, approved by the 17th CPCZ Congress, contain a very detailed definition of what has to be ensured in the Eighth 5-Year Plan. These tasks have been elaborated in the final draft of the 5-year plan, and apportioned for individual years and individual centers. The results of negotiations on the coordination of plans, long-term trade agreements, and programs of long-term trade agreements, and programs of long-term economic and scientific-technical cooperation with the CEMA countries up to the year 2000 had to be incorporated. In addition, one also took into account some new realities which occurred in the development of the world economy and which directly concern us. The State Planning Commission will submit the draft of the Eighth 5-Year Plan to the CSSR Government for discussion in June.

[Smutny] What will the timetable be from now on?

[Potac] The obligatory nature of our 5-year plans lies in the fact that, as a form of law, they are discussed and adopted by the Federal Government, and that the government charges individual central agencies with tasks ensuring the implementation of the plan. Therefore, Federal Assembly committees will discuss the draft bill on the Eighth 5-Year Plan in September, and in October this bill will be discussed and adopted at a joint meeting of the Chamber of the People and the Chamber of Nations. Central agencies will ensure the breaking down of the Eighth 5-Year Plan to economic producton units by 4 August, and the medium management components will do this for enterprises by 5 September.

[Smutny] What can we say about the preparation of next year's plan?

[Potac] This year a change is occurring in the usual procedure, whereby the CSSR Government approved the guideline for the elaboration of the annual plan in April or May. We have chosen a different course which stresses the fundamental role of the 5-year plan in the management of the national economy and ensures that the work on it is meaningfully intertwined with the elaboration of the annual plan for 1987. Therefore, concurrent with the completion of work on drafting the Eighth 5-Year Plan, we have also prepared the annual plan for next year and will submit it to the CSSR Government, together with the 5-Year Plan. This means that we are gaining a useful time advantage for next year and the coming years.

The breaking down of the annual plan for the lower components of managements is being realized with the same deadlines as the 5-year plan, that is, by central agencies for economic production units by 4 August, and by medium components for enterprises by 5 September.

JANAK CRITICIZES WEST SLOVAK 1986 PERFORMANCE

[Maria Slaninova report: "A More Demanding Approach Is Absolutely Essential"]

[Excerpts] Bratislava -- Yesterday's session of the West Slovak CPSL regional committee dealt with the tasks of the regional party organization in west Slovakia in ensuring the fulfillment of the resolutions of the 17th CPCZ Congress and with the plan to implement these tasks. The session was attended by Frantisek Pitra, candidate member of the Presidium and secretary of the CPCZ Central Committee.

The report of the Presidium of the west Slovak CPSL regional committee, which was delivered by Ignac Janak, candidate member of the CPCZ Central Committee Presidium and leading secretary of the west Slovak CPSL regional committee, in a critical, demanding, and specific way assessed the results achieved in the region's industry and agriculture in the first quarter of the year and laid down the tasks for the period to come, especially with regard to eliminating persisting shortcomings. "On aggregate, we achieved a good fulfillment of the plan in its basic indicators, but we must frankly admit that the results so far are commensurate neither with our possibilities nor with our needs," the report stated.

The fulfillment of the tasks of the first quarter of the year by many enterprises was incomplete and uneven; average adjusted labor-added value in the region was lower than in the same period last year, with 18 enterprises having failed to fulfill the plan of adjusted labor-added value. They included the south Slovak paper and pulp works in Sturovo, the Slovak fixtures plant in Myjava, the 29 August plant in Partizanske, the flax and hemp processing plant in Holic, and Elektrosvit Nove Samky. A total of 10 enterprises did not fulfill the production plan and the Trnava automobile works, Tesla Piestany, Chirana Piestany, and the Tatra plant in Banovce Nad Bebravou fell short of the planned profit. The improvement of the quality and the innovation of products continue to progress at a slow rate. It is therefore absolutely essential to adopt effective measures at all levels to improve managerial, organizational, and political-educational work, not only in industrial enterprises, but also in the building industry, which fulfilled only 20 percent of the annual task in the first quarter of the year, and in the agricultural-food industry complex.

Considerable attention was devoted in the report and in the discussion to the problems of making plans. Experiences from the drafting of the plan for this year show that the preparatory period was not utilized to its full extent in exposing hidden potentials. The plans of 36 enterprises were even reduced. It is incomprehensible that party and trade union organizations give their backing to this approach of the economic management. In the future they will have to approach such practices in a more principled way. This is the only way for the regional organization to ensure the tasks of the Eighth 5-Year Plan: To raise industrial production 26 to 28 percent; adjusted labor-added value, 60 percent; and profits, 140 percent.

Comrade Frantisek Pitra, who spoke in the discussion, dealt with the role of work collectives in enforcing the line of intensification, and a high degree of economy and with the forms and methods of political-organizational, ideoeducational, and cadre work.

He stressed that party agencies and organizations must adopt measures that will provide the guarantee of practical results. All this was said at the 17th CPCZ Congress must now be translated into practical deeds.

LENART DISCUSSES SLOVAK ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

LD131737 Prague CTK in English 1234 GMT 13 Jun 86

[Text] Bratislava June 13 (CTK) -- An increased share of Slovakia in strengthening the whole Czechoslovak economy is part of the strategic line of speeding up the socio-economic development of the whole country, member of the Czechoslovak Communist Party Central Committee and first secretary of the Slovak Communist Party Jozef Lenart said in an interview carried by the latest issue of the weekly ZIVOT STRANY.

The main lines of Czechoslovakia's socio-economic devleopment in the 8th Five-Year Plan period count with an 18-19 percent national income growth on a state-wide scale, and a 23-25 per cent growth in Slovakia. These are highly demanding tasks. The national income is to grow much faster than the industrial production and the production input. This requires production and the production input. This requires an unprecedented advance in the rational use of energy and material, he said.

Assessing Slovakia's development in the past 15 years, Jozef Lebart said that the national income more than doubled, the industrial production increased 2.5 times and farm production by one third. Slovakia's share in the state-wide industrial production increased from 24.5 per cent to 30.2 per cent.

MEETING CRITICIZES NORTH BOHEMIA ECONOMY

["Kr"-signed report: "Against Formalism and Diehardism; Comrade Jan Fojtik Participated in a Session of the North Bohemia Regional Party Committee"]

[Excerpts] Usti Nad Labem -- The Tuesday [10 June] session of the North Bohemia CPCZ Regional Committee in Usti Nad Labem dealt with coordinating the course of action in implementing the conclusions of the 17th congress and the regional party conference in North Bohemia. The session was attended by Jan Fojtik, candidate member of the Presidium and secretary of the CPCZ Central Committee.

A number of positive changes have already been enacted in North Bohemia since the congress. Nevertheless, the novel and urgent nature of the tasks set by the congress has not been grasped everywhere; diehardism, formalism, and office-desk approaches to work have not yet been eliminated. This is borne out by the economic results of the region, which are full of contradictions. According to preliminary data, planned tasks in the production of goods for the first 5 months of the year were fulfilled 100.4 percent.

However, the situation is far from satisfactory. As was stated in the report of the Presidium, which was delivered by Vaclav Sipek, leading secretary of the CPCZ Regional Committee, the fundamental task -- efficiency of production -- is not being fulfilled. The index of adjusted labor-added value was fulfilled only 99.1 percent and profits are Kcs653 million short of the planned level.

Favorable results have been achieved by the region's miners and power industry workers, as well as by its ferrous metallurgists. The engineering sector, on the other hand, registered an extreme nonfulfillment of the production plan. TOS [Machine Tool Factory] Varnsdorf, for example, is Kcs27 million short of the production plan but Elitex Chrastava and other engineering enterprises are also behind in plan fulfillments.

The Presidium of the CPCZ Regional Committee assessed the results of the first quarter of the year and the degree of guilt of the managerial staffs in the nonfulfillment of the plan. It voiced dissatisfaction with the work of eight directors and instituted a party inquiry into the activities of five of them. Referring to this in his report, Comrade Sipek said: "We will not listen to the arguments of some of the affected comrades that this decision will impair their authority. We do not ignore real objective reasons, but neither do we ignore irresponsible approaches to setting, breaking down, and ensuring the plan."

Some participants in the discussion also took up the analytical and critical tone of the report. Oldrich Machan, director of Elitex Chrastava, who is one of the managers criticized, came up with a candid, self-critical contribution. "The comradely words of criticism are fully justified," he said. "We are worried about the present state of affairs. We are looking for new ways to solve our difficulties in a comprehensive manner and are convinced that, by tapping all hidden reserves and potentials, we will be strong enough to reverse the unfavorable situation."

Unfortunately, the other criticized comrades who attended the session did not find the courage for a similarly sincere statement. Not all statements made in the discussion contributed to the constructive spirit of the session. There were, once again, dry statistics, descriptions of technology, and repetitions of known facts. This was criticized by Comrade Sipek in his closing speech: "We will not be able to afford such a thing in the future," he said. "We are out to change the mode of thinking, to enforce and implement new tasks, and must adjust ourselves fully to this."

Comrade Jan Fojtik also took the floor in the discussion. He praised the manner in which the regional organization in North Bohemia details the conclusions of the 17th CPCZ Congress for the conditions of the region. As was confirmed by the course of the recent elections to representative bodies, the program of the 17th CPCZ Congress is a program for all our people. At present it is necessary, Comrade Fojtik stressed, to set into motion the newly elected representative bodies and to activate as many people as possible toward the fulfillment of the conclusions of the 17th CPCZ Congress and the electoral programs of the National Front. The fulfillment of these demanding tasks requires a policy with the people; they must be familiarized with resolutions and decisions, involved in review and control processes, and thus made co-responsible for the results of joint work. Communists must set an example in implementing and controlling the resolutions of the 17th CPCZ Congress, Comrade Fojtik said in conclusion.

BRIEFS

FLOOD DAMAGE -- The Berounka River, which burst its banks last week following heavy rainfall in West Bohemia, has flooded 750 hectares of wheat fields, 114 hectares of barley, 615 hectares of corn, 170 hectares of sugar beets, and 670 hectares of meadows in Beroun District alone. In the meantime, the level of the Berounka River continues to decline. Water is receding from the flooded plots, camping grounds, summer camps, and other recreational areas, but it leaves behind thick mud sediments. In the town of Beroun, fire brigades continue to pump water out of flooded basements, shops, and schools. [Summary] [Prague RUDE PRAVO in Czech 4 Jun 86 p 1 AU]

HONECKER ADDRESSES SED CENTRAL COMMITTEE SESSION

[Text] Berlin, 13 Jun (ADN) -- Erich Honecker, general secretary of the SED Central Committee, speaking at the second SED Central Committee session on the constitution of state organs, said:

It is incumbent upon today's Central Committee meeting to prepare the party's statement on the constitution of state organs. This is linked most closely with the main task to be solved in the domestic and foreign policy sphere, in line with the decisions of the 11th party congress; the further shaping of a developed socialist society in the GDR, and securing peace. As we all know, there is an indivisible connection between the two.

Just as securing peace is essential for the further shaping of a developed socialist society, so the further shaping of a developed socialist society is of decisive significance for securing peace. This was also well understood by the electorate on 8 June. They linked the preparations for the elections and their voting for the candidates of the National Front with improved performance in production and at research facilities, with great social activity in all spheres of life.

The question of peace also stood at the forefront of the latest Warsaw Pact Political Consultative Committee meeting in Budapest, where it was once again made clear that the maintenance of peace is of fundamental significance for the existence of mankind. This emerged most impressively from the words of Comrad Mikhail Gorbachev. His words, and those of Comrade Wojciech Jaruzelski, Gustav Husak, Nicolae Ceausescu, Todor Zhivkov, and Janos Kadar, and the standpoint of the GDR put forward by me on the most urgent international questions of the present time were characterized by unanimity both in the assessment of the international situation and in the conclusions deriving from this for the socialist countries and indeed for the whole of mankind.

At a difficult and complicated time, in which the international situation is overshadowed by increased tensions, our alliance discussed further effective steps to banish the danger of war and expressed the results in the documents known to you and published by the press. The aim of our struggle is to prevent the destruction of mankind in a nuclear inferno and to ensure that it remains in existence. Despite all differences in social systems and the character of states, it co-exists and cooperates well.

As was stressed in Budapest, the world today stands at a turning point. Posed is the question of the future fate of mankind. The new situation demands a new way of thinking and a new responsible approach to the problems on which war or peace depend. Above all, solutions must be found which will further help end the arms race and reshape relations between states on the basis of a comprehensive and equal security for all.

The appeal by the states of the Warsaw Pact to all NATO states and all European countries notes that the realization of nuclear disarmament and the prevention of an arms race in space would lead to the creation of a secure peace for all European peoples and the peoples of the planet. Of great importance is a significant reduction in conventional weapons and arms forces, for which our alliance has submitted a detailed program. Its realization would contribute toward changing Europe -- which like no other region in the world is packed with nuclear and conventional weapons -- from an explosive powder keg to a continent of peace, security and cooperation.

The withdrawal from the SALT II Treaty announced by U.S. President Reagan is aimed at opening the way to unbridled unfolding of armaments madness. Even Western politicians see it this way. Because of this development, which has many nuances, it is necessary to give peace a chance. The decisions of the Budapest meeting of the Warsaw Pact states accord with this, and it is to be hoped that they will meet a reaction in the Western hemisphere that will help in manifesting concrete agreements. Our states are doing what is necessary to maintain the defense strength of our alliance; this goes hand in hand with a constructive peace policy, which points a real way for mankind to have a world without wars and without weapons.

Peace in the nuclear age is the greatest possession of mankind. It must be secured, and a nuclear inferno, whether from space or from the earth, must be prevented. This demands the active contribution of all states, demands the united actions of all for whom a peaceful future for mankind is not an empty phrase but a most important concern. It is necessary to bar the way to the main warmongers, who, through their arms escalation course are bringing the world to the abyss of self-destruction. In this the socialist community of states, through its initiatives, particularly the proposals made by Mikhail Gorbachev at the 27th CPSU Congress, has moved a step forward.

Our 11th party congress gave its approval to the historic decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress because they contribute decisively to the strengthening of socialism and the safeguarding of peace. We regard as very important the statement contained in a message from Mikhail Gorbachev to me that the lessons from the Chernobyl accident must serve the whole of mankind. What happened in Chernobyl has been deeply serious in making us aware of the awful forces contained in nuclear energy. If an accident in a peaceful nuclear power station could become a disaster, then one can imagine the tragic consequences which the use of nuclear weapons with their enormous destructive power would bring for mankind. It is also clear how vital peaceful international cooperation in the nuclear energy sector has become. The GDR is working for this and it particularly supports the relevant Soviet proposals for cooperation in the peaceful use of space.

Priority must be given to achieving a mutual agreement on a halt to all nuclear tests for both peaceful and nonpeaceful purposes. This would be an important step for blocking the development of new nuclear weapons. As we know, the Soviet Union has dispensed with all nuclear tests for almost a year, and has repeatedly stated that it will extend its moratorium if the United States also agrees to one. Everyone can see who is reinforcing his commitment to peace with deeds.

The proposals of the Warsaw Pact states in Budapest for reduction of conventional arms and forces from the Atlantic to the Urals make the initiative specific in a significant sector, which can be dealt with separately, and also augment the Soviet Union's comprehensive Program for the Elimination of All Nuclear Weapons by the Year 2000. In our efforts to reduce arms we do not shy away from any kinds of weapons. Continued assertions by the Western side that with nuclear disarmament the Soviet Union and the Warsaw Pact would achieve a superiority in the conventional sphere are noise and smoke. In accordance with the principle of equality and equal security we are striving for an ever lower level of weapons and arms.

It was from this point of view that at the Budapest meeting we also supported the draft for an accord on the elimination of Soviet and U.S. medium-range missiles in Europe, which the Soviet Union put forward at the Geneva negotiations on nuclear and space weapons.

Everyone realizes that the implementation of such an agreement would lead to a fundamental change in the situation in Europe in favor of greater security and would positively influence the further struggle for disarmament.

We are and will remain firmly convinced that in this struggle, which still demands much effort, the forces of peace will prove stronger than the forces of war. The world conscience must determine the world's development.

As is generally known, we resolutely reject the cure of confrontation and unbridled arms build-up, both on earth and, through the star wars program, in space. We are continuing and stepping up our principled fight against the arms build-up, based on the decisions of the 11th party congress and the peace program of the socialist community, and especially on the proposals of the Soviet Union. Here we note that an increasing number of Western governments see that they are being led up the garden path by the U.S. Administration. This was apparent at the recent Bern meeting of experts on human contacts, where the final document failed after lengthy efforts at compromise because of the U.S. veto.

The appearance of the United States as a world gendarme, its striving for military superiority over the Soviet Union and the socialist community, its adventurous actions in the style of its act of piracy against Libya, its policy of threats and blackmail in Latin America and in the Caribbean region have given rise to increasing concern and unease in the most varied West European countries. Even in official circles in these countries, U.S. Administration is increasingly being charged with disregard for the interests of its allies and pursuit of an anti-European policy.

As is well known, at the last NATO Council meeting in Halifax the foreign ministers of the West European NATO states unanimously called on the United States to continue to respect SALT II. Also to be mentioned is the fact that the parliament of our neighboring country, the FRG, for the most varied reasons, last week spoke out in a resolution in favor of maintaining the SALT II agreement.

The Warsaw Pact states, with their appeal adopted in Budapest, are again documenting a consistent striving to reach comprehensive agreements in the most varied areas in order that the danger of a nuclear inferno be averted from mankind and that world peace be placed on a stable, lasting basis. In a nuclear war, there can be neither winners nor losers. Security today is only possible with, and not against, one another. In order to ensure peace we will make use of every chance, however small, and we will meet everyone who is guided by reason and realism and wants the same thing.

The relations between the USSR and the United States, and in particular the continuation of the Geneva negotiations between them, remain decisive for the further development of the international situation. We are in favor of a continuation of the political dialogue started in Geneva; we are in favor of a further meeting and an attempt ot reach certain agreements through negotiations in line with the joint Soviet-U.S. declaration of Geneva.

Many people in the world drew hope from the results of the summit between Mikhail Gorbachev and Ronald Reagan. It was noted that nuclear war, which no one can win, must be prevented and that neither side wishes to achieve military superiority over the other. The possibility of a change for the better in the world, of a return to detente, loomed. As all can see, the Soviet Union has remained true to the agreements reached and the obligations it undertook have been fulfilled.

This is extremely valuable for the future joint actions of the countries of our alliance aimed at improving the international situation, and exposes the intentions of those who, through a policy of strength and continued arms escalation -- as unfitting as it is dangerous -- amass more and more explosive material.

There was also agreement at the discussions in Budapest that the political dialogue is proving itself to be a fundamental instrument for strengthening the forces of reason and realism throughout the world and for opening the way to concrete agreements. We took account for example of the position of the SPD on ending the arms race and securing peace. The talks about the creation of a nuclear weapons-free corridor in central Europe are open and businesslike.

The joint initiative of the SED, the CPCZ and the SPD on the creation of a chemical weapons-free zone in Europe is proving to be useful in the current debate on peace and security in Europe.

These initiatives have now been jointly further developed with the CPCZ. The official handing over of the negotiating principles by the Governments of the GDR and the CSSR to the FRG Government, and the joint call to other neighboring states to join the initiative have given a new impetus to the struggle against stationing binary chemical weapons in Western Europe.

The effect of our peace policy is based not only on the fact that it takes account of the realities of the world today. More than ever we feel today the weight of these realities, the general interests of mankind. In the struggle for peace, the class interests of socialism are indivisibly linked with the most fundamental interests of mankind.

At the same time the effect of our peace policy derives from the strengthened position of socialism. The GDR, too, has advanced well in shaping a developed socialist society, thanks to the creative work of our people, and despite diverse imperialist disruptive maneuvers, as assessed at the 11th SED Congress.

The principled standpoint of our party was reaffirmed that the unshakeable alliance of our states in the Warsaw Pact and in the CEMA is and will remain the sure guarantee for the successful solution of all internal and external tasks of our states, no matter how complicated they may be. In accordance with this, the GDR will continue to do everything possible for the all round strengthening of our fraternal alliance and to increase the influence and attractiveness of socialism in the international arena.

The Budapest meeting of the Political Consultative Committee assessed the measures taken since the sofia meeting for raising the effectiveness and operation ability in the coordination of our foreign policy actions. The further strengthening of socialism, and with it the safeguarding of peace, depend more than ever on socialism's ability, using all its advantages, to develop broadly the dynamism of the productive forces. Since the beginning of the 1980s the most agressive circles of imperialism have, within the framework of their "crusade policy," been pursuing a strategy of economic encirclement against our socialist community and of cutting off our countries from world developments. This strategy is based on the illusion that they have a monopoly of the decisive qualitatively new directions in science and technology and can build on this to achieve economic and military superiority.

Therefore, aiming at international top performances, as adopted by us jointly with the complex program of scientific-technological progress of the CEMA member countries, is a political-strategic issue of the first order.

Indeed, it is the pace, as well as the range, of the development of the key technologies which are decisive. What is at stake is, in the true spirit of the word, the economy of today in the quantitative, as well as qualitative, development of the performances.

This approach also determines our position concerning the cooperation of the fraternal countries. We consider the development of direct relations between scientific institutions, enterprises and associations, taking place on an economic basis, an important path. This applies to solutions of tasks such as:

-- To not only achieve more quickly than planned the international top level in specific areas, but to be one step ahead;

-- Greater growth of output per annum;

-- The speedy renewal of production;

-- Offering a wider range; and

-- Flexible reaction to technical innovations.

We are firmly convinced that important new impulses for improving the international situation, for repelling the imperialist policy of threat and confrontation will emanate from the Budapest meeting of the Political Consultative Committee. This significant meeting of the Warsaw Pact member states points a realistic and constrctive for all the forces which are interested in peace and security. The realization of our concepts and initiatives will contribute to the further mobilization of peace forces and their cooperation.

The resolutions of the Budapeszt meeting are fully identical with the main directions and objectives of the foreign policy of the Socialist German Democratic Republic as adopted by the 11th SED Congress. Therefore our party, the GDR citizens, will be working whole-heartedly for the realization of these resolutions.

The great vote of confidence of 8 June for the policy of our party adopted by the 11th party congress is also linked to the instructions of the voters to guarantee the future stable and dynamic development of our workers' and peasants' state. What we have witnessed in the preparation of the elections to the People's Chamber, the Berlin City Assembly and the bezirk assemblies everywhere in our country was, in the best sense of the word, full democrary of the people in true freedom. Its further development and improvement remains them main direction of the development of our socialist state.

The Politburo's proposals for the constitution of the leading state organs are before you. They are aimed at further shaping socialist state power. The high quality of the state leadership is the fundamental guarantee for the further successful shaping of the developed socialist society in the GDR. I explained the tasks necessary for this in the Central Committee report to the 11th party congress.

Through their overwhelming agreement with the candidates of the GDR National Front, the citizens of our country have confirmed at the ballot box their readiness to help actively to implement what the 11th SED Congress decided and what is put forward in the National Front's election manifesto. The excellent reelection result is primarily a result of the policy of our party, with its clear goals, which guarantees our people a secure present and a future worth striving for.

It consistently reflects the firm trust of the citizens in our proven course for peace and socialism, for the wellbeing of the people.

The basic organizations, kreis and bezirk executives of our party, together with the associated parties and mass organizations, have done great political and organizational work in preparation for the elections. The active work of the National Front committees and the numerous frank discussions with voters, not least the work of the over 4,000 members of the Electoral Commission, the over 200,000 members of the electoral boards and the over 1 million election helpers stress that the election movement was accompanied by a significant upturn in social life in the towns and villages. Once again everyone could see that our GDR is the joint work of everyone. Everywhere it was clear that here everyone, independent of his social origins, his age and religious beliefs, can cooperate for the common good. The unity of economic and social policy which affects every family has deepened the experience of the citizens that good work for society is worth it for the individual.

The tasks which we have set ourselves up to 1990 and beyond have been attacked with confidence and initiative and with a knowledge of what is jointly being achieved. Everywhere it is understood that the domestic and foreign policy decided by our 11th congress sets higher yardsticks for all work. Through affirmation of support for our policy everywhere, conscious deeds in socialist competition are developing with the binding pledge: "Top Performances for the Good of the People and for Peace, Everything for the Realization of the Decisions of the 11th SED Congress."

Millions of citizens have made the slogan "My Work Place Is My Battleground for Peace" the determining motive of their actions. As never before, they understand that the stronger socialism is, the stronger is peace. In the citizens initiative "Make Our Towns and Communities Beautiful -- Join In," new activities for the further improvement of living conditions and the environment have been triggered. So the truth of the statement in the National Front's election manifesto is being confirmed in practice: "What the 11th Party Congress Decides Is a Matter for All of Us."

I would like to express my thanks from the second session of our Central Committee to all the working people of our country, the members of our party and the parties and mass organizations united with us, and the hundreds of thousands of citizens who supported so actively in the National Front the preparations for and carrying out of the elections and who contributed personally to the outstanding result.

During my visits to my Karl-Marx-Stadt constituency and to Erfurt and Soemmerda, to the Carl Zeiss Jena high-technology center and to the cooperative peasants in Gierstaedt, I had unforgettable experiences. They strengthen me in the conviction that the forward looking spirit of our 11th party congress is already determining day-to-day work and the rhythm of life in our republic. One can say that the challenges of our party's economic strategy and the tasks formulated in the directive to the new 5-year plan have meanwhile become a performance standard for the working people. This is expressed in their efforts to make top performances achieved into long-term performances and to achieve top results in top times.

Everywhere in the combines, enterprises, cooperatives and institutions, the talk was and is of further plans aimed at exceeding the plans in a targeted way and at writing the year of our 11th congress into the chronicle of the GDR as the year of the highest increase in performance.

In the open election discussions, conducted by all party members of the Central Committee, the way in which the workers and cooperative peasants, the scientists, engineers and young researchers, as creative members of allied collectives, are concentrating their strength on scientific and technological progress with ambition and elan, was repeatedly felt. Science and production are becoming closer and pervading one another. Linking the advantages of socialism with the results of the scientific and technological revolution has become an everyday practice, though it still remains a constant new challenge to all of us. In many areas new intellectual, spiritual and material preconditions have developed. On their foundation new opportunities are opening up for development in industry and agriculture with the key technologies. In assessing the elections discussions, the Politburo has dealt with the necessary conclusions.

Without a doubt one of the strongest impressions in our Republic is to see with what political and specialist understanding, with what personal effort and civic responsibility the working people turn our common plans into reality. The fact that youth is particularly active and creative in this fills us with special pleasure. Our socialist youth federation has with its "FDJ Brief to the 11th SED Congress" given a mobilizing response to the call made by the highest forum of our party to this country's young generation. The declaration of support by young and first-time voters strengthens us in the certainty that we will be able to continue successfully our joint work across the generations.

Through this proven common ground, we will win through on our main battlefield for the unity of economic and social policy. We are mastering the scientific and technological revolution without unemployment and are proving that only socialism is in the position to produce a modern production structure without new poverty. In this way we are increasing dynamically and continuously the quality of life of socialism on German soil.

The willingness of the people to follow the course of our party with optimism and enterprise is also due to their experience that it pays each individual to work well. It is being realized everywhere in the country that what we want is our common will, what we achieve benefits everybody. This experience corresponds to the spirit of socialism of safeguarding and increasing further with the help of economic progress the material and cultural living standards of our people. Our housing construction program is highly appreciated here, and far beyond our frontiers, as a cultural deed of the first order, as a humanistic program for the realization of one of the fundamental human rights. By 1990 the housing conditions of 10.5 million citizens will have improved, with constant low rents, in the historically short period of only two decades; and commensurate with the resolutions of our 11th party congress, we shall continue to build.

Thus our workers' and peasants' state is turning the old dream of the revolutionary German workers movement, to solve the housing issue as a social problem, into the reality of socialism. A look at history and today's comparison with the development in the capitalist housing market confirms that solving the housing issue becomes possible only through the victory of socialism on German soil.

Our state's special concern for mother and child has met with great echo. The correctness of these social measures -- shown not least by the fact that through them, those opportunities can be seized still more effectively -- which guarantees equal rights to women and in public life, is embodied in the Constitution.

The prospects for our social development contained in the resolutions of the 11th party congress are also vouched for by the 500 deputies of our highest people's representation with their work.

The 339 men and 161 women elected are, in the best spirit of the word, spokesmen of the people. They are fighting within their social areas in the front line when the prosperity of the people and the safeguarding of peace are at stake.

Of our People's Chamber deputies, 271 workers and 31, farmers; 126 deputies, members of intelligentsia; 69, employees and 3, otherwise employed; 285 deupties have completed a university and 79 a technical college education. The newly elected People's Chamber, the Berlin City Assembly and the bezirk assemblies therefore consist of highly qualified deputies, who are closely linked to the citizens and rooted firmly within their work teams. They offer a good guarantee for the continuation of our successful policy and for the daily safeguarding of our people's political and social rights. We consider it necessary to include the deputies with their specialist knowledge and their rich experiences in the People's Chamber committees at a still earlier date in the preparation of bills. The results of their checks for applying laws to everyday practice are to be thoroughly analyzed by the ministries.

In our German Democratic Republic, the contrast between the state and citizens, so typical for all exploitative systems, has been overcome once and for all. Here what applies is that everything is for the people, everything through the people, everything with the people. In our workers' and peasants' state, every citizen has the right to participate, irrespective of his social background. His ideology and his religious faith, in solving the social concerns. Everyone can see this for himself.

The election movement and the election result have confirmed impressively that the firm unity of party, state and people, the reliable alliance of all classes and strata are the guarantee of our secure advance. The citizens recognize that our party realizes through the activity of all what has been decided for the well-being of all. From the great trust in the policy of our party and of the socialist state, a firm patriotic and internationalist cast of mind has developed in our people. Deputies and voters are equally living proof that in our state the one-time subject has become the sovereign shaper of his own fate. No other state on German soil can say that about itself.

The qualititively new stage in the further shaping of the developed socialist society in the GDR, which we have entered the following the decisions of the 11th congress, also brings new demands on the effectiveness of the state organs and on the unfolding of socialist democracy. The solution of the tasks decided by the 11th congress is unthinkable withiout the increasingly broad involvement of the working people in the running of state and society and a corresponding working style, linked to the masses, for the party and state organs.

It is shown in practice that comprehensive intensification presupposes a further improvement in state management and planning. Our economic plans, which are necessary in the interests of a constant increase in performance, are increasingly tied to decisions whose political, economic, social and territorial consequences whose political, economic, social and territorial consequences have to be considered far ahead. In this we will continue to be guided in coming years by the proven principle of democratic centralism.

The brief from our 11th congress to the Council of Ministers and its organs to improve the complex management of economically decisive processes, to increase long-term work, to organize an even more effective control of the tasks decided and to do justice to the increasing demands on the government's coordinating functions are in line with this.

The law concerning the Council of Ministers is to be reworked in the new legislative period in this spirit and in line with social requirements. It is necessary to link central state management increasingly closely, more concretely and productively with the initiatives of the working people and the experiences of the combines, enterprises, cooperatives and local state organs.

The best experiences of the work of the local state organs must be analyzed even more effectively and must be generalized more broadly through tight central managment activity. In particular, the comparison of performance must be further developed. It is shown that the ruthless comparison of the standard of performance achieved helps to tap new sources for increases in perfomance, to uncover management reserves, and through the experiences of the most productive to achieve the best for the citizens. The joint discussions of the SED Central Committee and the Council of Ministers with the chairmen of the kreis councils and the mayors, which is to take place in Berlin this October on the Politburo decision, will also serve this end.

Comparison of performance in the most important areas and the consequences drawn from this are part of our constructive attempt to solve long-standing problems by advancing. The public comparison of performance, the generalization of the experiences of the best, and socialist competition are among the often mentioned advantage of socialism. In the future, we want to derive even greater benefit from them.

Favorable reproduction conditions for the development of the combines and enterprises benefit the citizens in the region and in the whole of society. On the other hand, what strengthens our workers and peasant state also benefits the community and the town and promotes the well-being of every citizen. In this dialectical interrelation, territorial rationalization as a main way of creating good reproduction and working and living conditions in the region must be planned even more carefully and organized exactly and effectively.

Our local socialist policy plays a significant part in making the driving forces and advantages of socialism more effectively felt. We note with satisfaction that as a result of the practical implementation of the law on local popular representation, a further improvement in state management in the towns and communities is taking place. The local state organs organize the increase in performance in their regions in a more planned way. As a result of their everyday work, they involve more and more citizens in the solution of local and general state tasks. The common responsibility of reaching everyone and not leaving anyone behind is making itself felt increasingly strongly in villages and urban residential areas.

The joint work of local state organs with enterprises and cooperatives is making good progress. Citizen initiatives and citizen prosperity are developing successfully and have a beneficial effect on one another. In this our mayors, whose creative initiatives we support everywhere, have a special share. It has been confirmed that a good local atmosphere, the trustful cooperation in the interest of common concerns, also create a continuous productive work climate, and deepens, not least, a sense of belonging.

As underlined once again by the election movement, the proposals and critical comments by the citizens are essential for lively local politics. The attention and support of the population create essential conditions for settling matters which are still not in order. If matters cannot be solved either right now or for a lengthy period, then this must be said openly. The confidence of the citizens in their state power presupposes the confidence of all workers of the state apparatus in the citizen.

Just how many reserves have to be opened up in this area alone through still greater mutual understanding is shown by many a petition handed in to the central authorities and which, in the interest of the people, could have been cleared up more quickly on the spot.

The election talks have confirmed that it is a special duty for all party and state organs to deal with the proposals and petitions quickly and carefully and, in the spirit of the party congress, to look after the justified interests of the citizens. Again and again the experience is confirmed that, depending on the reaction, citizens can be won for work for the common good, but opportunities for common work can also be missed.

It is also part of the citizens' wellbeing that their rights are strictly defended and regulations, such as the city and local codes, uncompromisingly implemented. The high degree of legal efficiency in our country encourages our citizens to support themselves and law and order in their enterprises and residential areas.

The discussions in preparation for the election of judges and lay assessors are drawing attention to the need to follow up this willingness still more extensively in future, particularly under the conditions of the rapid development of science and technology, great technological discipline, the adherence of all to safety regulations, and reliability are of increasing importance. Our dynamic performance growth releases no one from the responsibility to protect our national wealth against losses, through a high degree of order and discipline.

What our 11th party congress adopted for the new path ahead of our society, is, in the meantime, being supported by a broad flood of new promises and initiatives. The members and candidates of our party bear great responsibility for the further unfolding of the mass initiative. The session of the bezirk executives, the kreis executives, and the kreis party aktivs of the SED, in analyzing the resolutions of our party congress, have laid down for this a good foundation. The whole election movement is conveying valuable experiences for the political-ideological work of our party and mass orgainizations. They will have to be made good use of also in the future.

The discussions of the Executive of our party have carried the creative spirit and revolutionary optimism of the 11th SED Congress into our basic organizatons, the mass organizations and the state organs. They were directed at underpinning the high competition targets at every workplace through personal commitments, at creating everywhere the conditions for imaginative and consistent work, and at working responsibility for a constant improvement in working and living conditions. At the center stands the task of linking in the collectives the continuous accountablility for obligations taken on with a broad discussion on the directive on the new 5-year plan. High performance targets for the 1986 economic plan and the 5-year plan were worked out on this basis.

Through the election to the People's Chamber, the Berlin City Assembly and the Berzirk assemblies, thousands of members of our party have recieved from the voters the privilege of acting as a deputy. More than a few of them were standing for the first time for their respective popular representations. They need the particular support of our party. The party organizations ought to exert responsible and tactful influence to promote, right form the start, a working style linked to the masses in the case of every deputy.

We will support the deputies in every way so that at meetings of residents, discussions in collectives and in personal talks with the citizens they always prove themselves, in the best sense of the word, as representatives of the people.

To this end it is necessary to discuss regularly with the deputies topical questions relating to the domestic and foreign policy of our state, the plan fulfilment and development problems of enterprises and cooperatives in their constituencies. The decisive prerequisite for serving in high office, however, remains for each his own political experience, his knowledge and constant further education, his political steadfastness and his ability to carry things through. We are firmly conviced that every deputy is aware of the high honor and obligation of the brief given by the voters and will act accordingly.

REPORTAGE ON PEOPLE'S CHAMBER ELECTION RESULTS

Honecker, Stoph Reelected

LD161531 East Berlin ADN International Service in German 0904 GMT 16 Jun 86

[Text] Berlin, 16 Jun (ADN) -- The People's Chamber of the GDR met in Berlin this morning for is first (constituent) session. According to the GDR Constitution the deputies, who were given an overwhelming vote of confidence in the 8 June elections, are electing the chairman and members of the Council of State, the chairman of the Council of Ministers, and the chairman of the GDR National Defense Council. The People's Chamber also decides on the setting up and composition of its committees.

Prior to the session the parliamentary groups of the highest people's representation had already been set up and the group chairmen were elected.

On 8 June with the election of the 500 People's Chamber deputies, an impressive affirmation of the upcompromising continuation of the policy for the people's well-being, the strengthening of socialism and the safeguarding of peace, as adopted by the 11th SED Congress and contained in the election appeal of the National Council of The National Front, was shown. This binding commitment characterized the atmosphere of the session, which was also attended by the 203 replacement candidates of the People's Chamber.

Heads of diplomatic missions accredited to the GDR are following as guests today's proceedings with great interest.

Numerous GDR and foreign journalits of news agencies, newspapers, radio and television stations are covering this important event in the social life of the GDR.

Deputy Wilhelmine Schirmer-Proescher, as the oldest member of the highest people's representation, headed the constituent session until the election of the new presidium, according to the standing orders of the People's Chamber. In her address at the opening of the first session of the ninth legislative period of the GDR's highest people's representation she pointed out that the Republic's election commission, commensurate with the regulations of the election law, had established the final election results and the validity of the election to the People's Chamber on 8 June 1986, against which no objections had been raised.

Wilhelmine Schirmer-Proescher submitted for the election of the People's Chamber Presidium the joint proposal of the SED Central Committee, the Central Democratic bloc of the parties and mass organizations as well as all groups of the People's Chamber. The deputies gave to this proposal their unanimous assent. Deputy Horst Sindermann, member of the SED Central Committee Politburo, was again proposed as the president of the People's Chamber, and Gerald Goetting, chairman of the CDU, was again proposed as the deputy president.

Horst Sindermann, Gerald Goetting and the other members of the Presidium were unanimously elected in one ballot. The president by seniority congratulated Horst Sindermann cordially on this great proof of confidence shown to him again with the election as president. Under his proven leadership the People's Chamber will continue its work as successfully as in the two previous legislative periods. She declared the People's Chamber constituted and gave the chair to Horst Sindermann.

Horst Sindermann, on behalf of all the members of the Presidium, expressed thanks for the confidence shown. He said: "In the previous legislative period decisive laws for the further shaping of the advanced socialist society in the GDR were adopted. In this, the ninth legislative period, the deputies of the highest people's representation, will again be guided by the principles of one working corporate body by preparing the bills jointly with all citizens, organizing their enforcement and safeguarding the control of the enforcement.

Horse Sindermann continued: "The deputies of the People's Chamber, Comrade Honecker said at the second session of the Central Committee, are offering a good guarantee for the continuation of our successful policy and the daily guarantee of the political and social rights of our people. Let us adhere to this,"

Prior to dealing with today's agenda Horst Sindermann said that the deputies of the parties and mass organizations represented in the People's Chamber had formed 10 groups. In accordance with Paragraph 43 Section 1 of the standing orders of the People's Chamber.

The deputies then passed today's agenda proposed by Horst Sindermann on behalf of the People's Chamber Presidium, the first item of which was the election and swearing-in of the chairman, the deputy chairman, members and secretary of the GDR Council of State.

Concerning this the People's Chamber president said that the SED Central Committee and the SED group, in agreement with the Central Democratic bloc of parties and mass organizations and the other groups of the People's Chamber are submitting the joint proposal to reelect the general secretary of the SED Central Committee, Deputy Erich Honecker, as chairman of the GDR Council of State. The deputies this proposal with loud applause.

Horst Sindermann said: "The election movement for the election of the People's Chamber, the Berlin City Assembly and the bezirk assemblies has clearly proved how great is our people's confidence in the general secretary of the SED Central Committee, our Comrade Erich Honecker. During his election talks and rallies in Karl Marx Stadt, in Erfurt and Soemmerda, at Carl Zeiss Jena and with the cooperative farmers in Gierstaedt he was met with a wave of sympathy, and there was perceptible joy that he, as candidate in the election to the People's Chamber, was deliberating with the electorate."

Horst Sindermann continued: "This is characteristic of a socialist stateman who lives among the people, who knows and takes into account the wishes and concerns of his electorate. From him radiated the forward-moving spirit of the 11th SED Congress which decided on the continuation of the policy for the prosperity of our people. And in our talks with the electorate we have all felt this spirit and taken away with us the confidence in Comrade Erich Honecker.

"We know from our interparliamentary work how the willingness for businesslike dialogue for peace, as practiced by Comrade Honecker in the previous legislative period, has earned him and thus our state respect. In international politics Comrade Honecker announced that peace is mankind's greatest possesion, and he thus expressed the sentiments of the whole country.

His communist relationship with the Soviet Union and his sincere cooperation with the socialist fraternal countries are highly respected. A statesman who, like Comrade Honecker, is guided in his work by the motto: the world conscience must determine international development, is a worthy representative of our people."

As a sign of their assent all the deputies rose during the election from their seat and broke into tumultuous applause for several minutes for the unanimously reelected chairman of the GDR Council of State.

Horst Sindermann conveyed to the chairman of the GDR Council of State the most cordial congratulations from all the deputies of the highest people's representation on his reelection. He said: "Please be assured, esteemed Comrade Honecker, that the deputies of the People's Chamber will be doing everything in their power to continue the successful policy of the SED and of our state. Based on the confidence of all citizens the people's power is consolidating and deepening in our country. All the deputies of the People's Chamber wish you, dear Comrade Chairman, creative power and many years of good health in fulfilling the tasks in party and state for the benefit of the people of the GDR."

Erich Honecker's election as chairman of the GDR Council of State was followed by his ceremonious swearing-in, for the purpose of which he was asked by the People's Chamber president to come to the speaker's desk. According to Article 68 of the GDR Constitution, the chairman of the Council of State took the following oath before the People's Chamber: "I swear to devote my efforts to the welfare of the people of the GDR, to safeguard its Constitution and laws, to fulfill my duties conscientiously and to do justice to all."

After the ceremony the president of the People's Chamber conducted Council of State Chairman Erich Honecker to his seat. Erich Mueckenberger, member of the People's Chamber Presidium, who took over the chair, read the joint proposal of the SED Central Committee -- in agreement with the central democratic block of the parties and mass organizations as well as all the groups of the People's Chamber -- on the elections, the chairman's deputies, the members and the secretary of the council of state. The highest people's representation agreed to elect en bloc the 8 deputies of the chairman, the 21 other members and the secretary. After the deputies had risen from their seats Erich Mueckenberger announced the unanimous election of the personages proposed.

The deputies to the chairman, the members and the secretary of the Council of State swore the oath demanded by Article 68 of the Constitution "I swear" and shook hands. Erich Mueckenberger announced that the swearing-in of Deputy Ilse Thiele, member of the Council of State, who because of illness was unable to attend the session, will take place separately.

Horst Sindermann, who had again taken over the chair, asked the chairman of the the Council of State to address the floor.

On the next item on the agenda -- election of the chairman of the Council of Ministers and the order to the chairman of the Council of Ministers to set up the GDR Council of Ministers -- Horst Sindermann read the following letter signed by Erich Honecker, general secretary of the SED Central Committee: "On behalf of the SED Central Committee, the SED parliamentary group in agreement with the Central Democratic bloc of the parties and mass organizations and the other groups of the People's Chamber, I propose that Deputy Willi Stoph be elected chairman of the GDR Council of Ministers."

This proposal was received with long applause. The deputies of the People's Chamber rose from their seats and unanimously elected Willi Stoph as chairman of the GDR Council of Ministers.

They affirmed their assent with loud applause. Horst Sindermann congratulated Willi Stoph on his reelection as chairman of the Council of Ministers.

Turning to Willi Stoph, he said: "Standing at the head of the government of the GDR , you bear great responsibility. We wish you further success in your work of fulfilling the resolutions of the 11th party congress for the overall strengthening of the GDR . Please accept the best wishes for your health and successful work."

The People's Chamber instructed Willi Stoph to set up the Council of Ministers and to submit to the People's Chamber the proposal for electing the members of the Council of Ministers, in accordance with Article 79 of the Constitution. The People's Chamber president announced that at the second session of the People's Chamber the chairman of the Council of Ministers will make his statement and submit to the highest people's representation commensurate with the resolution adopted, the proposals on setting up the Council of Ministers.

Concerning item three on the agenda Horst Sindermann submitted on behalf of the People's Chamber Presidium the following motion: "On the decision of the SED central Committee, the SED group, and in agreement with the Central Democratic bloc of parties and mass organizations as well as the other groups of the People's Chamber it is proposed to elect Deputy Erich Honecker as chairman of the GDR National Defense Council," The deputies rose from their seats and applauded tumultuously. The elected Erich Honecker unanimously as chairman of the GDR National Defense Council.

Horst Sindermann linked the most cordial congratulations of all the deputies to Erich Honecker's election with the words: "Nothing is more important than peace for the citizens. This peace we need in order to fulfill the exacting tasks adopted by the 11th SED Congress. Thanks to your work over the decades as chairman of the National Defense Council, you are personally helping to strengthen the defense capability of our Republic and thus to make its contribution, by the side of the Soviet Union, within the socialist community, to the preservation and safeguarding of peace. We wish you, dear Comrade Erich Honecker, success, creative power and much personal health in fulfilling the defense tasks."

Concerning the fourth and final point on the agenda the deputies, had to deal as a motion from all the groups with the resolution on the setting up and composition of the People's Chamber committees. They assented to this proposal by a show of hands. Horst Sindermann congratulated all the committee members on their election and wished them success for their work of implementing the successful policy of the state during the ninth legislative period.

Next the People's Chamber President, on behalf of the Presidium, proposed that the second session of the GDR People's Chamber be convened for Tuesday, 17th June 1986, at 1000. The deputies agreed to this and to the proposed agenda.

Outside the agenda the GDR interparliamentary group was formed and the chairman, deputy chairman and the members of the committee elected en bloc. Concerning this a joint proposal of all the groups was submitted.

In conclusion, the president emphasized that the first (constituent) session has fulfilled its tasks and declared it closed.

Honecker Expresses Thanks

[Text] Berlin, 16 Jun (ADN) -- Erich Honecker, general secretary of the SED Central Committee and chairman of the GDR Council of State, spoke at the constituent session of the People's Chamber in Berlin today. He said:

I am deeply moved and grateful for the confidence you have placed in me. Your assent to my reelection as chairman of the GDR Council of State I consider to be an honorary duty. I shall exercise this high office at all times, aware of the responsibility placed in me, the duty before our people. All my thinking and acting will also in future be devoted to the people's happiness in socialism and the preservation of peace as mankind's greatest possession.

Please permit me to take this opportunity to thank all the citizens of our country most cordially for their diligence and creative help in our common historical work of socialism on German soil. The people, with their positive attitude to life, their knowledge, and their abilities are the most treasured possession in our socialist fatherland. Together we shall be able to meet all future challenges through our work.

The general elections on 8 June this year have shown impressively how close our socialist state and the citizens are linked to one another. By assenting to the electoral appeal of the National Front and the election of their candidates, the citizens have affirmed the resolutions of the 11th SED congress which launched a new stage in further shaping an advanced socialist society in the GDR. Our path to 1990, and even to the year 2000, has been clearly marked. Thus we realize the SED program as a social strategy of steady progress, national prosperity, equal education opportunities for all, social justice, and full democracy of the people.

Anyone who wants to experience what a free people on free soil are capable of can see for himself in our GDR. In fraternal alliance with the Soviet Union, in the community of socialist countries, we implement on the dividing line between the two world systems the magnificent ideas of Marx, Engels, and Lenin.

Resurrected from the ruins of World War II and facing the future, we have, led by a strong united workers party and despite all imperialist disruptive action, built up in the shape of the GDR a powerful workers and peasants state in the center of Europe. Its innate stability and dynamism serve peace.

Our policy of dialogue with all the forces of commonsense and realism is also committed to the bold, realistic program of the Soviet Union for creating a world without nuclear weapons, a reduction of conventional weapons from the Atlantic to the Urals, and the resolutions adopted concerning this by the states of the Warsaw Pact in Budapest. The more inflamed the international situation, the more level-headedness is needed. To relax the international situation, to lastingly secure peace on earth and in space remains the highest principle of our state policy. The attitude which can be met with everywhere in our country "My place of work is my battlefield for peace" shows how much we agree in this with the will of the people.

Today, the unity of economic and social policy has become the main battlefield for millions of workers. Year in and year out it is confirmed here that dynamic economic progress entails at the same time social progress. And this we intend to continue. With our economic strategy we are well armed to meet future tasks.

We are linking increasingly effectively the advantages of socialism with the achievements of the scientific-technological revolution. More and more the capability of our stable national economy is being determined by mastering key technologies.

This corresponds to the requirements of the GDR and its foreign policy which is aimed at dialogue and cooperation. We are for the cooperation of all states and peoples according to the principles of the UN Charter in whose work we are participating actively and on an equal footing..

Together we have achieved much. However, looking at the size of the achievements it becomes all the more clear what remains to be done. Our attitude remains to make our achievements the starting point for still higher objectives in our development. This is only natural, for our society, which has set the well-being of everyone as its target. Thus I shall continue to feel committed to the weal and woe of all the citizens of the GDR, irrespective of ideology and religion.

Our path in the years ahead will certainly not be easy. Imperialist circles, to whom the attractiveness of the GDR is a thorn in the flesh, are not going to be sparing with disruptive actions. However, and I am saying this with full conviction, this will not prevent us from implementing the resolutions of the 11th SED Congress.

Our life and our future link us to our fatherland, the socialist GDR. Its strengthening and its defense are a matter of honor and commitment for us.

Just like you, esteemed deputies, I shall work wholeheartedly to consolidate and increase the trust of the citizens in the policy of our state and in us as the elected representatives of the people. We all know what this task demands. However, we also know the happy feeling of being useful to other people. In the certainty of having adopted the right course with our policy and of acting side by side with reliable allies we shall solve the future tasks.

Let us tackle the work together. It serves the greatest cause in the world, socialism and peace.

STOPH SPEAKS AT PEOPLE'S CHAMBER SESSION 17 JUN

[Text] Berlin, 17 Jun (ADN) -- The GDR People's Chamber met for its second session on Tuesday morning. In accordance with the agenda decided upon at the first (constituent) session of the highest people's representation, Willi Stoph took the floor at the start for the statement by the chairman of the GDR Council of Ministers. He presented the main points of emphasis for the continuation of the proven course of the Main Task in its unity of economic and social policy.

Further in the session, spokesman of all 10 parliamentary groups will present views on the government statement on their behalf. Also on the agenda is the election of members of the Council of Ministers. The deputies will also decide on the composition of the Supreme Court and elect the general Prosecuting Attorney.

The People's Chamber deputies received the statement by the chairman of the Council of Ministers with vigorous applause. Horst Sindermann thanked Willi Stoph for his speech.

After this the discussion on the statement began. Requests to speak from all 10 parliamentary groups have been made on this point on the agenda, the People's Chamber President stated. He gave the floor to Horst Dohlus, member of the Politburo and secretary of the SED Central Committee, as the first speaker.

The members of the Democratic Peasants Party [DBD] will collaborate with optimism, energy and creativity in the implementation of the tasks marked out in the government statement, Deputy Ernst Mecklenburg stressed on behalf of the DBD group. The farmers know that bread can flourish only in peace, he said. They want to sow and reap in peace.

For the CDU, its chairman, Deputy Gerald Goetting, approved the government statement. The safeguarding of peace and the promotion of the wellbeing of man are matters of concern on which Christians and non-Christians in the GDR agree fully, he said.

The government statement met with the unqualified approval of the Liberal Democratic Party group, stated Deputy Prof Dr Manfred Gerlach.

The experience that socialism is there for all, and needs the deeds of all, is millionfold, Deputy Prof Dr Heinrich Homann, chairman of the National Democratic Party [NDP], emphasized. The aim and content of the work of the NDPD members for the whole legislative period are determined by the principles formulated in the election appeal.

The foreign and domestic policy course presented in the government statement corresponds to the interests of the over 9,000,000 trade union members, the deputy, Prof Dr. Johanna Toepfer (FDGB) noted.

Deputy Eva Rohmann, speaking on behalf of the Democratic Womens League group, said that women feel most deeply allied to the good policy of the party and state leadership and show it their fullest trust.

On behalf of the FDJ, 18-year-old Deputy Jana Griessbach said that she regarded the appeal of the 11th SED Congress to the young people to prepare to carry the banner of the achievements of socialism over the threshold of the new millennium as a great personal chance.

Deputy Gottfried Drechsel reported on the political activity of the 7,773 local organization Peasants Mutual Aid Association on behalf of his group. He referred to the necessity of using the 274 peasants' trading cooperatives even more efficiently in order to increase production and to improve working and living conditions in the countryside.

After these speeches, Horst Sindermann called out Point 3 on the agenda: "Vote of confidence by the People's Chamber of the CDR in the statement by the chairman of the Council of Ministers and election of the members of the Council of Ministers of the GDR." It was passed unanimously. In accordance with Article 50 of the Constitution of the GDR, the members of the Council of Ministers, who had been proposed by Willi Stoph at the beginning of his statement, were elected.

Then, also unanimously, the deputies elected the president, the vice presidents and justices of the Supreme Court and the lay assessors of the Senate for Labor Law of the Supreme Court of the GDR. The pledge of trust of the deputies was received by Dr Guenter Sarge as president of the Supreme Court, Dr Werner Strasberg as first vice president, and Dr Gerhard Koerner and Major General Lothar Penndorf as vice presidents. Within this, the amount allocated for central -- and mainly large-scale -- investments decreased considerably and the council and enterprise investments increased.

FOREIGN RELATIONS COMMITTEE SESSION DETAILED

[Text] The Foreign Affairs Committee of the National Assembly is meeting in session in preparation for the summer session of parliament. Our correspondent, Gyorgy Bernath, reports.

According to the general evaluation, the proposals put forward by the Warsaw Pact could open up a new stage of detente and of the history of security and cooperation. The fact that the West has not rejected the proposals put forward in the Budapest appeal of the Political Consultative Committee of the Warsaw Pact can in itself be interpreted as an optimistic sign. This is just one statement that was voiced at the session of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the National Assembly this morning. Let us, however, outline the events as they happened. The session of the Foreign Affairs Committee was opened by Matyas Szuros, secretary of the MSZMP Central Committee and chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee. So far two topics have been discussed: First, the report on the budget of the Foreign Ministry in 1985 was debated. This report revealed, among other things, that last year the Hungarian People's Republic was perhaps more active than ever in its history.

This activity perhaps exceeded the actual political, economic and military weight of our country, but has made a very useful contribution to the development of international politics and the preservation of dialogue.

Peter Kovari, deputy minister of foreign affairs, told the Foreign Affairs Committee in his oral supplementary that the ministry had not only received but contributed as well: It had covered half its expenditures from its own revenue, primarily accumulated from consular work and the issuing of visas.

One of the new members of the Foreign Affairs Committee, Ivan Boldizsar, asked the deputy minister about the information service provided by the ministry. Peter Kovari mentioned in connection with the work last year that all our embassies had been provided with video recorders and they were used to show Hungarian films to those interested.

Professor Szentagothai reported on the basis of his travels abroad that though the financial conditions of the work in the sphere of foreign affairs had not improved, the work of the embassies had improved; nonetheless, even more money should be provided to ensure that our specialists were present at important locations, which provided a hope for economic profits as well. Not only Paris was worth a mass [Henry of Navarae], said the professor, who went on to mention China as somewhere where specialists from most of the world were already present.

The Foreign Affairs Committee of the National Assembly unanimously approved the report by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Thereafter Miklos Barity, deputy minister of foreign affairs and the former secretary general of the Warsaw Pact provided a briefing on the session of the Political Consultative Committee of the Warsaw Pact. He stressed that the 2-day session was characterized by hard work and not protocol. The Budapest session had international significance, and this was the evaluation was held everywhere in the world. The political communique briefly expounded the position of the Warsaw Pact regarding world politics, where a radical, favorable change had still not come about. Nonetheless, at the session of the Political Consultative Committee the emphasis was on the forward looking elements, first and foremost on curbing the arms race. The session dealt in detail with European issues, and reached the conclusion that the process which had begun in Helsinki should continue. This, however, necessitated the preservation of the international dialogue. We were preparing in this spirit for the Vienna conference, which will be held this autumn. International interest in this conference, which is a part of the Helsinki process, is very great. The fact that the West had not rejected the proposals contained in the appeal could be interpreted as an optimistic sign, said Miklos Barity. Matyas Szuros. secretary of the Central Committe and chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the National Assembly, added that if NATO were to give a favorable reply to the Budapest appeal of the Political Consultative Committee of the Warsaw Pact, its effect could reach the territory of Hungary in the not too distant future in the form of the reduction of traditional armaments and armed forces. The session of the Foreign Affairs Committee is currently discussing the report on the relations between Hungary and West Germany.

URBAN HOLDS WEEKLY PRESS CONFERENCE 17 JUNE

[By Waldemar Janiec and Miroslaw Luniewski]

[Text] More echoes of the Kuklinski case, activity of the underground structures in Poland, Polish debt, and aftereffects of the breakdown in the Chernobyl nuclear power plant made chief topics raised at today's conference held by government press spokesman Minister Jerzy Urban.

Kuklinski Case

At the start of his conference Urban addressed himself to reports disseminated by Western mass media regarding the so-called Kuklinski case, an American agent who in November 1981 revealed to the American authorities the plans of preparations for the introduction of martial law in Poland.

Commenting on various sensational reports on the subject, Urban described them as absolute inventions and trumped-up misinformation. This is how he also termed the news about the Polish side being allegedly informed by the Soviet side of Kuklinski's activities. "I can confirm once again that just after Kuklinski and his family's departure, Warsaw realized he had been a spy and that he had passed information he possessed by virtue of his post on the General Staff," Urban said.

Urban also described as untrue the presumptions of Western mass media which accused the Polish authorities of pursing a double-faced game before December 1981. "Preparations for a possible introduction of martial law and the decision to do so are two different things," he said.

He also stressed that the reasons prompting the declaration of martial law in Poland had gathered momentum in November 1981 when the Solidarnosc leadership categorically disavowed Walesa's participation in the so-called meeting of the three (Jaruzelski, Glemp, Walesa), meant to calm down the situation in Poland. "The government used to warn on many occasions at the time that it was ready to take ultimate measures. It is a pity that the Solidarnosc leadership ignored those warnings. It is a pity, too, that it got no confirmation from such sources which it considered more credible than us, from Western sources, that is," Urban said.

Referring to Western claims about a peaceful character of manifestations announced by the Solidarnosc leadership for December 17, 1981, Urban pointed to the analogies between that situation and the one in Hungary in 1956, when dramatic developments had been triggered off by manifestations also declared to be peaceful.

In the context of the Kuklinski case Urban pointed to broadcasts by the radio station "Voice of America" which described the fact of the Polish side revealing Kuklinski's activities as a propaganda campaign against the U.S., and stressed outrightly that the fact might affect Poland's cooperation with the IMF and the World Bank.

Underground Activities in Poland

Replying to numerous questions about the recent detention of the illegal underground leader Zbigniew Bujak, Urban said that the detention of the chairman of the so-called provisional coordinating commission was followed by others, aimed above all against the Warsaw structures of illegal organizations.

Urban also said that Zbigniew Wroniak, an official of one of central ministries, also detained in connection with the case in question, had been put under temporary arrest on charges of obstructing penal proceeding against Zbigniew Bujak. The case is now being investigated, he stressed.

Urban also said that Tadeusz Mazowiecki and Bronislaw Geremek were being questioned in connection with the case of Bujak and the other detentions of opposition activists.

The government spokesman next presented details of the detention of another opposition activist Anna Walentynowicz, stressing that she was released after being questioned by the militia. The assembly she had been taking part in aimed to provoke public unrest.

Asked about dates of the trials against Czeslaw Bielecki and Tadeusz Jedynak, Urban said that the date of the trial against the former was unknown.

Asked, in the context of the Bujak case, about a possible political amnesty in Poland, Urban said such a decision could not be ruled out in the future, and that it must be enhanced by internal reasons. "As for the date, I have nothing to say at present", he said.

Polish Debt

Asked about the outcome of the talks of the Polish delegation with representatives of the working group of Western commercial banks (Vienna, June 10-11) on re-scheduling payments falling due in the years 1986-1987 under the 1981 and 1982 re-scheduling agreements and under the agreement on the 1983 short-term revolving credit, Urban presented the conditions of the accord accomplished during the talks:

1. Repayment of 95 percent of principal installments falling due in 1986 under the 1981 and 1982 re-scheduling agreements has been re-scheduled for four years.

2. Repayment of 95 percent of principal installments falling due in 1987 under the 1981 and 1982 re-scheduling agreements has been re-scheduled in the following way:

-- 80 percent will be re-scheduled for two years

-- 15 percent will be put at the disposal of the Polish side under the agreement on the 1983 short-term revolving credit.

3. The deadline for the repayment of the 1983 revolving credit has been re-scheduled for two years.

4. The margin of profit under the 1981 and 1982 re-scheduling agreements for sums covered by current re-scheduling has been lowered from 1.75 percent to 1 3/8 percent per annum starting with the re-scheduling date March 20, 1987.

5. The margin of profit of the 1983 revolving credit has been lowered from 1.75 percent to 1.5 percent per annum starting .

I wish to point to the great flexibility and cooperativeness by Western banks, much greater than displayed by the governments which guaranteed those debts, Urban added.

The good cooperation with the Western banks results from the fact that in no time did they break the talks with the Polish side, as well as from the fact that the Polish side went on paying on time the interests due to the western banks.

Aftereffects of the Chernobyl Breakdown

Asked next to size up the losses in Polish tourism ensuing from the Chernobyl breakdown, Min. Urban stated that such an appraisal was impossible at the moment.

However, he stressed that some cutdowns in the number of Western tourists coming to Poland had been recorded, the greatest frignt being manifested by extra-European tourists, for instance from the United States.

Replying next to a question concerning the latest decision by the Polish authorities to pull powdered milk produced in May from the retail network in Poland, Urban said that the decision was motivated not by the level of radioactive contamination, which did not go above the safety norm. It was the intention of th Polish authorities to see children drink milk which was entirely contamination free, even it the contamination level was admissible.

Min. Urban aslo said that the government commission led by Z. Szalajda took a decision, for the second time, to additionally import powdered milk to a tune of 2 million kgs.

Answering questions concerning the Chernobyl breakdown, Urban announced that a detailed report on the actions taken by the government commission would be published after it had been approved by the government, which, he said, might take place yet this week. Min. Urban also said that a meeting, initially planned for May in Berlin, of the representatives of the CMEA countries which are on the Inter-Governmental Commission for the Construction of Nuclear Power Plans in the CMEA, will be held still this month. That will be one of the regular working meetings held biannually.. I think, said Urban, that that meeting will review the conclusions arising from the Chernobyl breakdown.

Polish Sleeping Bags for Homeless in the U.S.

Referring to the Polish relief action for the homeless in the United States, Urban said that the Polish Social Relief committee was clearing various formalities with the American organization receiving the Polish gifts. In case these formalities are cleared up, the sleeping bags and blankets will be shipped to the new York-based organization June 19. Urban also said he had received a letter from another charity organization in Los Angeles which declared its readiness to take Polish gifts in case the New York organization gave the Polish aid up. This aid, it was stressed in the letter, is indispensable for the numerous homeless in California.

LCY CENTRAL COMMITTEE PRESIDIUM HOLDS SESSION

[Text] Belgrade, 17 Jun (TANJUG) -- At its session chaired by Vidoje Zarkovic, the LCY Central Committee Presidium Presidium concerning the current economic trends and the measures to implement the objectives and tasks of our development and economic policy in 1986. The introductory report was read by Branko Mukulic, president of the Federal Executive Council.

The Presidium is reported to have noted that the tendencies implicit in the current economic developments are not in keeping with the agreed economic stabilization policy and with our development and economic policy for this year. Also, the tendencies are such that they could lead to an even deeper economic crisis. The Presidium endorsed the assessments by the Federal Executive Council that unfavorable economic trends must be arrested and that a more successful implementation of economic stabilization and economic policy tasks for this year must be ensured as soon as possible with economic policy measures and with the solutions inherent in our economic system along the line of the implementation of our stabilization program. To achieve this, a comprehensive plan of measures must be worked out and implemented as soon as possible, both at the federal level, as well as in the republics, provinces, municipalities, and organizations of associated labor. The plan should be along the line of consistent implementation of the Long-Term Program of Economic Stabilization and of the policy of the League of Communist as a whole.

At the session it was assessed that the main course of the measures of the economic and development policy and the economic system, which are being prepared by the Federal Executive Council, in its ideo-political essence was directed towards the demands of the long-term program of economic stabilization and the conclusions and stands of the LCY Central Committee. The Presidium believes that it is necessary as soon as possible to start adopting and implementing in practice measures and activities that stimulate an increase in production and exports, that realize the financial consolidation of the economy, that ensure the halting and lowering of the inflation rate, that bring all aspects of expenditure into realistic frameworks, that ensure more harmonious relations in the market and the protection of the working people's living standard, and other tasks of economic stabilization.

Stress was laid on the need for the presidiums of the central and provincial committees of the League of Communists to undertake political measures and actions for creating a favorable political climate in which positions on proposed measures would be harmonized more quickly. With this aim in view it is necessary to organize activity on preparing and adopting concrete measures in the republics and provinces, as well as in municipalities and basic organizations of associated labor, and to realize the full mobilization of all social factors, on the line of a complete change in economic trends and a consistent implementation of the policy of economic stabilization.

The Presidium also discussed a report on financing the activity of the LCY in 1985 and assessed that the financial and material management of the committees of the League of Communists and their work communities was being conducted in accordance with legal regulations and the decisions of the organs of the League of Communists. The basic principle of the policy of self-financing the LCY was successfully realized in 1985.

The Presidium energetically condemned a new wave of terror by the Republic of South Africa regime against the black majority that is deprived of its rights, as well as the attempt to create an excuse for new bloodshed through imposing the state of emergency, not even shrinking from armed aggression on neighboring African countries.

Expressing full solidarity with the struggle of the people of South Africa for freedom and life worthy of a human being, the LCY Central Committee Presidium stresses that such a policy of the South African racists and colonialists is met with the most severe condemnation of the Yugoslav public and progressive and peace-loving forces and peoples all over the world.

The LCY Central Committee Presidium supports the widest international sanctions and other measures of the international community to avoid new sufferings of the black majority and to at last put an end to the racist and colonial policy in this part of the world.

The Presidium also discussed some questions of organizational preparations for the 13th LCY Congress.

STATISTICAL ANALYSIS OF LCY LEADERSHIP

[Summary] Belgrade, 18 Jun (TANJUG) -- One of the results of the recent party congresses is that the age of the party leaderships n the republics and provinces has been reduced considerably and that the top leaders were all born between 1932 and 1948, with the single exception of a president who is 58 years old. In addition, the candidates for the future LCY Central Committee Presidium, nominated by the republics and provinces, are much younger than the present members. Not one of them is over 60 years old, and one is only 35. It will be recalled that the present members of the Presidium of the LCY committee are either members of the prewar underground party membership vintage or had fought in the armed revolution. A mere glance at the list of candidates for the membership of the new Central Committee reveals that the same cadre line is followed here too. The average age of the members of the present Central Committee is 52.2 years, and if the proposed candidates are elected the average age of the new Central Committee will be 46.3 years. The present Central Committee is dominated by the age group over 56 -- there are 96 such members in the present 165-member Central Committee but in the new Central Committee there will be only 50 such people.

A significant but as yet inadequate step has also been taken in improving the social and class structure of the Central Committee. There are only 11 workers in it now, but there will be 27 workers in the new Central Committee. True, this is not in keeping with the share of the workers in the structure of the LCY (33 percent), but it does represent some progress. There will be few farmers in the future Central Committee -- only three -- but there is only one now. Another shortcoming in the LCY leadership is the paucity of women: only 19 women have been nominated for the 165-man Central Committee, but then the present Central Committee only has 9 woman members. The lack of proposed workers, farmers and women is compensated by a surfeit of managers and executives -- 86. However, when making comparisons it should be said that there are even more of them in the present Central Committee -- 105.

By and large there are hardly any differences in the national structure of the present and future Central Committee.

There are 18 Montenegrins now (17 have been proposed), Croats 21 (26 have been proposed), Macedonians 18 (16), Muslims 6 (10), Slovenes 22 (21), Serbs 53 (54), Albanians 13 (13), Hungarians 3 (4), Turks 1 (1), and Yugoslavs 3 (and again 3 have been proposed).

MIKULIC, OTHERS ATTEND ASSEMBLY OFFICIALS MEETING

[Excerpts] Belgrade, 16 Jun -- The fact that most of the tasks set out in this year's resolution have not been implemented and also the need to take urgent measures to halt the unfavorable economic developments have placed serious tasks before the SFRY Assembly and the republican and provincial assemblies. Since the Federal Executive Council is already preparing a package of fresh measures it is essential that they be discussed and approved as soon as possible because truly there is no time for delay.

This was stressed at the meeting today between the president of the SFRY assembly, Ivo Vrandecic, and presidents of republican and provincial assemblies. The meeting was also attended by Branko Mikulic, president of the Federal Executive Council; Nedjo Borkovic, the assembly vice-President; and Milka Crigorijevic-Takeva and Milenko Bojanic, presidents of the Federal Chamber and of the Chamber of the Republics and Provinces, respectively. A joint session of the Federal Chamber and of the Chamber of the Republics and Provinces is planned for 24 June during which a report is expected to be delivered on the measures which the Federal Executive Council is preparing. During the separate sessions of the two assembly chambers the delegates should (express their views) on some of the regulations which will be placed on the agenda as urgent.

DIZDARVIC DELIVERS REPORT ON NONALIGNED AIMS

[Text] Belgrade, 16 Jun (TANJUG) -- At its session today the Council of the Federation discussed the course of preparations for the eighth Nonaligned Conference, some issues relating to the Yugoslav delegation's activity at the gathering, as well as the international situation in which the conference is to take place. The Council of the Federation also considered Yugoslavia's activity on the international arena.

The introductory report at the session, which was presided over by President of the SFRY Presidency Sinan Hasani, was presented by Raif Dizdarevic, federal secretary for foriegn affairs.

The federal secretary stated that the international situation has recently deteriorated again. It is presently characterized by unfavorable developments in relations between the USSR and the United States and by the further exacerbation of the problems of North-South relations. The arms race as well as other forms of confrontation continue which implies that relations between the two superpowers are not developing in accordance with the expectations raised by the Gorbachev-Reagan meeting in Geneva. This situation, in Dizdarevic's view, is affecting the general international trend. Not a single troublespot has been resolved while some of the international crisis situations are becoming worse. The abandonment of the existing agreements threatens to take the arms race to a new stage where it will develop into qualitatively and quantitively new forms of confrontation. However, Raif Dizdarevic went on to stress that neither the United States nor the USSR seem to have given up the propensity to negotiate and that new proposals for negotiations and disarmament are being put forward.

For this reason, according to Dizdarevic, the issues of peace and security, the relaxation of tension and resumption of detente, difficult economic problems in the world and the troublespots will be at the center of the debate at the Harare conference. A very important task facing the Nonaligned Movement is to ensure that the meeting contributes to strengthening peace and to the efforts to end unfavorable trends in the development of international relations.

Raif Dizdarevic devoted particular attention to the difficult international economic situation. In his view, economic problems are not threatening the economic development of individual countries alone but are also jeopardizing political relations and peace and progress in the world in general.

In recent years we have witnessed a large-scale drain of resources from the developing to the developed countries. In the 1981-86 period the developing countries repaid $600 billion debt to the developed countries. Out of this amount $338 billion was paid to cover the interest. Last year alone the developing countries lost $60 billion as a result of the fall in the price of raw materials -- primarily that of oil.

Raif Dizdarevic said that this is behind the active involvement by Yugoslavia and other developing countries in their efforts to find more radical solutions to the world's economic problems. The federal secretary for foreign affairs continued his report by making reference to the importance of nonaligned policy in the modern world, to the efforts to consolidate the unity of the Nonaligned Movement on the basis of its original principles, and to the priority issues facing the conference in Harare.

In the period since the Belgrade conference, Dizdarevic said, all the aspects, basic ideas, and substance of nonaligned policy have been reasserted. This policy with its principles and goals is not only an authentic view of the world but has become a comprehensive doctrine in international relations which can provide answers to some of the fundamental issues of the international community's present and future development.

Raif Dizdarevic referred to the view that by the departure from the political scence of the movement's stalwarts -- Tito, Nehru, Nasir, Indira Gandhi, and others -- who, by their personal reputation and authority, exerted a strong influence on international events, the movement's values and scope for activitiy have been considerably reduced. It is obvious that such views disregard some of the crucial factors that indicate that nonalignment has become a lasting landmark and necessity in the modern world, Dizdarevic said. The departure from the political arena of the founders of the nonaligned Movement and policy whose personal judgments and views were widely respected even by the leaders of the world powers, is a loss which calls for certain adjustments in the way the movement operates. It could be argued, at the same time, that the nonaligned policy's, enormous value lies in the fact that after the departure of its founders it has remained and continues to be reasserted as an essential factor in international relations.

The Harare summit, Dizdarevic continues, is exceptionally important. It is expected to ensure continuity in the activity of the movement as a global, independent, and non-bloc factor and to provide a new powerful stimulus for the movement's even more active role in the efforts to resolve key international problems and in the process of changes in the existing political and economic relations in the world. Developments in southern Africa will occupy the most prominent position at the conference not only bec ause the conference will be taking place in the region but primarily because of the fact that the increasingly worsening situation in the region and the fact that the problems of decolonization and racism, which have always been a priority preoccupation of the movement of nonaligned countries, require this kind of approach.

In the course of the discussion on this issue the Council of the Federation expressed its solidarity with the struggle of the people in southern Africa for liberation and against apartheid.

Raif Dizdarevic spoke extensively on yugoslavia's activity on the international arena. He said that Yugoslavia occupies an important place in the international community and that what it has to say is listened to and respected. Dizdarevic noted that last year our country had 113 top level and other bilateral meetings which points to other countries' interest in cooperation with Yugoslavia. Dizdarevic emphasized the importance of overcoming internal difficulties for Yugoslavia's international status. The members of the Council of the Federation endorsed the main orientations concerning Yugoslavia's platform for the Harare summit and its activity on the international scene. In the course of the discussion stress was placed on the great importance of Yugoslavia's united international policy.

The views and proposals voiced at today's session will be submitted to the appropriate organs.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON WRITERS FEDERATION MEETING

No President Elected

AU121247 Belgrade POLITIKA in Serbo-Croatian 5 Jun 86 p 15

[Rada Saratlic and Slobodan Zikic Report]

[Excerpts] Maribor, 4 June -- The second day of the meeting of the Yugoslav Writers Federation in maribor started exactly as planned, at 0930 hours, initially following the planned agenda.

The dominant theme of the Writers Federation's third plenary session was the election of the new Yugoslav Writers Federation president. Prior to the election of the new president, Ciril Zlobec was supposed to have been relieved of the new president, Ciril Zlobec was supposed to have been relieved of his duties. The Serbian delegation called for consultations to be held during a short break, so that a decision could be reached as to whether Zlobec should be releived of his duties, to find out whether there were any objections to his work, or whether were any other proposals. The Serbian delegation was satisfied with Zlobec's work. The floor was then taken by Miodrag Bulatovic, president of the Serbian Writers Association and, because it is Serbia's turn next, the candidate for the new president of the federation. He said, among other things, that he was very unhappy but that he had to say some things which he would not say in other circumstances, because his writer's consciousness and holding the post of president of the writers' association would not permit him.

When the Slovene Writer Association became the first association in the country to oppose Miodrag Bulatovic's candidature proposed by the Serbian Association, and immediately sent a letter to all republican and provincial associations about its stance (the Serbian association was the last to receive it) -- suggesting, Bulatovic claimed, that all other members join the Slovene opposition to this - as an official of the federal organization Ciril Zlobec, as Miodrag Bulatovic categorically states, should have distanced himself and disassociated himself from this act. According to Bulatovic, Zlobec should have been outside and above "such a wrong letter that was sent throughout the whole of Yugoslavia," and he should have said what the respectable Slovene writer Dmitrij Rupel said, namely, that no one has the right to interfere with decisions made by a republican association and with its sovereign proposal of a democratically elected candidate.

"I fully blame its president Zlobec for this small stumble by the Writers Federation, because he has failed to lead us into this meeting in a reconciled way and in a good manner. I must therefore express my personal mistrust in him," Bulatovic said.

Having said that Miodrag Bulatovic's thinking was beyond him and that nothing Bulatovic had said was incriminating for him, Ciril Zlobec, speaking immediately after Bulatovic, said that he was thus invited to reply, mentioning that this time he would not speak in his native language but in Yugoslav Esperanto, in Serbo-Croatian. He said among other things:

"At the regular session of the federation's Presidium which was held on 25 April in Belgrade, I submitted my resignation from the post of president of the Writers Federation simply because my term office had expired. Then, following the suggestions of Miodrag Bulatovic, Aleksandar Petrov, and the Serbian Association in general that I must carry on as president until this meeting, I remained as president. But I do not consider myself president."

The Zlobec asked all republican and provincial delegations to say whether he had their support or not and whether they would grant him the normal relief, "although that would be retrospective since he had already resigned" (applause again). Then, on behalf of the Serbian delegation, Aleksandar Petrov said that the Serbian Writers Association is not seeking Zlobec's resignation but that at the same time it approves of all of Miodrag Bulatovic's objections.

Banjai called for a vote. All republican and provincial writers' associations unanimously voted for Ciril Zlobec's normal release from duty while Tone Partljic, on behalf of the Slovene delegation, also paid tribute to Zlobec. Zlobec expressed thanks for this trust.

Vojvodina's Proposal Accepted

After the unanimous adoption of the proposal for changes in the Statute, Ivan Ivanji, secretary of the Yugoslav Writers Federation, explained the situation about the election of the President up to that time, saying that four associations were for and four against the Serbian Writers Association's candidate Miodrag Bulatovic, and that the statute did not cater for a situation like this.

Ciril Zlobec took the floor again and explained that during the previous night, the Presidium with seven votes for and one against (Croatia), had accepted the proposal put forward by the Vojvodina Writers Association which could preserve the federation's self-respect and which would be still based on the rules of the statute. This proposal states that the Presidium of the Yugoslav Writers Federation at its session on 3 June this year acknowledged the fact that the Serbian Writers Association nominated Miodrag Bulatovic had not received the necessary majority of votes. The Presidium therefore proposes that the procedure be repeated and completed by the end September this year.

On behalf of the Slovene delegation, Tone Partljic suggested an amendment to this text which, apart from stating that Miodrag Bulatovic did not receive the necessary majority, would declare that because of all this he cannot again be the candidate for the Yugoslav Writers Federation.

On behalf of the Serbian Writers Association, Aleksandar Petrov reacted sharply saying that the Slovene association again wants to select its candidate from Serbia and that the Serbian Writers Association will not accept this.

Since the Presidium proposal had priority, the delegations first voted on this proposal, and it was decided by 6 votes to 2 (the delegations of Croatia and Slovenia voting against) that the procedure be repeated and that it should be completed by September this year.

The official, or rather, the working part of the annual meeting of the Yugoslav Writers Federation, was thus concluded, but the session continued because Miodrag Bulatovic was given an opportunity to say what he thinks about everything that happened at the meeting and earlier.

Bulatovic spoke for a long time, presenting a detailed picture of the events, stressing that they unnecessarily received unprecedented publicity in the foreign press. He also said that he would not have accepted the nomination had he had any inkling of what was going to happen; he stressed that he will demand arguments and proof for every word in the letter by the Slovene Writers Association, and if there is no proof he will consider every word to be a libel. Vesna Parun then expressed her disagreement with the position of her delegation -- of the Croatian Writers Association -- and renounced her status as a delegate.

This means that all the things that the Yugoslav Writers Federation has been parading in the public for about 13 months will be replayed this fall.

RETAIL MALPRACTICES, 'PRIVILIGED CUSTOMERS' VIEWED

AU181352 Tirana ZERI I POPULLIT in Albanian 11 Jun 86 p 3

[Demir Gjergji article, abridged from ADRIATIU, organ of the Durres District AWP Committee: "From the Pages of the Local Press --'Minor' But Damaging Incidents"]

[Text] Twelve noon. Customers wait outside the Restaurant Durres while the staff set the tables. Ten past twelve. The doors open. The customers sit down and wait. The waiters continue their "preparations." One of them comes up to a table with a laden tray. The customers are still waiting, while those at the table being served tuck in without the slightest scuple. One customer stands up and demands an explanation.

"We've been waiting half an hour! What's going on?"

"What business is it of yours? Do you know who these people are?"

"Who?" the customer open his eyes wide.

"They're the managers! Now do you see?"

On the bus routes from Durres to Shkozet, Plepe, and Shijak, not to mention some others, the door to the driver's compartment is also the entrance for some "privileged people." One, two, three four. There is one of these people at every stop. This separate compartment of the bus, which belongs to the driver alone, becomes a "cosy corner" of friends and acquaintances. But who are these friends who are invited, or rather allowed, to sit on the gear box, or lean over the driver's shoulder with their back to the sign saying "do not talk to the driver"? They are traffic inspectors, paid or voluntary, and drivers from other shifts. They swagger about competely unconcerned at breaking the rules.

Let us mention some other examples. At the greengrocer's opposite the men's tailer's -- and not only here -- the shop assistant sees nothing wrong in ignoring customers waiting in line, and fills the shopping bags of someone who enters the shop and shouts a greeting from the doorway. If you ask the assistant who he is, you will no doubt receive the reply that he is a worker at the same enterprise, while the "priviliged" customers leaves with his bag full of choice produce. Such scense occur in other shops. Some time ago, top quality wine arrived at the Durres liquor store. And who bought it? First the delivwey men bought it. And when they were well supplied, other customer were served. And in this case the assistant replied to those demanding an explanation: "they brought it here, so it belongs to them" and so, according to the assistant, they are privileged customers. It is no accident that these customers have a saying among themselves that if you don't look after No one, ;you can't look after other people. In a way "blinded" by these privileges which in no way belong to them, they take no notice of the reaction of public opinion, and when public opinion does not react strongly, find a congenial climate for "enjoying their privileges."

Traffic inspectors, whether paid or voluntary, have the duty of maintaining the regulations and punishing severely violations of them, and should be the last to break them themselves. Also those who butt in lines or are served "with proper attention" in shops and elsewhere have the duty of combatting this phenomena instead of falling victim to it.

Nothing can escape the close watch of the masses They have each of these cases of "priviledged people" firmly in their sights. This diminishes the authority and reputation of these people as cadres, managers, or guardians of the regulations and laws.

Public opinion should show itself more vigorous in such cases, and must say "stop" to everybody who breaks the rules, whoever he may be. Everyone must perform the duties entrusted to him as best they can.

CENTRAL COMMITTEE ON WARSAW PACT INITIATIVE

[Text] Sofia, June 17 (BTA) -- The Central Committee of the Bulgarian Communist Party discussed today an information on the work of the session of the Warsaw Treaty member-states' Political Consultative Committee, held in Budapest on June 10 and 11, 1986. The CC expressed full and unanimous approval for the work of the Bulgarian delegation headed by Mr. Todor Zhivkov, secretary general of the CC of the BCP and the president of the State Council.

The party's Central Committee fully supports the decisions and practical measures outlined by the Budapest session on the further strengthening of the political and defensive alliance of the fraternal socialist states to the benefit of peace and security in Europe and world-wide, for countering the plans of the imperialist forces, and U.S. imperialism in particular, who are disregarding the desire of the peoples of the world to live in a world free of weapons and wars.

The new peace initiatives of the allied socialist states are an organic component of the further development of the socialist countries' program for halting the arms race, averting the nuclear holocaust, for the establishment of a reliable system of comprehensive security, for constructive and mutually beneficial cooperation between the states.

The BCP CC reiterated the view, again expressed by the participants in the Budapest session, that only the peaceful coexistence of the countries of different social order, the complete elimination of all nuclear and conventional weapons, the prevention of the militarization of space and the establishment of true peace on earth and in space can guarantee the survival of the human civilization. The Central Committee expressed full support to the dynamic, consistent and constructive foreign policy pursued by the CPSU and the Soviet Government and its program on the complete elimination of all mass destruction weapons, to the co-ordinated policy of the Warsaw treaty member-states which is aimed at preserving peace and providing security for all peoples of the world. The Central Committee once again enhanced its view that the only way to attain these vitally important goals is to gradually and stage-by-stage reduce the level of military parity with the ultimate aim of achieving full and comprehensive disarmament under strict international surveillance.

The BCP CC assesses the ever closer interaction between the fraternal parties and states in the strengthening of the defensive military-political alliance as a guarantee for the success of the peace advance of socialism in the name of peace and the future of mankind.

The letter states that in the field of social policy the government will strive to meet the people's material, spiritual, and social needs "in accordance with their purchasing power," as well as promote "the human factor." Socialist democracy is to be encouraged, and a struggle is to be waged against "deficiencies and negative phenomena."

The letter then outlines the government's future foreign policy, aimed at averting nuclear disaster, drawing closer together with Soviet Union, further improving friendship and cooperation with the socialist countries within the framework of the Warsaw Pact and CEMA. Attention will also be paid, states the letter, to making the Balkans a zone free of nuclear and chemical weapons, as well as to encouraging abroad political dialogue and economic and cultural cooperation with the developed capitalist countries. The letter confirms the government's full support for the new Soviet disarmament proposals to NATO and the Western European countries. The letter concludes by confirming Bulgaria's continuing support of the United Nations, and voices confidence that Bulgaria will achieve further prosperity and progress under the leadership of the BCP.

The letter is received with loud applause, and commentator Boyan Bonev concludes the live relay at 1221 GMT.

FURTHER ON VISIT BY EGYPT'S 'ABD AL-MAJID

AU181439 Prague RUDE PRAVO in Czech 13 Jun 86 pp 1, 2

[CTK report: "Turning Over a New Leaf; CSSR and Egyptian Ministers of Foreign Affairs Held Talks in Prague"]

[Text] Prague (CTK) -- Accompanied by his spouse, Ahmad 'Ismat 'Abd al-Majid, deputy prime minister and minister of foreign affairs of the Arab Republic of Egypt, arrived for an official visit to Czechoslovakia on Thursday [12 June] at the invitation of Bohuslav Chnoupek, CSSR minister of foreign affairs.

The guest was welcomed at Prague Ruzyne Airport by Bohuslav Chnoupek and his wife, and by other representatives of the Federal Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Omar Gad, ambassador of the Arab Republic of Egypt to the CSSR, was also present.

Talks between Bohuslav Chnoupek and Ahmad 'Ismat 'Abd al-Majid were held at Cernin Palace the same day. On the agenda was an assessment of Czechoslovak-Egyptian relations and an exchange of views on the current international situation.

In a candid and constructive talk, the two representatives noted that of late their mutual bilateral relations are marked by a dynamic development in all spheres of common interest. Ahmad 'Ismat 'Abd al-Majid expressed in this connection the conviction that his visit to the CSSR will turn a new leaf in the two countries' mutual relations. Sharing the same opinion, the two representatives assessed political dialogue as an important instrument contributing to better mutual understanding, and said they were in favor of deepening and broadening it. They describe economic and trade relations as an exceptionally important sphere, developing on the basis of mutual benefit, arising from the long, good relations of partnership and, of late, marked by dynamic growth. They stressed that this economic cooperation is developing bilaterally, especially in areas which are important with respect to the prospects and orientation of the further development of the national economies of the CSSR and the Arab Republic of Egypt.

Bohuslav Chnoupek stressed that Czechoslovakia is prepared to expand the range of its complete investment units, machinery, and other products, and at the same time enrich its imports with interesting and nontraditional Egyptian products, including consumer goods. Ahmad 'Ismat 'Abd al-Majid spoke about his country's interest in further increasing the level of economic cooperation, including agriculture and tourism. It was noted that cultural relations, too, are developing satisfactorily, and there exist good prerequisites for their further expansion.

Bohuslav Chnoupek and Ahmad 'Ismat 'Abd al-Majid also exchanged views on the current state of the international situation. Sharing the same opinion, they noted that its complex development requires new political thinking, which takes into consideration the changed conditions due to the existence of mass destruction weapons and the fact that no one can win a nuclear war or the arms race. They declared themselves in favor of resolving the key issues of international security exclusively through political means, in line with the principle of the peaceful coexistence of states with different social systems.

Bohuslav Chnoupek informed Ahmad 'Ismat 'Abd al-Majid about the topical approaches of the CSSR's foreign policy to the solution of international problems in the spirit of the peace program of the 27th CPSU Congress, with which the 17th CPCZ Congress also fully identified itself, and which determines concrete, precisely formulated, and achievable objectives in the military, political, economic, and humanitarian spheres.

He pointed out the dangerous phenomena in the policy of the most reactionary imperialist circles, beginning with the deployment of American intermediate-range missiles and the continuing test of nuclear weapons, all the way up to the development of offensive space weapons within the framework of the star wars program.

Bohuslav Chnoupek informed Ahmad 'Ismat 'Abd al-Majid about the results of the Budapest session of the Warsaw Pact Political Consultative Committee, and stressed the exceptional significance of the session's appeal to the NATO member-states and all European countries to radically reduce all ground-forces and tactical offensive air force components of the European countries, as well as the corresponding forces of the Unied States and Canada deployed in Europe. He explained the Czechoslovak viewpoints concerning the problem of the resumption and further development of the Europe-wide process of detente, cooperation, and security in the spirit of the Final Act of the Helsinki conference.

The two representatives also exchanged views on the situation in hotbeds of tension and conflict, with particular regard to the Middle East. Ahmad 'Ismat 'Abd al-Majid explained in detail the standpoints of the Egyptian Government on this weighty problem, the fundamental cause of which continues to be the unresolved Arab-Israeli conflict, and especially its core -- the Palestinian question. The opinion was shared that the fundamental prerequisite for the peaceful and just settlement in the Middle East is the convocation of an international conference, attended by all involved parties, including the PLO, the USSR, and the United States. The necessity of ensuring the legitimate rights of the ARab people of Palestine, including the right to establish an independent state, was also stressed in harmony of opinion.

Bohuslay Chnoupek and Ahmad 'Ismat 'Abd al-Majid also exchanged views on topical issues of international terrorism. In this connection, Bohuslav Chnoupek stressed that Czechoslovakia, in a similar way to the rest of the socialist states -- as was affirmed in the communique from the Budapest session of the Warsaw Pact Political Consultative Committee -- is an opponent of any kind of terrorism, above all state terrorism, which threatens to destroy international relations, and is prepared to cooperate constructively with all states to that this dangerous phenomenon could be eliminated from the life of the world community.

In the afternoon, Ahman 'Ismat 'Abd al-Majid paid a visit to the National Memorial on Zizkov Hill in Prague. He paid respects to the memory of the Unknown Warrior and laid a wreath at his tomb.

The Egyptian guest was accompanied in the solemn act by Stanislav Svoboda, CSSR deputy minister of foreign affairs, and by other personalities.

Bohuslav Chnoupek and his wife gave a gala dinner in honor of Ahmad 'Ismat 'Abd al-Majid and his wife.

The gala dinner was attended by CSSR Deputy Premiers Svatopluk Potac and rudolf Rohlicek; chairman of the CSSR Federal Assembly's Chamber of Nations, Dalibor Hanes; CSSR Minister of General Engineering Pavol Bahyl; and other representatives of our political and public life.

Bohuslav Chnoupek and Ahmad 'Ismat 'Abd al-Majid delivered speeches in the course of the dinner.

Bohuslav Chnoupek stressed that the Czechoslovak-Egyptian talks afirmed the two countries' interest in developing mutual relations in the political, economic, and cultural spheres, and favored their intensification.

In speaking about the international situation, he pointed out the dangerous militarist course of imperialism. He condemned the phenomena of its neglobalism, as attested to by the recent U.S. aggression vis-a-vis Libya.

Together with our allies, we unflinchingly hold the standpoint that in the current complex conditions, too, one must not succumb to pessimism and leave the field to the proponents of "cold war." We are firmly convinced that it is possible to wage an intensive struggle to avert the danger of nuclear war. We want to achieve a lasting peaceful coexistence among states with different social systems, to build the foundations of a comprehensive system of international security, to develop activity aimed at scrapping all nuclear weapons, in line with the proposal voiced by CPSU Central Committee General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev on 15 January.

B. Chnoupek also stressed the significance of the Budapest session of the Warsaw Pact Political Consultative Committee. It constitutes a truly historic milestone on the road toward a radical limitation of the arms buildup, he said.

In the closing part of his speech, B. Chnoupek noted that the CSSR fully stands behind the creation of a firm material, political, and organizational foundation for "star peace" in the spirit of the 3-stage program of common steps proposed in the letter from the chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers to the UN secretary general.

In his speech Ahmad 'Ismat 'Abd al-Majid expressed thanks for the hospitality and attention accorded to him in the course of his visit to the CSSR. He recalled the long tradition of Czechoslovak-Egyptian relations and underscored the significance of his visit for expanding and strengthening them. He expressed the conviction that Czechoslovak-Egyptian cooperation will develop dynamically for the benefit of the people of both countries.

He stressed that the CSSR and the Arab Republic of Egypt both favor a peaceful solution of international disputes and are both interested in the development of political dialogue. Egypt, the founder and active member of the Nonaligned Movement, is prepared to share with Czechoslovakia -- a recognized component of international politics -- the endeavor to assist in eliminating the hotbeds of international tension, Ahmad 'Ismat 'Abd al-Majid concluded.

The dinner was held in a friendly atmosphere.

LD180525 Prague Domestic Service in Czech 1630 GMT 17 Jun 86

[Text] The Czech and Slovak National Councils met today in Prague and Bratislava for their constituent meeting. Our reporters Vaclav Klement and Lubos Lidicky report on the proceedings:

These important meetings represented the beginning of the new period of office of these, the highest representative bodies of both our republics.

The constituent meeting of the Czech National Council was opened by Josef Kempny, its current chairman. He welcomed Josef Korcak, member of the Presidium of the CPCZ Central Committee and Czech premier, and the other members of his government.

The deputies began the meeting by approving the agenda, taking the oath laid down by the Consitution and forming the credentials and immunity committee, which then checked the validity of the credentials of all the 200 deputies.

The nominations for the election of the leading officials were proposed on behalf of the CPCZ Central Committee and the Central Committee of the National Front by Comrade Josef Korcak. The Czech National Council then held a secret ballot to elect its chairman. The result was announced by Deputy Libuse Horakova:

[Begin recording] In the election of the chairman of the Czech National Council, a total of 196 ballots were issued to the deputies of the Czech National Council. After the ballot boxes were opened, our group of deputies found that 196 ballot papers had been cast, of which 196 votes were declared valid, and none were void. Of the valid votes, 196 were cast in favor of Comrade Josef Kempny, the candidate of the National Front for election to the post of chairman of the Czech National Council. We congratulate him on being elected. [applause] [end recording]

Unanimous too was the election of Deputies Oldrich Volenik, Marie Jarosova, Oldrich; Bursky and Josef Kana as deputy chairman of the Czech National Council. The deputies then went on to approve the composition of the new 25-member Presidium of the Czech National Council, and constituted nine deputies' committees. Concluding the meeting, Comrade Josef Kempny expressed his gratitude for the trust shown by the deputies in the elected Presidium of the Czech National Council. Here is a part of what he said:

[Begin recording] All the conditions have been created for us to do our work successfully. We can call on the experience of deputies from a wide variety of workplaces in industry, construction, agriculture, services, transport and other areas of the life of society. We hope that those deputies of the Czech National Council who have been elected to this responsible post for the first time will bring to our common work new methods and inspiration. On behalf of all the deputies who have worked in the Czech National Council in the previous term, I can promise them comradely help and cooperation. The Czech National Council will be guided consistently by the categorical need to carry through the basic strategy of the 17th party congress, and that is the speed up socioeconomic and social development. Through the means vested in it by the Constitution, it will play its part in the intensification of the national economy through the application of scientific and technical progress in close cooperation with the socialist countries and especially with the Soviet Union. We realize that it is solely on this basis that the living standard can be raised and the social and cultural conditions of the life of the citizens of our country be improved in every way, that the conditions for the further development of our country can be created and that a contribution can be made to progress and the preservation of peace throughout the world in the framework of the socialist community headed by the Soviet Union. [end recording]

Today's constituent meeting of the highest legislative body of the Slovak SR, the Slovak National Council, was attended in Bratislava by Comrades Jozef Lenart, Peter Colotka, other leading party officials and members of the Slovak government. Deputy Viliam Salgovic was unanimously reelected in a secret ballot to be chairman of the Slovak National Council. Here is part of what he said at the end of his speech at the constituent meeting:

[Begin recording in Slovak] From the point of view of both the present and future development of our society, it remains a topical task in the framework of our constitutional obligations and principles to continue to improve our cooperation with the Federal Assembly of the CSSR and the Czech National Council for the further development and perfection of the Czechoslovak federation, for the consolidation of our integrated Czechoslovak state and for the fraternal coexistence and cooperation between both our nations and all our nationalities. In working out the congress documents, we will be guided by the need to be innovative in preparing the proceedings of our bodies, to be innovative in passing measures and recommendations for tackling problems and in pressing for them to be implemented consistently. We start out from the basis that at a juncture when a new style of work is needed, a new and more principled approach is also required to monitoring the implementation of resolutions that have been passed. At the same time, we will not lose sight of the call made at the CPSL congress for an improvement in the projection, planning and thereby the overall quality of the activity of the Slovak National Council, its bodies and deputies. [end recording]

These were directed toward continuing the proven policy of the unity of economic and social policy as well as the active political dialogue to preserve peace. The undying source and guarantor of the stable development of the GDR is based on the unshakeable relationship of trust between party and people.

Situated on the dividing lines between two different social systems in the heart of Europe, the GDR is doing everything to contribute to improving the international situation, Erich Honecker emphasized. All responsible politicians must act in accordance with the urgent requirement of our times not to maintain the patterns of thought of confrontation but to approach relations between the different social systems, states, and regions in a new way. The proposals by the most recent conference of the Warsaw Pact Political Consultative Committee in Budapest was characterised by this approach. They were an appeal to reason and the goodwill of all who are concerned with the peaceful future of mankind.

Erich Honecker paid tribute to the growing contribution by the Nonaligned Movement, which the Arab Republic of Egypt is a respected member of, and to the preservation of world peace.

Dr Ahmad 'Ismat 'Abd al-Majid gave information about the domestic and foreign policies of the Arab Republic of Egypt. He emphasised that Egypt supports all proposals and initiatives aimed at lessening international tensions and rejected the use of force to solve international dipsutes.

Erich Honecker and Dr Ahmad 'Ismat 'Abd al-Majid agreed that regional sources of tension and conflict represent a serious danger to world peace and to the development of the countries concerned. This is also true of the Near East conflict, whose just and lasting settlement can be achieved by a collective effort which includes the PLO as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people.

In this connection Erich Honecker emphasized the GDR's support for an international Near East conference under the auspices of the United Nations. He emphasized that the GDR supports all steps to turn the Mediterranean area into a zone of stable peace, in the face of the tense situation in that area due to aggressive imperialist actions.

The interlocutors noted with satisfaction that the many years of relations between the GDR and the Arab Republic of Egypt has undergone an upswing the last few years. They announced their firm intention to open up further opportunities for cooperation. Both sides agreed that the foreign minister's visit to the GDR has turned over a new page in relations between both states. An important contribution to improving the international situation is being made with the expansion of mutually beneficial cooperation and the continuation of the political dialogue between the representatives of both states.

GDR Minister of Foreign Affairs Oskar Fischer and Heinz Eichler, the State Council secretary, took part in the talk.

Also present was Wolfgang Schuessler, the GDR Ambassador to the Arab Republic of Egypt, and Mustafa Ahmad Hanafi, the Egyptian ambassador to the GDR

'TEXT' OF STATE-PARTY STATEMENT ON PACT MEETING

LD181745 East Berlin ADN International Service in German 1438 GMT 18 Jun 86:

[Text] Berlin, 18 Jun (ADN) -- Here is the text of the joint statement by the SED Central Committee Politburo, the State Council, and the GDR Council of Ministers, entitled "Preventing the Calamity of a Nuclear War and Achieving a Turn for the Better -- On the Results of the Political Consultative Committee of the Warsaw Pact Member States in Budapest 10 and 11 June," released in Berlin today.

The SED Central Committee Politburo, the State Council, and the GDR Council of Ministers fully and wholly agree with the results of the regular conference of the Political Consultative Committee of the Warsaw Pact member states on 10 and 11 June this year in Budapest. They thank Erich Honecker, general secretary of the SED Central committee and chairman of the GDR State Council, for the work of the delegation headed by him. They emphasize the resolve of the GDR to actively contribute to the implementation of the decisions taken at the Budapest meeting of the Political Consultative Committee.

In a complicated and dangerous time, the allied socialist states have pointed out an immediately accessible path for preventing the calamity of a nuclear war and achieving an improvement of the international situation for the better. This position corresponds to the nature of socialism. Proof of this is the 27th CPSU Congress, the 11 SED Congress, as as well as the party congresses of the fraternal parties. The appeal to the NATO states and all European countries to reduce the armed forces and conventional arms in Europe adopted by the Political Consultative Committee takes account of the concern of nations about the continuing escalation of the international situation and opens the way to halting the spiral of the arms race.

The new proposals of the Warsaw Pact states are aimed at dismantling within a few years the military confrontation in Europe, where the weapons arsenals are more than full and where the main military forces of both world systems directly face one another, and at guaranteeing the security of all nations with increasingly fewer weapons. The Warsaw Pact states present a concrete and at the same time flexible negotiating offer to reduce the armed forces and conventional arms gradually by the early 1990s to one-quarter of their present level. With the new initiative and the proposals made by Comrade Mikhail Gorbachev, the socialist states have at their disposal a complex program for reducing each category of weapons according to the principle of equality and equal security and being able to verify these steps effectively. In the interest of rapid implementation, they are ready to discuss their proposals both in their overall and their individual elements and to conclude either a comprehensive or a partial agreement.

The participants in the Budapest meeting expressed serious concern that the United States has so far not displayed any readiness to take concrete steps to improve the international situation. The declared intention of the United States no longer to feel itself tied to the SALT II agreement from the end of this year onwards is particularly dangerous. But the hopeful beginnings for a turn for the better which began to stir with the Geneva summit meeting, mut not be undercut.

The Politburo, the State Council, and the Council of Ministers are firmly convinced that it is possible to ban the danger of war and to carry through a turn for the better through the joint efforts of all forces of peace, of reason, and of realism all forces with political responsibility, and the govenments and peoples of Europe, are called upon to grasp the opportunity which is available and to stop the dangerous arms race. The unerring guide for the foreign political actions of the socialist countries is that the only reasonable path for guiding international relations back on to the path of detente is the peaceful coexistence of states and their cooperation in guaranteeing international security. At the same time, the conference demonstrated the resolve of the Warsaw Pact states to do what is necessary for guaranteeing the military strategic balance on an increasingly low level.

The Politburo, the State Council, and the Council of Ministers expressly welcome that the states of the Warsaw Pact reaffirmed their support in solidarity for the countries and peoples of Asia, Africa, and Latin America who are fighting for their national and social liberation, independence, and sovereignty. Together, the fraternal countries support the removal of underdevelopment and neocolonialist exploitation. They condemn the policy of threat, blackmail, and interference of U.S. imperialism.

The conference paid particular attention to further strengthening the unity and cohesion of the allied socialist states and their comprehensive cooperation. The Politburo, the State Council, and the Council of Ministers have a high opinion of the steps taken recently to further develop of the fraternal alliance andd to increase the effectiveness of cooperation in all fields. In accordance with the resolutions of the 11th SED Congress, the GDR will continue to contribute actively to deepening relations between the fraternal countries, particularly with the Soviet Union, on a state level as well as a social level.

All the fraternal states have resolved to do much in the coming years, individually, as well as jointly. The increasingly better connection between the advantages of socialism and the demands of scientific-technological economic integration has increasing importance in this context. On the basis of the basic agreements for scientific-technological cooperation up to the year 2000 concluded with the USSR and the other fraternal states, the GDR will play its part in realizing the great projects in the field of science, technology, and production.

The Politburo, the State Council, and the Council of Ministers are certain that the communists and all the people of the GDR will reaffirm their unanimous agreement with the peace program of the socialist community, with the far-reaching decisions of he Budapest conference of the Political Consultative Committee, and link it with readiness for new work deeds to strengthen our country and socialism. The stronger socialism, the more secure peace.

WARSAW PACT APPEAL EQUATED WITH DETENTE

[Article by Peter Sereny: "A Real Basis for Negotiations" --passages published in italics]

[Text] As a matter of coincidence the American president gave a press conference only a few hours after the Budapest appeal of the Warsaw Pact was published. Thus, whether we want to or not, we must notice the CONTRAST IN APPROACH that creates a tension between the two messages. For while the socialist allies have made an important and extensive proposal to open ways for a new pan-European agreement -- thus assuming the participation of the United States of America as well -- on the limitation of armed forces and weaponry, the number one man of the United States of America has repeated his intention of "going beyond" SALT II, the basic agreement made with the Soviet Union on arms limitation.

In the midst of the Warsaw Pact proposal for an agreement on confidence building, who is responsible for reminding us from overseas that in recent weeks and months actions over there have involved the very opposite?

We can still remember the storm caused by the announcement of the american "burial" of SALT II at NATO's foreign ministerial session in Halifax 2 weeks ago, when the United States stood alone against its 15 allies. The /FINANCIAL TIMES/ then noted with regret that the controversies surrounding SALT II and the future of the East-West arms reduction talks have upset the foreign ministers' efforts to launch a counter-propaganda campaign following the Soviet initiatives. (The British paper said that "the ministers had been firing at each other instead of releasing doves of peace.")

It is obvious that Washington's behaviour is the source of discord on the Western side. It is no use trying to interpret the peace initiatives of the socialist countries as if they contained some aspects of "separation tactics." The intention of these countries is something else, and this is clear from the passage in the Warsaw Pact's Budapest appeal which deals not only with the continuation of dialogues between the two alliance ORGANIZATIONS but also deals with the establishment of relations between the Warsaw Pact and NATO.

There are clear and unamibuous intentions, aims, and means. Our alliance, the Warsaw Pact, starts from the basis -- as has just recently been stressed again -- that "in the present situation there is no reasonable alternative to the peaceful coexistence of states."

It is firmly convinced that only political means and the combined efforts of all states can provide a reliable guarantee of security and conditions of progress and development for all countries and peoples. Therefore, its member states "are determined to support the continuation and deepening of political dialogues between states with different social systems, and are determined to ensure that these dialogues are effective and precise to a maximum extent."

And this not only in words but also in DEEDS.

Was is not the intention of being PRECISE AND EFFECTIVE that again guide the Warsaw pact when, considering both time limits and quantity indicators, they offered an explicit and detailed program for limiting European armed forces and conventional weaponry?

In this article there is no need to repeat the main points of the program because the full text of the Warsaw pact appeal was published in our paper on Thursday [12 June]. However, to make the porportions more perceptible, one piece of information must still be noted here. The extent of troop reduction suggested at present by the Warsaw pact is 10 TIMES GREATER than that principally agreed at the Vienna talks so far; and at a later stage this reduction would reach a total of 1 million troops on both sides by the nineties. WHAT IS MORE, THESE 1 MILLION TROOPS ARE TO BE DISARMED IN SUCH A WAY THAT THEIR WEAPONS WOULD ALSO BE WITHDRAWN AT THE SAME TIME, AND PARTIALLY DESTROYED! According to the proposal of our alliance this would take place with strict verification, for which purpose a consultative commission should be set up with the participation of NATO, the Warsaw Pact, and all other -- even neutral -- European countries interested in reduction. In fact, it is our opinion that DISARMAMENT IS IMPOSSIBLE WITHOUT VERIFICATON, JUST AS VERIFICATION WOULD MAKE NO SENSE WITHOUT DISARMAMENT.

It is clear from the viewpoint of both preciseness and efficiency that the Warsaw Pact has at present proposed a FAR-REACHED BASIS FOR NEGOTIATIONS to its Western partners, and on the subject of conventional arms this basis is similar to the multi-stage program for nuclear and biological disarmament up to the end of the century proposed by the Soviet Union at the beginning of the year, and accepted by its allies. (One aspect of this concept is elaborated by the "star peace" plan and the related cooperation to be organized by the WORLD SPACE AGENCY of which Mikhail Gorbachev spoke in Csepel this week, and the official version of which has been presented to the UN secretary general by the head of the Soviet Government.)

Although this present appeal is a complete issue in itself, it is in fact an organic PART of the January nuclear disarmament proposal and again contradicts the argument of some Atlantic politicans that the elimination of opposing missiles in Europe would allow the conventional forces of the East to gain superiority. The Warsaw Pact does not suggest a "one-sided" reduction, but rather the kind of reduction that would further push back the level of opposition with regard to both nuclear and conventional forces by maintaining the balance of forces.

We have mentioned above a basis for negotiations, because thi[illegible] proposal is completely open, just like all the other proposals made by our allian[illegible], and it does not set preconditions with regard to either form or content. A good example of this is the fact that the issue has a pan-European character, and it suggests a possible new forum without withdrawing from using the present mechanisms of the Vienna and Stockholm negotiations, which could be stimulated by holding discussions about the new proposal.

As it happens, in its Budapest appeal of 17 years ago -- unprecedented in the history of our continent -- the Warsaw Pact suggested the preparation of a pan-European conference on security and cooperation that was finally staged in Helsinki, and its memorable Final act still has a great political impact. And it is symbolic that our alliance has again issued an important and new pan-European appeal in Budapest; this time on reducing the opposing military forces.

This appeal reflects the fact that the Warsaw Pact member-states DO NOT MERLY CONSIDER HELSINKI AS A SOURCE OF QUOTATIONS, BUT ARE WILLING TO TAKE ACTIVE STEPS TO PROMOTE THE PAN-EUROPEAN PROCESS BEARING THE HELSINKI TRADE MARK. The festive communique formulated jointly by the seven socialist countries reflects the spirit of the Final Document: "They will never, under any circumstances, begin armed actions against any European or other countries in the world, if no aggression is directed against them."

In our capital city this week the Warsaw Pact summit meeting called for the renewal of detente and for the construction of Europe that cooperates in peace and good neighborliness. On behalf of the conference hosts JANOS KADAR said the following: "We are firmly convinced that our new and realistic initiative to achieve our main targets will show a feasible solution to the most important problems facing the whole of mankind. We trust in the persuasive strength of our proposals for their realization, we call upon all politicians, parties, and organizations of the world, and call upon all peace-loving and honest people of goodwill to cooperate and collaborate."

U.S. IN NO HURRY TO REPLY TO GENEVA PROPOSAL

[Text] It seems the Washington administration does not wish to reply to the Soviet Union's latest Geneva proposals for some time. The White House spokesman in essence admitted that no unified stance has yet evolved within the government; what is more there are arguments. The more extreme wing, grouped around Secretary of Defense Weinberger, considers limitaton of the space armament program as being unacceptable. At the same time the NEW YORK TIMES has also confirmed the report that President Reagan has proposed a Soviet-U.S. foreign ministerial exchange of views to General Secretary Gorbachev as a preparation for their summit meeting. Dobrinin, the USSR ambassador in Washington, is expected to hand President Reagan the reply message from Gorbachev, the paper writes.

WORLD CUP VIEWING BLAMED FOR PRODUCTION LOSSES

[Text] How far does electricity consumption in Hungary reflect the fact that the television reports on the football matches in Mexico go on till 0200 or longer at night? We telephoned Janos Szabo, of the National Electricity Grid, to answer this question.

[Begin recording] [Szabo] Yes, national consumption during the first half of the matches is 100-200 megawatts higher than usual; this corresponds to about 1 million television sets being used. By the second half of the matches the extra consumption is only half this figure. [End recording]

[Reporter] It is not certain that those who watch matches at night can work next morning. We called the works matches at night can work next morning. We called the works matches at night can work next morning. We called the works manager of the Csepel piston factory's foundry, Imre Kurucz.

[Begin recording] [Kurucz] When there is a good match, we know about it because they do not come in to work. They simply do not come in. The number of absentees has gone up tremendously; there are people who we have not been able to find for the last 4 weeks. We send them telegrams, go to their homes, but cannot find them. They are real football fans. I am sure that they are just watching the matches.

[Reporter] They are not on Vacation?

[Kurucz] No. Many people wanted to go on holiday but because of this we did not let them.

[Reporter] And what about those who are at work? How tired are they because of the late nights watching football on the television?

[Kurucz] This has had a really detrimental effect on production. On average, at present we are achieving 60 percent of our normal production.

[Reporter] I have a strong suspicion that the situation is not dismilar at other places of work either, even in the offices. The World Cup is only a game but work is not a game. We must not let these cases of lack of discipline be overlooked in a spirit of good cheer. They cause serious damage to the economy at a time when every minute of working time is vital.

PZPR CENTRAL COMMITTEE POLITBURO MEETS 17 Jun

[Text] Warsaw, June 18: On June 17, the Political Bureau of the PUWP CC once again appraised the state of implementation of tasks ensuing from the decisions taken by the 16th full session of the PUWP CC that dealt with the working class problems.

The Political bureau stated that the implementation of the tasks set by the 16th plenum, as well as of those which arose in the course of the subsequent consultations, was taken up in full. A majority of intentions was carried through -- the remaining part being in the course of implementation. Strengthening was the worker character of the party, with the number of workers slowly but systematically growing among the party candidates. [sentence as received]

The growth of the political role of the working class and of its influence upon the state's activities was the typical trend over the entire period between the 9th and the 10th congresses of the party. The democratization of the socio-political life and the economic reform strengthened the sense of responsibility in the consciousness of the working class and consolidated its role as the co-husband [as received] of country.

Realized is one of the major tasks set by the 16th plenary meeting, that is the amelioration of the economic reform. Efforts are made in particular in favour of the consistent application of the reform's durable solutions. The adoption within the national socio-economic plan for the years 1986-1990 of the already worked out draft systemic corrections will be an important step on this path.

The party regards it as fundamental duty to create conditions for the social and material advancement of the working class. It treats that in a close dependence on and relation to the economic processes and economic growth.

The working class should be an active spokesman for ushering in modern methods of moulding wages, for equitable and complete tying of the latter to the actual work input.

Wherever it is possible, it is necessary to speed up the introduction of the brigade-like work organization, of partners' groups, of assigning tasks to workers' teams. It was stated that the action of the factory social service was systematically improving.

The Political Bureau also reviewed, in close connection with the 16th plenum's problematique, a report on the work safety and hygiene in the period between the 9th and 19th Congresses of the PUWP.

The decisions made in the years 1981-1985 and the multi-pronged action taken have made to achieving some progress in the work protection, as well as for overcoming some of the adverse phenomena. The outlays for improving the work conditions have gone up for fourfold.

The Political bureau assessed the course of voivodship party conferences held in connection with the forthcoming PUWP congress. Factory and voivodship conferences elected a total of 1,776 delegates to the 10th party congress, including 255 elected directly at conferences organized in factories.

The campaign preceding the party congress confirmed the party's active presence in all spheres of (the coutry's) political, economic, and social life. Party links act more effectively, and discipline among party members has strenghened.

The outcome of nationwide discussion will find reflection in the resolution and other documents to be adopted at the congress. Special attention should be paid to those problems on which opinions varied. These problems will be taken up and carefully studied by the party's new authorities.

The Political Bureau was briefed on the course and resuts of the meeting which the Consultative Political Committee of states-parties to the Warsaw Treaty had in Budapest. The Political Bureau voiced its full support for the programme of armed forces and oncentional arms reduction in Europe spelled out in the message issued by states-parties to the Warsaw Treaty. Poland is going to do all it can to promote materialization of the proposals including in the message. This is fully in tune with the Policy raison d'etat and the most vital interests of the Polish nation and state.

The Political Bureau fully approved of the activities of the Polish delegation at the Budapest conference of the Consultative Political Committee of the Warsaw Treaty and recommended to the appropriate state bodies to carry out the adopted arrangements.

The Political Bureau got acquainted with the course and outcome of the official visit to Poland by the president of the Republic of Zimbabwe, Canaan Sodindo Banana.

The first meeting at so high a level in Poland's relations with Zimbabwe was of a vital political significance. It will contribute, too, to the development of economic cooperation.

The importance of the talks of the president of the Council of State with the president of the Republic of Zimbabwe on international issues is underscored by the fact that that country is going to assume shortly the leadership of the movement of the non-aligned states.

The meeting made a contribution ot the further consolidation of the broad front of forces coming for peace, detente and equal-right cooperation and strengthens their solidarity in the struggles against imperialism, colonialism and apartheid.

Justice Minister Speaks

[Justice Minister "Domeradzki Speech in Sejm;" (abridged) -- PAP headline]

[Text] In the government's opinion best effects in the fight against social ills can be attained by way of opposing the causes underlying them. The campaign aimed to improve the nation's moral health,initiated by the PUWP, found support in the activities of the Government Committee for the Observance of Law Public Order, and Social Discipline, and in the committee's report on crime rates and social Ills, and lines to counteract and prevent them, among others, on May 12 the Council of Ministers approved a government Programme on Counteracting Social Ills and Crime in the Years 1986-90 and timetable a of concrete measures to put it into effect.

After three years of implementing the law on education for sobriety and courteracting alcoholism we can say that it failed to produce expected results. Alcohol consumption is on the rise. According to preliminary estimats some 900 thousand people are dependent on alcohol, while another three million indulge in excessive drinking. Alcohol proves to be the main cause for divorce. About none percent of children are raised in families abusing alcohol.

Last year we sold 689 billion zloty and 84 million dollar worth of alcohol. Alcohol [words indistinct] work establishments, where apart from moral losses it produces economic losses [words indistinct] which we all transmit yearly to finance poor quality of products unacceptable both at the domestic and foreign markets.

This year, changes in the structure of production of alcohol and organization of distribution are visible. The number of offences such as illegal distillation and profiteering in the field has shrunk. The system of counteracting alcohol does not require any fundamental changes. However, attention must primarily be focussed on comprehensive, consistent implementation of the provisions of the law.

Drug addiction has emerged over the last few years as a phenomenon close to alcohol abuse and alcoholism. It primarily assails teenager, as every fourth addiction is a school student.

According to health service statistics, some 30 thousand individuals are addicted to drugs, and addiction, which promotes a preventive-and-therapeutic model of counteracting it in tune with world experience and Poland's international obligations, opened a qualitatively new phase of opposing that phenomenon. Government actions receive backing from a public movement geared to prevention of drug addiction.

The government is of the opinion that first of all there is need to curb availability of drugs, with special emphasis on poppy straw and poppy-heads. Another line of action comprises repressing those who make drugs more easily available by producing or trafficking them.

An estimated eight to ten percent of youth, or about a million young polish citizens, are threatened with demoralization. Those running the highest risk, and numbering about 170 thousand, are under permanent supervision of family court.

A common objection is aroused by the persistent work skirking and living on incomes illegally earned, incompatible with the principles of social life. The law on the work shirkers did not usher in the common duty to work. It does not cover either all the manifestations of parasitism, but only the shirking of work or of the duty to learn for people aged below 45. This limitation alone deprives the law of the possibilities of a comprehensive solving of the problem of parasitism.

That does not mean, however, that the law does not work and does not bring on effects. In the period of its validity, since January 1983, a total of 190 thousand people falling under the provisions of the law have been registered. At the end of last March, upwards of 90 thousand people were in the non-working and non-learning files. 77 thousand of them were told to work and a majority of them are still working.

At present, some 29 thousand people who led a parasite-like life are doing prison terms. The Council of Ministers obliged the minister of justice to draw up, till next September, draft legal solutions aimed at a more effective prevention and combating of this social ill.

The less-than-a-year old period of validity of the law on the heightened legal responsibility does not provide grounds yet for a full assessment of its effectiveness.

Over the first six months, the crime rate fell down to one percent whereas in the years 1980-1984 the number of crimes was growing 7-16 percent per annum. Summary court procedure was applied last year to 20 thousand people more than in 1984. Among those convicted dominated the property offenders, hooligans, illicit alcohol distillers an profiteers. This tendency stayed level also over the first five months of this year.

The law provided real grounds for a new penal policy under which jailing is ever more frequently replaced by non-penintentiary punishments, above all by economic reprisal, limitations of liberty and extra fines.

The growing number of detected profiteering crimes presents a phenomenon which is particularly painfully felt by society. The past few years manifested a growing number of dangerous, affair-like profiteering committed in an organized way. The heightened penal policy applied towards the profiteers should be carried on.

Barecki Address

[Speech by Jozef Barecki, chairman of the Sejm Committee for Administration, Internal Affairs and Administrative Affairs, at 18 June Sejm session in Warsaw]

[Text] Warsaw, 18 June -- Problems related to the ethical side of social life in Poland draw an ever bigger response in the talks among Poles and arouse concern over the health of the nation. At its previous, 9th congress, at the dramatic moments of our nation and state, the party drew up and adopted a programme for socialist renewal and charted avenues towards amelioration of the republic.

This programme has been and is per se an evidence of the party's morality and, at the same time, an evidence to its determination in restoring the due role to the moral norms in the functioning of the state and in the life of citizens. The renewal programme has become the foundation for the creation by the Sejm of a legal system reflecting the profound concern of the supreme organ of state authority over the protection of socialist moral norms, over the consolidation of the rule of law, over the organization of conditions for social order and security of citizens.

The laws passed with a view to preventing the social ill and combating crime are an important manifestation of this concern.

The analyses of the evaluations made indicate all of these laws were needful and they are a correct answer to the postulates and expectations of the working people.

Generally, prevailing is the viewpoint that the laws make up a comprehensive system counteracting the perils and apart from the work shirkers law do not require basic amendments.

The amending motions tabled in are of a complementary character, specifying in more detail or enlarging some of the solutions.

All the positive effects of the laws' observance are manifest. It is believed, however, they are incommensurate to the possiblities provided. Particularly much criticism has been aroused by the observance of the laws on sobriety education and work shrikers.

The assessments bear out the common belief that alcoholism should be regarded as the basic peril.

A year ago the average Pole drank up 6.8 litres of alcohol per annum and after the illicit alcohol is added up, then the figure is 8 litres. The date collected this year indicate the alcohol consumption growing. Could that be that the law is faulty? Quite on the contrary. It is being fixed up positively. The point is that no law can solve anything, unless it is consistently applied. A majority of assessments claim the law is good, and in many solutions -- innovative, only its observance is bad.

Numerous methods of circumventing it and blunting the adopted provisions have appeared. The diversified preventive measures stipulated for in the law are taken advantage of to an insufficient extent.

Of the conclusions of a legal nature it is proposed, among other things, to introduce a duty of indicating alcohol-related sacking in work certificates, introducing a ban on holding managerial positions by people who abuse alcohol while on duty or who tolerate alcohol in the institution in their charge.

Alcoholism did not appear in socialism. [sentence as received] A number of Western states drink more alcohol. There is more crime under its impact, more demoralization. It is not a bidding that matters at this point. It is a side remark for those who want to put this plague, born under different circumstances, shaped up over the centuries and deeply rooted in manners, at the doorstep of socialism, for the benefit of political strife.

True, for a long period of time the harmfulness of alcoholism was not perceived in our country. Very often its scope was shamefacedly swept under the carpet. At present we have chosen the most appropriate method of conduct: Uncompromising fight against it.

It is likewise with drug addiction. It is not our social system to have given rise to it. Drug addiction was making rounds in our country in the pre-war period. It eats into the health of millions of minors and adults in the U.S., the FRG, in tens of states of the world.

We have the awareness of the misery which this phenomenon may bring about amid our youths, too. This is manifested, among others, by the law on drug addiction prevention. Despite the fact that little time has passed since its adoption, the climate around this peril has distinctly changed. The law spurred institutions and broad circles of young people to action and propped up social initiative, such as the "Monar" (organization running voluntary rehabilitation centres for drug addicts).

It is commonly postulated to adopt harsh penal sanctions against kpeople preoccupied with the manufacturing and trafficking of drugs.

Most of the controversial opinions were prompted by control of materialization of the law on work shirkers. Polish society is very strict in negative appraising social parasites. Hence a universal demand for actions to force work shirkers to take to honest work.

The opinion is being voiced that a possible amendment to the law should not interfere with the core of the law, namely its compatibility with Polish or international law.

Combat against social parasitism should be waged consistently. The law should be approached as one of the measures in a broad system of strife against that ill.

A year ago we passed a law on special legal liability to bind till 1988. We were forced to do so by the rising crime rates and growing social ills, whose sources could be traced down to a specific, years-long negative social potential, partly attributable to historic facts and duly propelled by conscious anarchization of life in this country and depreciation of the law in the years 1980 and 1981.

A year which lapsed since the law under discussion came into force has brought visible positive results. The number of grave crimes has diminished and administration of justice has come to be a shorter process.

Putting a curb on crime was necessary. Society is gaining confidence in that the law ever more effectively protects public order and safeguards security.

However, threats have not yet been overcome and laws alone can hardly do all the business. The fact is ever more widely perceived.

We are not mounting signposts in wilderness devoid of social commitment. Opinions (collected by the social opinion sounding centre with respect to the campaign for moral renewal of Polish society) prove the actions we have taken are right, and at the same time they confirmed that these actions will receive backing from broad circles of Polish society.

Resolution Issued

["Sejm Resolution on Combating Social Ills -- (Abridged)" -- PAP headline]

[Text] Warsaw, June 18: -- The socialist system of People's Poland creates favourable conditions for shaping and strengthening society's moral health. The Sejm deems it necessary to take firmer actions aimed at preventing all signs of social ills and at struggle with delinquency.

The progressing and tangible normalization of life in the country creates favourable conditions to reduce social ills and to consolidate postive moral norms in relations between people.

Laws passed by the Sejm are conducive towards this goal. They create appropriate conditions to prevent social ills and delinquency. Unfortunately, not all of these laws are consistently implemented. This particularly refers to the law on education in sobriety and combating alcoholism and the law on work shirkers.

The public starts to regard also the gradual degradation of the natural environment resulting in high social costs as an ill.

Actions aimed to pep up the struggle against social ills and delinquency meet with public support. The Sejm positively assesses the hitherto ventures taken to this end by the government. However, the obtained effects are insufficient. This entails the necessity to undertake firm and more efficient steps to secure full and consistent implementation of the regulations of the law.

The Sejm approves of the lines of action embodied in the government Programme To Prevent and Combat Social Ills and Delinquency in the Years 1986-1990. The Sejm recommends the government to submit annual reports on the state of this programme's implementation.

Intensified efforts of the state authorities and law protecting bodies should go together with various forms of active participation of citizens in consolidation of law and order and social discipline.

The Sejm appeals to all the citizens, to all the Poles who the future of their homeland dear to actively participate in the struggle against all signs of ills in their own interest and in the interest of Polish families, the young generation; and in the interest of the whole nation.

MESSNER SPEAKS TO WROCLAW PZPR COMMITTEE

[Report on speech by Premier Zbigniew Messner at the Wroclaw Voivodship PZPR Committee headquarters on 5 June]

[Text] PAP -- Zbigniew Messner expressed satisfaction with the visit to Wroclaw Voivodship. It provided him with much valuable information and a new perspective on problems in the region and everyday life and work in the voivodship. Next, replying to 45 questions which had been submitted in advance, Z. Messner spoke at length about the government's economic policy and paid particular attention to issues connected with the implementation of the economic reform. The completion of investment projects which have been under way since the 1970s during the coming years is of particular importance for the further socioeconomic development of the country. At the same time, it is necessary to invest in the modernization of the economy so as to make the best possible use of scientific and technological progress. One of the most serious social problems which needs to be solved is that of ensuring an increase in housing construction. The government wants to build more apartments but the provision of sufficient construction materials has to be ensured and at the same time, output in the relevant enterprises must be increased.

Discussing the effects of the economic reform, the premier stated that a report on the implementation of the reform and the most important tasks for the future has been prepared for delegates to the 10th PZPR Congress. He also discussed issues concerning the repayment of Poland's foreign debt and the consequences of Poland's accession to the International Monetary Fund. In addition, he also discussed agricultural policy and issues in education.

KISCZAK OUTLINES EVENTS PRIOR TO MARTIAL LAW

AU170601 Warsaw TRYBUNA LUDU in Polish 13 Jun 86 pp 5, 6

["Reprint" of the POLITYKA interview given by General Czeslaw Kiszcak, minister of internal affairs, to Andrzej Kepinski and Zbigniew Kilar: "I Will Talk With Everyone ..." -- date and place not given; first paragraph is TRYBUNA LUDU introduction]

[Text] We are reprinting from POLITYKA issue No 24 extensive exerpts of the interview given by General Czeslaw Kiszcak to Andrzej Kepinski and Zbigniew Kilar. The entire interview will soon be published in the second volume of the book entitled "Who Is Who in Poland. In a Different Way." The book was written by Andrzej Kepinski and Zbigniew Kilar and will be pblished by the "Czytelnik" publishing house. POLITYKA chose to publish the second part of the interview, beginning with the events prior to the proclamation of martial law in December 1981. Below is an extensive summary of this publication:

[Kiszczak] Martial law is history today; a great deal has been said and written about it. I would like to recapitulate the evaluations and conclusions that have been embedded sufficiently strongly in the awareness of most of our people. After all, for a long time now everyone has realized that it was necessary to make a final decision, such as that concerning martial law, in a situation that continued to be increasingly obvious toward the end of 1981 -- a situation in which we had anarchy, chaos, economic ruin, and extreme dangers threatening the security of the state and the people.

Today I think everyone realizes that the martial law decision was not an easy matter because of the enormous responsibility it entailed toward the people and the state. Before it could be made we had to be strongly convinced that there was no other way out. Of this we were convinced.

[Kepinski, Kilar] Some people have alleged that the authorities wanted a "violent solution" from the very beginning.

[Kisczak] This is untrue. Between August 1980 and December 1981 the authorities continued to make all possible efforts to achieve agreement with the Solidarity movement, which was organizing itself and developing, and to treat it as a trade union movement. There is evidence to prove this and there are obvious facts to show that this was so, despite any attempts to deny them. The most obvious proof in this connection is the fact that many party members, including those from the party's supreme echelons, were Solidarity members.

What is more -- I do not have to remind you of this-- many people criticized the authorities for their "appeasement." "We have certainly not committed the error of arrogance," said Comrade Wojciech Jaurezelski, PZPR first secretary, in his speech at the seventh plenum in February 1982.

"No one is able to accuse the party and the government of failing to show goodwill and patience. We have always believed and continue to believe in the political instinct of the workers class and in the people's sense of responsibility. We have presevered in stretching out our hand in agreement. This is our moral achievement, one well known to all those who are now indignant about martial law. Even in a situation in which the country continued to disintegrate from day to day and in which the government proposed in the Sejm that a law should be passed to ban strikes temporarily during the winter period, Solidarity responded by threatening a general strike and various important people rose in great indignation and protest ... We issued many open and loud warnings against dangers. Our authorities announced that they would not recoil from the use of constitutional means of defending the state if this were to become inevitable. We said this many times during negotiations and in the Sejm. We said this in the fourth and sixth plenum resolutions. We did not lurk in darkness."

Let me add that those people who opposed the manipulation and political aggressiveness of the anticommunist groups that had penetrated Solidarity continued to be eliminated from the leading structures of Solidarity. The best known example of this is Jaroslaw Sienkiewicz, who signed the Jastrzebie agreement, but similar cases occurred in other places, including Lublin where Kazimierz Chranowski was dismissed from the chairmanship of the Solidarity branch in the Agromet enterprise and where activist Boleslaw Cwikla was removed by Solidarity authorities. Marian Juszczuk, Jaroslaw Mroczek, and Andrzej Jacek Zielinski, who were members of the Interfactory Strike Committee and later on, of the Interfactory Workers Committee, resigned from their positions in the presidium of the latter committee because they were convinced that Jurczyk and Wadolowski displayed aggressive political attitudes and showed leanings toward dictatorship, violating the principles of trade union democracy.

[Kepinski, Kilar] What did the authorities do as the domestic situation continued to be aggravated?

[Kiszczak] We continued to be increasingly aware that the victory of the realistic workers element in Solidarity was becoming less and less probable with each passing day. At the same time, we could see that the Solidarity groups of extremist leaders, who manipulated the masses of trade unionists and pushed them toward an open confrontation, continued to be radicalized with increasingly greater speed and danger. All in all, these features were going to result in destabilization of the state and a fratricidal conflict.

The talks between representatives of the authorities, led by Vice Premier M.F. Rakowski, as he was then, and the Solidarity leaders were broken off by the latter without any ceremony. Let me also remind you that the meeting between General W. Jaruzelski, Jozef Cardinal Glemp, and Lech Walesa on 4 November 1981 did not help eliminate the confrontational trends within Solidarity. The talks that the Ministry of Internal Affairs had with some more realistic Solidarity leaders were also futile. That is why in this situation it was decided to get ready for more radical measures.

[Kepinski, Kilar] We understand that these preparations were surrounded by strict secrecy.

[Kiszczak] Organizational and technical matters were veiled in strict secrecy. As for the deployment of the law-enforcing units in Aleje Jerozolimskie, in Marszalkowska Street, and in the High Officer Firefighting School, we regarded it as a warning and a bucket of cold water over the heads of those who in their political blindness continued to talk abou the "government lying prostrate in the street" and continued to conscously push the masses of trade unions toward a reckless action that was bound to end in a bloody confrontation. We also expected that the masses of trade unionists would begin to think and to reject and condemn the adventurists.

[Kepinski, Kilar] This means that those who oppose the state should assume that the authorities are ready to use force to prevent an intended coup?

[Kiszczak] Yes. As I have said, the authorities did not make any secret of this. We also knew that all our preparations were under very close scrutiny by our external adversary. On the night of 6-7 or 7-8 November 1981 the U.S. intelligence service evacuated its unsuspected and valuable agent from Poland -- former Colonel Ryszard Kuklinski and his family. Because of his position in the General Staff, Kuklinski knew about the current state of preparations for a possible introduction of martial law. When we realized what had happened we carried out a profound analysis of the true motives of this sudden operation. This analysis produced the conclusion that the West was playing a thoroughly criminal game.

[Kepinski, Kilar] The nam in question reached his spying headquarters?

[Kiszczak] Yes he did; as of 8 November 1981 his Washington employers were in possession of unlimited opportunities to warn their Polish political agents and collaborators, the Solidarity leaders, and the Catholic Church. However, they did not do this and kept mum in the extreme.

[Kepinski, Kilar] Why?

[Kiszczak] This is precisely the crux of the matter. Having withdrawn an agent who was placed so favorably, the CIA counted on the disorganization of our preparations and, at the same time, carefully hid the fact that Kuklinski had been evacuated in order not to weaken the resolve of the Solidarity extremists. Perhaps a warning might have sobered and made the advocates of the "final confrontation" more cautious. It is certain that the lealding Solidarity activists at that memorable Solidarity session at Radom on 3 December 1981 would not have uttered such sentences as "sock their jaws," "this will be their last fight," and "confrontation is inevitable" if such a warning had been issued.

Poland's enemies did not want to prevent such threats. They clearly expected that the introduction of martial law would fail in such a situation, that we would not be able to paralyze the counterrevolution fully and effectively, and that a bloody confrontation would follow.

This means they expected that Poland would become a kind of Lebanon. No doubt they also dreamed about a possible allied intervention by the Warsaw Pact countries and about all the results of such an intervention. As you can see, the imperialist forces in the West were interested in the "radical alternative" -- in bloodshed in Poland. At the same time, the Western patrons once again swindled and completely ignored their Polish friends, regarding them as "raw material of history" and as a means of implementing their global showdown with socialism. This means that they failed to appreciate the mercenary devotion and absolute obedience of their Polish champions. My gorge rises at the fact that these people have still not learned anything and still regard it as an honor to "visit" some Western embassies, receive cheap eulogies, and report tendentiously to their "hosts" on the country's current situation.

It was not until martial law had been introduced that Secretary of State A. Haig intimated that Washington "has obtained some information about the coming crisis." I am quoting from a NEWSWEEK article published on 20 December 1982, which means that only after more than a year was the U.S. press led to partially reveal the CIA's espionage activities. The article in question is full of lies and inadquacies, which are supposed to excuse the Americans in the eyes of the swindled and ignored extremists in Solidarity and all the other "sympathisers" with U.S. policy and subversion. The article in question ends with this spectacular conclusion: "According to one of World War II's legends, Churchill decided not to defend Coventry Cathedral against the German bomb attack in order to keep secret the fact that the German code had been cracked. Perhaps Solidarity has played the role of Coventry Cathedral in the cold war of the eighties." This is a false conclusion! It was the Polish people who were expected to play this tragic role in the name of the anticommunist crusade and U.S. globalism [globalizm].

[Kepinski, Kilar] We know about this article. It attempted to convince readers that the information obtained by an agent must not be divulged in any way so as not to expose the agent and let him be unmasked. The article also stated that there were many informers in Solidarity.

[Kiszcak] A high official in the U.S. Government once again made fun of the leaders of the former Solidarity and of his clients in Poland. I say again that the U.S. agent in question was absolutely safe as early as 8 November 1981 and was in the West together with his family.

The Americans did not at all have to hide the fact that Kiklinski was their agent because at that time he was in absolute safety. He was in the United States, and the Americans knew that he was completely unmasked in Poland and that the Polish authorities knew all about what had happened.

[Kepinski, Kilar] What was done after the escape of the agent in question had been analyzed?

[Kiszczak] In that situation the existing plans and preparations were once again carefully verified, updated, and changed suitably. We did not let ourselves be foxed and paralyzed. All the alternative special activities were governed from the beginning by the basic principle that it is necessary to take action in such a way so as to not even shed a drop of Polish blood. The social and moral costs of the necessary actions involving martial law had to be reduced to a minimum. However, we must realize that the preparations that would make it possible to introduce martial law by decision are one thing, and making such a decision is another thing. Preparing the plans was not in conflict with the truth that the decision on proclaiming martial law was made at the very last moment after all opportunities for avoiding it had been exhausted. These plans were made in case of failure in the authorities' efforts to achieve agreement and in case the Solidarity leaders continued to intensify the line of confrontation, despite persuasion and warnings issued by the highest authorities.

Agent Kuklinski was also perfectly aware of the fact that if, as a result of an unfavorable development of the situation, the decision on martial law had to be made, it would have to be made for various reasons prior to 15 December 1981. The political authorities tried to avoid ultimate measures until the last moment, issuing warnings and appealing to those concerned to come to their senses.

[Kepinski, Kilar] When and under what circumstances was the final decision made? What was the decisive factor?

[Kiszczak] At the end of November 1981, especially after that Radom session of Solidarity on 3 December, it began to become increasingly obvious that without a radical solution the country's situation threatened not only economic catastrophe and the disintegration of the state, but also civil war and bloodshed. Provocations went from strength to strength and chaos continued to increase. Strikes and strike alerts were becoming more normal than ordinary work. Even the higher educational establishments went on strike, and schools took advantage of any pretext to "protest." On some occasions the further development of such strikes and protests could not even be controlled by their sponsors who were among the Solidarity extremists. Some buildings, usually the headquarters of the local government or party authorities, were occupied.

At the Radom conference Grzegorz Palka and Zbigniew Bujak proposed organizing a "workers militia" equipped with cables and helmets in order, as was said, to protect the "strikers and those demonstrating against the intervention of law-enforcing units." Seweryn Jaworski in the Warsaw foundry showed one example of the attempt to set up such a "militia."

In the end the decision was made to organize a large-scale demonstration in Warsaw on 17 December 1981. This demonstration was to spark off confrontation activities.

Anyone who makes an honest analysis of those days is bound to conclude that a catastrophe was very, very close.

During the session of the Solidarity Coordinating Committee in the Lenin shipyards in Gdansk on 12 December 1981 things were very bad; the Security Service of the Ministry of Internal Affairs continued to receive running reports on the situation. The mood was obviously a confrontational mood. Not even Attorney Wladyslaw Sila-Nowicki, whom it is hard to count among communist sympathisers, was able to stop the madmen by giving them sensible adivce. Nor were the Catholic Church leadership and Jozef Cardinal Glemp able to stop them. The cardinal received the Solidarity leaders together with Walesa and some advisers on 9 December 1981.

I know all about this from a participant in that meeting. It is easy to understand why Lech Walesa and his advisers are still silent about that meeting and talks with the church leaders. At that moment the church ceased to be an authority for the Solidarity extremists. There is a glaring analogy between this and another case: Adventurous and counterrevolutionary elements took the same attitude toward Stefan Cardinal Wyszynski's famous sermon at Jasna Gora in August 1980 in which he appealed for a return to work and for peace. At that time shouts were heard: "Throw Wyszynski into a harbor basin."

[Kepinski, Kilar] Who initiated the introduction of martial law?

[Kiszczak] It could be said that the dramatically aggravated situation in the country initiated this introduction. The Politburo and the Central Committee drew attention to this in their sessions and so did the government and various other central and local organizations.

Thousands and thousands of our citizens wrote letters and begged us to rescue the country from a tragedy, including hunger and the possible results of the coming winter. Similar voices full of anxiety and concern were heard in the Sejm.

In this situation the proposal put forward by Premier Wojciech Jaruzelski to State Concil Chairman Henryk Jablonski that martial law should be proclaimed met with the latter's full approval. In line with the Constitution and its consitutional powers, the State Council formally voted for the introduction of martial law on the terriroty of the PPR as of 13 December 1981. During the night of 12-13 December the Military Council of National Salvation was constituted under the chairmanship of Army General Wojciech Jaruzelski.

I know that General Wojciech Jaruzelski informed the representatives of the leadership of the party, the allied parties, and the government about these intentions at the right time.

[Kepinski, Kilar] Who was it that was directly responsible for the general concept of martial law? Did members of the Military Council for National Salvation hold special functions prior to the proclamation of martial law?

[Kiszczak] The martial law plans were evolved by a small group including Army General Wojciech Jaruzelski, PZPR first secretary, premier, and minister of national defense; General of Arms Florian Siwicki, chief of the General Staff and vice minister of national defense; and General of Division Czeslaw Kiszczak, minister of internatal affairs.

The plans for employing the Armed Forces were devised by the officers of the General Staff and other agencies of the Ministry of National Defense. General of Brigade Michal Janiszewski was in charge of the appropriate employees in the Office of the Council of Ministers.

As for the Ministry of Internal Affairs, it primarily drew up the plans to safeguard the most impotant industrial objectives and to isolate the leading extremist activists of Solidarity and some other figures. The Ministry of Internal Affairs also drew up plans for ensuring peace and order in public places, for radically reducing common crimes, and for safeguarding the safety of citizens.

The tasks carried out by the members of the Military Council for National Salvation involved basic duties resulting from their official functions; it is therefore difficult to speak of some special commitments. The council included 22 general and officers and functioned as a temporary body until the situation was normalized. The council did not substitute for the constitutional bodies of government and did not take over any of its duties.

The main tasks of the councils during the period of martial law were laid down by the council chairman is the speech made on 13 December 1981 and by a special proclamation.

[Kepinski, Kilar] What role did the Military Council for National Salvation play vis-a-vis the state bodies and political authorities?

[Kiszczak] The council coordinated and executed the tasks of martial law. The council was a temporary body, one that did not take over any duties of any body of people's power.

The council was a military-political institution that was independent of state and political bodies, but one that strengthened the structures of state administration, inspired various activities of this administration at all levels, saw that the enactments of martial law were observed, and sponsored and ensured the effective implementation of the activities that helped stabilize and normalize the sociopolitical life of the country. All the council activities were subordinated to the necessity to put an end to anarchy, to frustrate the counterrevolutionary plans for a fratricidal conflict, and to create conditions for socialist renewal and for overcoming the country's crisis.

Accordingly, at its meetings the council discussed the country's problems 14 times, especially security, public law and order, and connected issues involving administrative authorities. Five times it discussed the struggle against crime and various forms of social wrongdoing and seven times, the functioning of the national economy, especially its improvement through the economic reform.

Other crucial items discussed by the council were the issues of the rebirth of the trade union movement on socialist foundations, cadre policy, and social assistance for the various groups of society that were especially affected by the crisis and Western sanctions.

The council carried out its activities through the military plenipotentionary commissars of the National Defense Committee. Some of them were in charge of them were in charge of the military operational groups.

[Kepinski, Kilar] Where did the military commissars operate?

[Kiszczak] The commissars operated in ministries and central offices; in voivodships, towns, and districts; and in communes in places of work. During the period from 13 December 1981 to the end of May 1982, operating throughout the country there were a total of 2,149 military commissars, plenipotentiaries of the Committee for National Defense, and several thousand professional and basic service soldiers serving under them in operational groups. The activities of commissars and operational groups encompassed 225 towns and 1,105 places of work.

At this point it is worth recalling how useful the work of military operational groups was for the functioning of the country in the fall of 1981.

The military commissars supervised the execution of tasks set out by the Military Council for National Salvation, and the leading organs of the state authoritites and administration. They provided comprehensive assistance to the organs to which they were assigned and understood coordinating activities in the field of interinstitutional cooperation and joint action.

A special area of their activity comprised active participation in ensuring the proper functioning of transportation and communication systems, the energy industry, and gas and other pipelines, and in exercising supervision over the militarization of those areas of the national economy covered by a State Council decree.

An important role was also played by the Armed Forces' Inspectorate which performed control activities in the national economy and administration.

[Depinski, Kilar] What are your thoughts on and assessments of the results of the work of the Military Council for National Salvation?

[Kiszczak] The activities of the Military Council for National Salvation and its executive cells enjoyed broad social acceptance. A stop was put o anarchy, the process of economic collapse was arrested, and there arose a realistic vision for leading Poland out of its worst crisis in the postwar period. By its actions and decisions, the Military Council for National Salvation contributed to the emergence, during martial law, of conditions which brought about the creation of the Citizens' Committees for National Salvation through a grass-roots initiative. Its actions and decisions also led to the formation of a platform for national accord based on the supreme interests of the socialist sate. A determined campaingn was launched against criminality, parasitism corruption, mismanagement, cliquishness, and incompetence. During just one year of martial law 809 personnel changes were made at the managerial and leadership levels.

Martial law, which lasted for 585 days (221 days being suspended), was a period of fundamental importance for Poland: It marked a turning point. Martial law was introduced in the name of national salvation and, at the same time, it thwarted processes that posed a danger to European and world peace.

The work of the PPR Armed Forces played an improtant and historic role. Our Armed Forces were particularly well-qualified to perform such a role. The forces have always enjoyed and continue to enjoy the respect and favor of society, these feelings have been brought about by the many generations of soldiers who have fought for national liveration and the implementation of revolutionary social changes in our country.

[Kepinski, Kilar] When and in what circumstances was it decided that the Ministry of Internal Affairs should commence activities in connection with martial law?

[Kiszczak] The proverbial "i" was dotted by General Wojciech Jaruzelski during a conversation with me at about 14.20 on 12 December 1981. A similar conversation took place with Army General Florian Siwicki. These conversations focused on final preparations for the commencement of activities. A few minutes after my conversation with General W. Jaruzelski a coded message was dispatched to voivodship commanders of the Citizens' Militia. They had little time to assemble forces and means, and to assign detailed tasks to their appropriate commanding subordinates.

All activities were conducted in close coordination and agreement with the Citizens' Militia.

[Kepinski, Kilar] You have also spoken about the activities of the Ministry of Internal Affairs during martial law in Sejm speeches. Viewed from the perspective of today, how would you describe the characteristic features of the ministry's work under such exceptional circumstances.

[Kiszczak] During martial law, the Ministry of Internal Affairs performed, above all, its fundamental and statutory tasks and functions related to preserving internal state security, maintaining public order, combating crime, and protecting the safety of the individual. The characteristic features of these activities were not of a different kind but under the conditions of martial law their improtance and scope increased.

[Kepinski, Kilar] one often encounters the view that, having obtained greater repressive powers with marital law, the Ministry of Internal Affairs was only too pleased to make the greatest possible use of them. Is this an over simplifiaction?

[Kiszczak] It is not a question of "simplification" -- the view is fundamentally mistaken. In exercising the tasks assigned it by the party, the state authorities, and the military Council for National Salvation, our ministry was serving society.

I would like to stress that our tasks were performed in such a way as to ensure that the enhanced measures of martial law had the least possible impact on the routine of public life, so that the majority of citizens who were in no way responsible for the emergence of such a dangerous internal situation, but were bound by universally applicable restrictions and penalties, were affected as little as possible. On the initiative of our ministry, many of the burdensome features of martial regulations were removed as soon as possible. When objective circumstances did not compel us to do otherwise, we deliberately made no use of many of the provisions of the martial law regulations.

[Kepinski, Kilar] When you were compelled to use these provisions, what was done to avoid needless repression?

[Kiszczak] The one solution in these instances lay in sufficiently broad and effective prevention. For example: During the first 4 and 1/2 months of martial law, representatives of the ministry conducted 100,000 conversations intended to prevent and warn. Thanks to this it was possible to prevent many people from becoming involved in negative activities. Thus, they avoided the consequences to which they would have been exposed had they broken the law. It is worth recalling that during this time the internal force, and subversive Western radio stations in particular, were openly inciting and provoking their listeners with instructions by telling them about the dates and forms of antistate "protest" actions. Under these circumstances many people felt lost and disoriented, all the more so because the negative consequences of antistate indoctrination were still in evidence, indoctrination that was conducted relentlessly and on a mass scale before martial law was declared.

The preventive activities conducted by the ministry were carried out in accordance with the principle of "struggle and accord," the realization of national accord in mind.

And here is another, I believe, convincing example. Several dozen illegal groups and structures -- especially those formed to operate among workers -- were eliminated without recourse to criminal or administrative measures, thanks to preventive activities, thanks to argumentation and to convincing people during the course of numerous conversations and other measures of a nonrepressive kind.

[Kepinski, Kilar] The "thorough sealing" of all borders and an almost complete ban on foreign travel are often cited as examples of the restrictions imposed by martial law.

[Kiszczak] That is not true. This is another unobjective opinion that is currently circulating. Despite the obvious increased rigors called for by the interests of the state at that time, the Internal Affairs Ministry's passport policy was flexible. In 1982, 1,019,436 persons received passports and went abroad, 339,697 travelled to capitalist countries. What is more, passports were being issued on compassionate grounds from the very beginning of martial law A few weeks later it was possible to receive exit documents on receipt of an invitation from close relatives living abroad or for the purpose of participating in organized tourism.

[Kepinski, Kilar] It is known that army units, which are the successors of the Internal Security Corps, are based in the Ministry of Internal Affairs. Did these soldiers perform ministry responsibilities during martial law?

[Kiszczak] When the need arose, troops of the Ministry of Internal Affairs Vistula Units, because those are the troops in question, and the Frontier Guard, performed certain public order functions in public places.

One can still see troops in navy blue-edged uniform in patrols which take care of the safety of rail passengers and guard against theft of rail cargo, and during campaigns such as "Posesja" and many other situations in which the Citizens' Militia requires support.

Serving society does not end, however, when a patrol is over. Soldiers in units which came under the ministry took part in work in the national economy, especially in forestry, in harvests, and other similar operations. During the most difficult period, when there was still no stabilization of the foodstuff market, agricultural work performed by our ministry's troops yielded results in the form of the supply of almost 5,000 metric tonnes of cattle — an amount which satisfies the annual needs of a city with a population of 100,000 in accordance with the amounts allowed under rationing. There is no need for me to explain how important this help was in a difficult situation, especially during the first months of martial law.

[Kepinski, Kilnar] If you agree, let us return to the first moments of martial law. When and how was the Polish primate, Cardinal Glemp, informed of the decision to introduce martial law?

[Kiszczak] On the night of 13 December 1981, the primate received Kazimierz Barcikowski, the cochairman of the Joint Government and Episcopate Commission; Minister Jerzy Kuberski; and General of Brigade Marian Ryba. They informed the primate of the decision to introduce martial law and explained why such a decision had been made.

[Kepinski, Kilnar] What are your recollections of the first hours of martial law?

[Kiszczak] I recall, above all, an extraordinary tension. The minutes passed, it was after 2400 on 12 December 1981 and the meeting of the Solidarity National Commission in Gdansk was being extended. Martial law activities were already occurring throughout the country. Some army units were regrouping, other units were already occupying important state and administrative buildings and principal communication routes. Communications, radio, and television as well as important installations were placed under the protection of joint army and militia groups. A problem arose: Should the building in which the national commission was meeting be entered and the participants detained? Should such a risk be taken. It was decided not to enter.

[Kepinski, Kilnar] Why was it decided not to take over the building in which the meeting was being held?

[Kiszczak] We had sufficient forces and means to carry out such an operation. However, with General Jaruzelski's agreement, I advised General Jerzy Andrzejewski, the Citizens' Militia voivodship commander in Gdansk, to halt a column of the Motorized Citizens' Militia Reserve that was heading from Wejherowo in the direction of the Gdansk "Lenin" shipyard, where the Solidarity leadership was meeting. The column was halted about 1 and 1/2 kilometers away from the shipyard. The national commission was meeting under the protection of special teams of bodyguards. Thus, it would have been necessary to use force, which meant that there was a real danger of bloodshed. We did not want this to happen, and I think we acted correctly.

[Kepinski, Kilnar] Nevertheless, the national commission's members were arrested....

[Kiszczak] The members of the national commission were interned more than 1 and 1/2 hours later. It was decided to wait until the members began to disperse. Had it been decided to enter the building during the meeting, none of those present would have been able to evade arrest.

Not one of those who several months later, in April 1982, produced the initiative to set up a Temporary Coordinating Commission, would have been free. Nevertheless, I believe that the caution and restraint which was shown then was right and justified.

[Kepinski, Kilnar] Was there not a danger that the operation of introducing martial law would fail? After all, the leaders of Solidarity did say that they had the support of 10,000,000 people.

[Kiszczak] We knew perfectly well how and why so many people joined Solidarity cells. I think that we all know what political and psychological mechanisms were used in the manipulation of people who joined the union. These mechanisms are shown in Roman Wionczek's film "Godnosc." It makes a deep impression thanks to the convincing portrayal of confusion and even tragedies within families which have been split by disagreements and quarrels brought about by the activities of a manipulator.

I think the following important fact is worth noting: Before the introduction of martial law thousands of people, most of whom were workers, were called up by the Motorized Citizens' Militia Reserve. Very quickly almost 100 percent of those called up came forward. These units played an important role in, inter alia, interning; ensuring order in places of work; in eliminating strike attempts; and in ensuring public order. There were no cases of a refusal to obey orders. The actions were resolute and effective. Yet among these thousands of people were members of Solidarity. Does this not show who introduced martial law and against whom?

It was an act of national self-defense in the fullest sense of the word, against an attempt to attack the nation's most vital interests. By their actions, the majority of Polish society showed itself to be in favor of order, peace, and security in Poland. This attitude made it possible to introduce martial law with painful but few losses.

There is, however, a justifiable belief that particularly the Washington administration, and other Western "observers" who are not favorably disposed toward us, did not believe that the Polish Army and the organs of power assisted by patriotic social forces would be able to find understanding for this decision on the part of the responsible majority of Polish society and the many members of Solidarity, and that they would be able to bring the situation under control by their own efforts. Their lack of belief in the political wisdom and patriotism of Poles turned out to be a compromising political mistake: This gave rise to an attitude toward Poland full of irritation and disappointment during martial law.

[Kepinski, Kilnar] Matters concerning internment are still being brought up. Reports of "thousands of people detained outside in frosty conditions, without a roof over their heads, in sports stadiums, and soaked with water," -- sometimes sensational and distressing reports -- are repeated....

[Kiszczak] At one time such nonsense was frequently voiced. Now not even Radio Free Europe allows itself to spread such reports. These things were said by our enemies, subversive radio stations, illegal brochures and pamphlets which breathe hatred. No one has decided to retract these lies. In actual fact it was officers and functionaries who were out in the frost weather, under the open sky, discharging their duty with conviction and devotion. Those who were interned were kept in adequately heated and furnished accomodations and were assured of basic and humanitarian living conditions. They were most often specially prepared prison quarters in which there was a less severe regime. Thus, there was neither comfort nor luxury but neither were the conditions as reported by hostile propaganda. In addition to penal establishments, holiday centers were also used as internment centers, for example, Goldap in Jawor, and the miners' center in Kokut.

The average standard was therefore satisfactory and some people, for example, Lech Walesa, can have no cause for complaint about their conditions in isolation; they were comfortable.

[Kepinski, Kilnar] And what kind of conditions did the other internees have?

[Kiszczak] At a time when the crisis was at its peak, when it was difficult to buy matches or soap, the internees did, for a certain time, find themselves in a privileged position. A big charity operation was launched. We did not interfere with the operation at all. On the contrary, we created better conditions for it and made it easier for the Polish Red Cross and the International Red Cross to become acquainted with the conditions under which interness were being held. I have no intention of trying to convince anyone that being isolated, especially from one's family, is pleasant, or that those who were interned have any reason to praise the authorities. Nevertheless, all demagogic claims, accusations, and charges of maltreatment are lies. On 16 February 1982, a note appeared in TRYBUN LADU under the headline "Deaf to the Truth, Receptive to Falsehood" in which inter alia, that "because Adam Michnik has been suffering from a gastric complaint, (for a long time now, and not since 13 December, to remove any doubt), a special meal is prepared for him every day in a convent and is then delivered to the internment center where he is held."

[Kepinski, Kilnar] In a word then -- was the Western press deliberately lying?

[Kiszczak] There is no doubt about that. Those sensational and horrific articles appeared in its columns, those "thousands being kept in stadiums during frosts and soaked with cold water..." The record for stupidity and flasehood, and I do not hesitate to describe it so, was broken by what is regarded as a serious paper, LE MONDE which published the following report in its 22 December 1981 edition:

"The death of Tadeusz Mazowiecki. Workers, intellectuals, fought together and are dying together in the coal mines, the streets, and the concentration camps of General Jaruzelski ( ) Tadeusz Mazowiecki died in just such a camp ( ) he left three sons orphans ( ) he will be remembered in Polish history." [Signed] Krzysztof Pomian.

I surely do not have to add that neither LE MONDE nor KRZYSZTOF POMIAN corrected this nonsense. The deceased Tadeusz Mazowiecki had nothing to say in the matter. I would like to stress that the internment operation did run into difficulties, which is hard to avoid in an operation of that size and in a sociopolitical climate such as the one that existed then. Mistakes were quickly remedied, some internees were released almost immediately. Besides, we are all familiar with the practice of releasing internees one at a time, or in entire groups, as soon as circumstances and the general social situation permit.

[Kepinski, Kilnar] Taking into account the effectiveness, efficiency, and undoubted necessity of introducing martial law, on the basis of experience, would you describe yourself as an advocate of sloutions that rely on force?

[Kiszczad] No, I am definitely not an advocate of such solutions. I believe that political problems should be solved by political means. Repression is a last resort. We should conduct dialogue, we should talk to and reach an understanding with whomever is not consciously and deliberately harming socialist Poland and its position in the owrld. There is no one to whom we bar the way to participate in the creation of our motherland's tomorrow. As Wojciech Jaruzelski said: We did not ask where people came from and even more will we not ask about that today.

[Kepinski, Kilnar] In your interview for TRYBUNA LUDU you said that you "do not kick someone who is down". Does this apply to the opposition of today?

[Kiszczad] This description applied to the years 1981-83 above all. In accordance with martial law legislation; and party, government and Sejm directives; and in keeping with the expectations of the majority of society, we undertook to isolate political opponents and eliminate their influence on the social and occupational groups and communities in which they were operating. However, we were never motivated by a desire for "revenge." We never lacked patience.

[Kepinski, Kilnar] In view of this, it is charged that the enemies of socialism "are tolerated."

[Kiszczak] We fight against our opponents as long as they conduct hostile activities, but when they cease to fight we are understanding, and we try to forget their guilt. On many occasions I personally received family members of those who were interned or under arrest and whenever possible, I always tried to help them and to understand people's dilemmas and misfortunes. It suffices to cite the example of Jan Jozef Lipinski, a member of the Social Self-Defense Committee and the Workers' Defense Committee, a man who has bveen known for his anticommunist activities for years, and someone who is unrelenting in his hostility toward the system, the authorities and the party. Although the evidence assembled in his case fully justified his isolation, he was freed on the grounds of ill health, and with our assistance he was issued a passport and was able to travel freely to London for treatment. Incidentally, his health does not prevent him from being actively involved in particularly exhausting opposition activities and not only in that.

There were also cases where our understanding and readiness to help was disregarded, when we were, quite simply, deceived. Let us just take the example of Jan Litynski, an exceptionally active member of the former Social Self-Defense Committee and the Workers' Defense Committee. In response to a request form his mother, whom I received in a state of distress and in tears, he was given permission to leave prison to attend his daughters' first communion. This was to have a salutary effect on her state of health. I personally asked the minister of justice for such permission. Unfortunately, Litynski did not return to the penal institution. He used the opportunity to go "underground." He is still in hiding and engaged in activities that run counter to the law. Jacek Kuron behaved differently. He was released from prison for longer in view of a family tragedy. He continues to hold positions that are hostile and alien to us, although life has cancelled out all his plans and calculations. As far a I know, he is becoming increasingly aware of this.

[Kepinski, Kilnar] Does that mean that the "opposition" no longer exists and is not dangerous? What in fact is "opposition" under our conditions?

[Kiszczak] It is impossible to present a full picture of the so-called opposition in Poland since World War II in such a short conversation. However, one basic conclusion emerges from the observation made so far; the theoretical concepts behind antisocilaist activity in Poland were never formed in our country and, what is even more important, they were actively supported from outside. Therefore, the concept of "opposition" assumes a cartoon-like form when it comes from the lips of our adversaries. Can one apply the name opposition to those who deliberately ruined the economy and are undermining the foundations of the state, and who are in fact allied to revisionist circles, grabbing fistfuls of foreign money for their services, and in the end fleeing the country in order to attach themselves t subversive circles? Is this "opposition" in any political sense, or is it quite simply a hostile political agency? I will let this be a rhetorical question.

However a considerable number of those who involved themselves or are still involving themselves in negative political activity, unaware of its nature and purpose to the very end, must today be regarded as "people who can be won back." Those who acted wrongly but in good faith always come back in the end. They only need to be helped, and they are always entitled tko expect such help. We do not combat the views of anyone, even if they are very different from ours. But we do prevent, curb, and eliminate activity that harms Poland, the state, and people.

[Kepinski, Kilar] So should the "opposition" be viewed as a hostile agency?

[Kiszczak] There is no doubt that those who take money from the West for their services are quite simply political agents of anticommunism. Can you imagine an opposition activist in the United States, Great Britain, or France stepping on the interests of his country, agreeing to the ruin of its economy, welcoming with joy restrictions aimed against his own people, and conveying to the Polish Embassy, for example, political and economic information enabling us to compete effectively on world markets and thus harming his own country's foreign trade?

[Kepinski, Kilar] Perhaps this is not classic espionage, but no one will convince me that information on the location of military units, output by some factories, employment figures, and so on is all for the purpose of conducting trade union activity. And this is the kind of valuable infomration that the Pentagon and CIA buy from alleged trade unionists for the proverbial few pennies. In any case, the entire cooperation between what is left of the so-called underground in Poland and anti-Polish groups in the West is based on agent-like methods -- ciphers, secret messages, and the most modern electronics. Besides, no secret is made of this in the West, and the leaders of the oppostion and post-Solidarity underground are fully aware of who gives them their money and for what purpose.

[Kepinski, Kilar] What is the extent of the West's financial aid for the "oppostion" in Poland?

[Kiszczak] The figures that have been published are merely a camouflage and the tip of the iceberg because official reports by various Western foundatons quote millions of dollars in aid for "those fighting for democracy" in Poland. The extent of the financial "aid" for professionals in the opposition is quite clearly illustrated by the "Pewex" [chain of hard-currency shops] way of life of many of them and by their long-lasting aversion to honest work.

[Kepinski, Kilar] How large do you think the so-called underground is?

[Kiszczak] I normally give current data on the so-called underground in my Sejm speeches. These figures are of course unstable. The underground is steadily "contracting" and dying. This is caused not only by our perventive activity, but also today are altering their views and attitudes. There is a growing feeling of emptiness and senselessnes among them. We are quite well acquainted with the leaders of the "underground," whatever the scale of their activity.

[Kepinski, Kilar] So why are you not eliminating the underground? What possibilities of action does it have today?

[Kisczcak] We are applying a flexible penal policy, within the framework of the law of course. We know that the foreign adversaries of Poland rely on a "dark" picture of our country as a country of terror, and that is why every arrest made or sentence passed vis-a-vis those committing a crime or misdemeanor for so-called political motivations interests them. In any case, they seize any opportunity to suggest that such motivations exist, even when the arrest or sentence was for purely criminal reasons.

On the other hand, everyone who submitted to manipulation and let himself be tied up in illegal activity possesses a family -- mother, father, brother, sister, children; studies, works, and so on.

We do not want to create aversions and prejudice. We do not want to eliminate this negative activity solely with the aid of repressive measures, but mainly by political means. We only apply repressive measures when there is no other way and when any act of magnanimity whatsoever would conflict with a social feeling of justice. We treat these ultimate decisions as a warning too theirs. You may assess the possibilities and "strength" of the underground yourselves, gentlemen. It is enough to compare the series of stormy forecasts and appeals with the fiasco of carrying them out in practice. The conspirators are not very successful. Nevertheless they try to remind others of their presence now and then, or else there will be no dollars for them. The broad and increasingly profound process of sociopolitical normalization is pushing them more and more into the sidelines, and we are concerned with continuing this trend.

[Kepinski, Kilar] You have spoken to emissaries from the underground. What were these talks like? What were they about?

[Kiszczak] As I have already said, in their domestic policy the Polish authorities have adopted the principle of resolving a socioeconomic crisis by political means, in other words by force of argument, not by force itself. That is why I have spoken to many people you describe as emissaries of the underground, and I am not avoiding future talks. I will speak to anyone if this is of advantage to Poland and the cause I serve. Because of the rules adopted by both sides on which the effects of each talk depend, I cannot reveal any details of these talks. I can only express my surprise that although some of my interlocutors admitted that many of my arguments and suggestions were right, they later would not or could not implement them in practice. Perhaps they were quite simply forbidden to do so, though the very fact that they left the meeting place without any hindrance should have given them much food for thought.

[Kepinski, Kilar] In our talk with Professor Henryk Jablonski we discussed the fate of Azev, the great agent provocateur working for the Tsarist police. I am recalling this because this is a tried and tested method used by an apparatus of force, although it is ineffective in the face of a revolution, just like all other methods. Have you heard the rumor circulating in Poland that Lech Walesa was shipped in a container to the Gdansk Shipyard by Security Service officials on 15 August 1980?

[Kiszczak] You are right when you say that the social leftwing has always rejected provocation because it brings discredit on oneself and is ineffective in achieving the goal -- social revolution. In its work, the Interior Ministry firmly rules out the use of provocation. However, it is true that we gather news that interests us while performing our statutory tasks, and it is true that we use confidential sources of information, among other things. For obvious reasons, everything about these persons is a close secret and so I have nothing more to say on this subject.

[Kepinski, Kilar] By the way, how much does the Ministry of Internal Affairs spend on protecting Walesa?

In the spring of 1983 Walesa took me for a drive around the Tricity (Gdansk, Gdynia, Sopot) and I gained the impression that he depends on personal security, and in this respect cooperates with your underlings.

[Kiszczak] Everyone knows that Walesa has reported se veral attempts on his life to the peacekeeping bodies. He says that there were such attempts during his trip to the West in 1980-81. Our press has written about some of them, they were untrue. Even before martial law, the security service protected Walesa with his consent. He ought to remember quite well his talk on this subject with General K. in the suite of a Gdansk hotel shortly before the Solidarity congress.

There are people in Poland who have threatened his career and remain his rivals. They have even lent public expression to their ill feelings toward him. There are two or three "pretenders" in the Tricity alone. In any case, it is not his function they are concerned with, but the big money connected with it, especially the money that is colored green. Others have their own reasons for not loving Walesa, for example Anna Walenty nowicz. In a situation like this we cannot exclude the possibility of provocation attempts against Walesa which, as we know, the political adversary would blame on the authorities, or the Ministry of Internal Affairs to be more precise. No doubt the loudest cries would come from those likely to profit from this. That is why we have arranged to protect his person. I can say that Walesa's cooperation with my underlings in Gdansk is harmonious and is perhaps to the satisfaction of both sides.

[Kepinski, Kilar] Information is indeed the basis of intelligence work. We know from radio broadcasts in December 1981, from the National Consultative Commission (KKP) meeting in Radom, and from conferences of underground leaders after the introduction of martial law that the Security Service had its collaborators in the ranks of Solidarity. Who were these people?

[Kiszczak] I do not hide the fact that the Security Service performed quite a thorough reconaissance of the underground in the country and of its foreign agencies. The main role here was played by counterintelligence and intelligence people inside domestic and foreign organizational structures. Naturally, their cover there is deep.

[Kepinski, Kilar] Will we ever learn their names?

[Kiszczak] Revealing certain names would come as a shock. For understandable reasons we will not do this. But if in the opinion of the state leadership the need for this arises, we will reveal to society not the names, but some of the material these persons have gathered.

[Kepinski, Kilar] And what does this material consist of?

[Kiszczak] I can only say that it would reveal in full the true anti-Polish nature of the underground and opposition, its ties with foreign intelligence, and the faintheartedness and moral collapse of the leaders and sympathizers of the "democratic opposition," as it is flatteringly called over there.

[Kepinski, Kilar] Could you give examples of sentences passed on traitors who escaped abroad? When will the death sentences passed on Rurarz and Spasowski be carried out?

[Kiszczak] I cannot give you such examples because quite simply there are none. Unlike some so-called democratic capitalist countries, the socialsit Polish state does not resort to such methods as investigation and execution "on its own initiative" of the supreme measure of justice toward traitors to the fatherland outside Poland's border.

From a technical point of view, there would be no trouble in finding paid murderers in the "democratic" world. In any case, the Spasowskis and Rurarz's of this world are only protected in the initial stage, when their "heads" are still "full." Later these heads are no longer protected, and why should they be? Let them worry about their heads themselves. I can assure you that they do not sleep easy.

[Kepinski, Kilar] So all they can be afraid of today is their own conscience?

[Kiszczak] Let us not joke. A traitor has no fatherland, and therefore no conscience either.

[Kepinski, Kilar] Many opinions are to be heard about your close contacts with the church hierarchy. What are these contacts really like? What do they involve?

[Kiszczak] The first official contacts of interest to you with representatives of the hierarchy occurred shortly after the introduction of martial law. At that time I met with Franciszek Cardinal Macharski, bishop of Krakow, a person of dignity and honor. However, I share the liveliest contacts with Archbishop Bronislaw Dabrowski, secretary of the Polish Episcopate, whose political culture and receptiveness to argumentation I value very highly. We discussed and still discuss together many issues and individual problems, seeking possibilities of solving them. The talks are sometimes difficult and the stances are controversial. The majority of the issues discussed have been successfully resolved, thanks to flexibility and a joint desire to seek a purposeful compromise.

I always say that politics is the art of compromise.

[Kepinski, Kilar] No doubt the killing of Father J. Popieluszko had a great influence on state-church relations. Is there anything today that one can add to the official assessments of this deed?

[Kiszczak] I do not think there is much one can add. Whatever the subjective motives of the perpetrators of this deed, from an objective point of view the killing of Father Popieluszko possessed the characteristics of political provocation directed against the policy of the party and government. It was also a blow to the Interior Ministry from where the perpetrators came.

[Kepinski, Kilar] How did the ministry receive and assess this deed? What do officials in the Citizens Militia and the Security Service think about it?

[Kiszczak] This deed met with immediate and total condemnation. Party organizations and individual collectives have expressed this.

[Kepinski, Kilar] Do you think the killing has seriously weakened the Ministry of Internal Affairs' apparatus?

[Kiszczak] There is no doubt that revealing a serious crime committed by the employees of some institution has a negative effect on the opinion enjoyed by this institution and on its functioning, and the prestige of the institution itself is exposed to serious damage. One cannot fail to notice a clear sign of this in this case.

The killing was carried out by employees of the security service, and it is this service that stands guard over security and protects constitutional principles, as well as the rights and duties stemming from them. Therefore, this service is more exposed than any other to attacks from political adversaries and enemies of People's Poland intent on altering this constitutional order.

And let us look at what the ministry and this service did when Father Popieluszko was kidnapped and disappeared, for this was the first known fact. Immediately it started nationwide searches. It discovered the perpetrators in a very short time, even though they were employed in it. Together with the prosecutor's office, it revealed full details of their action and all the circumstances behind the killing. Every objectively minded person has to admit that this kind of activity by the ministry exonerates it from blane for this deed and that the deed itself cannot spoil its reputation or diminish its social prestige.

I believe that, though this is a certain paradox, this type of work performed by the ministry increases its credibility in the eyes of society. For it also proves that deeds for which the ministry is sometimes blamed could not have happened, because they would have been immediately discovered under a similar procedure.

[Kepinski, Kilar] And was the apparatus not weakened?

[Kiszczak] Perhaps instead of giving a straight answer I will share some of the observations and feelings of that time.

I sensed an increase in discipline and a universal conviction as to the need to achieve better work results and serve society better.

Neither did I encounter a desire to resign and leave the ministry, nor was there a slowdown in the intake of new cadres. So if someone thinks the killing of Father Popieluszko and the accompanying events are weakening the Interior Ministry apparatus, I must disappoint him. All kinds of drastic events occur inside every community, but they cannot provide a basis for far-reaching generalizations.

[Kepinski, Kilar] But generalizations like this used to be made and still are.

[Kisczcak] We know. I can assure you that the authorities firmly avoided hasty generalizations, even though one could have found pretexts for them, as in the case of the killing of Senior Militia Sargeant Zdzislaw Karos, father of two small children, in which Father Sylwester Sych was an accomplice and Stanislaw Matejczuk, a student at the Catholic University of Lublin, an accessory.

[Kepinski, Kilar] An atrocity, especially a murder, shakes public opinion. A huge shock to the world recently was the killing of Olof Palme. Many articles in the West criticized the incompetence of the Swedish police both as far as protecting the prime minister and the investigations themselves are concerned. I read in one Western journal that the prosecutor in charge of the investigations resigned because he had "encountered obstacles on the part of those who should rather help him." As head of the criminal services, what do you think of this issue -- was it really incompetence, or... I hesitate to say.

[Kiszczak] I do not feel qualified to comment. But if it were my professional duty to explain the mystery behind the death of the great Swedish politician, then first of all I would dismiss all the working hypotheses and ask the basic question necessary during the investigation -- cui bono, in other words, who profited by the fact that Olof Palme, a spokesman for common sense, moderation, detente, and European cooperation, was eliminated from the European political scene.

[Kepinski, Kilar] As a party activist and minister of internal affairs, what is a subject of special concern to you today?

[Kiszczak] Most of all the socialist state's security, the limitation of crime, and the personal safety of all citizens. I feel responsible not only as the head of the ministry, but also morally. This feeling stems from an understanding of what it means to serve society, which is still struggling with so many daily problems. Our concern is common -- the struggle against waste, incompetence, paratisism, and many other social plagues such as alcoholism, drug addiction, and the corruption of minors. I believe that together we will succeed in limiting and overcoming these phenomena.

SZALAJDA INTERVIEWED ON NUCLEAR POLICY

[Interview with Zbigniew Szalajda, PZPR Council of Ministers deputy chairman, by unidentified correspondent in Warsaw on 17 June; recorded]

[Text] [Announcer] Members of the Sejm Science and Technological Progress Commission were acquainted today with the report of the government commission set up following the Ukrainian nuclear power station breakdown.

[Szalajda] This report is made up of three parts. The first contains documents concerning our state of radiological protection before the Chernobyl breakdown, the second part deals with our actions during the breakdown, and third, the most important chapter of the report, which we concentrated on most and which will be the object of work of all meetings of all agencies and government institutions, deals with the future -- the matter of all our actions in Poland, the close international cooperation, very close cooperation with those who are involved in joint construction with us, tht is, CEMA countries and the Soviet Union, very close contact with the IAEA which has now assumed the leading role in the provisin of conditions for safe use of nuclear power stations.

[Correspondent] But Mr Premier, you are talking about our nuclear power station under construction.

[Szalajda] Yes, you have interrupted me as I was just about to say that all our activities in cooperation and coordination with the IAEA -- this is the most important part of our report -- are concentrated, about all, on joint activities to create an international system of warning and information on breakdowns, second, on the adoption of the convention on the joint and rapid liquidation of results of breakdowns and, most important, on all action aiming at providing the nuclear power stations in general, and in particular the two nuclear power stations of the near future -- the one in Zarnowiec and the other one -- with all safety elements.

[Correspondent] The Sejm deputies were acquainted today with the report of your commission. What happens next?

[Szalajda] Next, on Friday, 20 June, the report will be presented to the Council of Ministers. It contains proposals and the proposal of a resolution for the Council of Ministers, a very concrete and precise resolution which above all, would take into consideration the whole range of suggestions included in the report.

COUNCIL OF HIGHER MILITARY EDUCATION MEETS

AU040940 Warsaw ZOLNIERZ WOLNOSCI in Polish 6 Jun 86 pp 1, 5

[Report signed 'Jas']

[Text] The Council of Higher Military Education held a plenary session in Warsaw on 5 June, under the chairmanship of Army General Florian Siwicki, PZPR Politburo candidate member and minister of national defense. The meeting was devoted to tasks involved in a further organizational improvement to higher military education; advancement of cadres; and improving the military, scientific, and academic qualifications of cadres.

The meeting was attended by vice ministers of national defense, heads of central institutions governed by the Ministry of National Defense, leaders of the armed services, commandants of military academies and higher officer schools, and directors of military research institutes.

The talks were based on a previously prepared "Assessment of the Prospects for Improving the Organizational Structures of Higher Military Education Against the Background of Educational-Scientific Functions and in Light of Statutory Requirements and Recommendations Issued by the Council Chairman -- the Minister of National Defense."

During the comprehensive discussion, sometimes controversial but constructive, it was pointed out that it is possible to accelerate the process of improving the organizational structures of higher officer schools. The basic condition necessary for this has been fulfilled.

There is already a considerable increase in the number of cadres in military adacemies and civilian educational institutions is also continuing. The number of independent academic employees within higher military education is also rising. However, the continuation of these positive trends within the present distribution of cadres requires certain programmatic and organizational changes in the system of education.

At the same time, the discussion stressed, it is very important for military colleges, and hence their academic employees, not to deviate from the practice of training the Armed Forces. Their academic work should be adopted to the reality of the Army and be close to the lives, service, and duties of soldiers.

Right now, changes caused by the amendmnt to the law on higher education, research establishments, and academic titles and degrees are taking place inside all higher officer schools and research establishments.

The council was informed about work on an amendment to the law on higher military education. The draft amendment will be put before the Sejm this year.

The council also discussed reports on the implementation of the instructions issued by the council chairman the minister of national defense these reports being contained in the minutes of plenary sessions.

Also examined was a program of subsequent council sessions, worked out on the basis of thematic proposals addressed by council members to General of Brigrade Leslaw Dudek, the council's secretary. The next council session wil be devoted to the tasks of higher military education in the light of the resolutions of the 10th PZPR Congress.

CEAUSESCU HEARS REPORT ON BUCHAREST PARTY WORK

[Text] Bucharest AGERPRES 18/6/1986 -- On Wednesday, June 18, Nicolae Ceausescu had a working meeting with the members of the bureau of the Bucharest Municpal Committee of the RCP.

During the meeting, the first secretary of the municipal committee, Constantin Olteanu, as well as other members of the bureau of the Bucharest Municipal Committee of the RCP reported on the activity unfolded and the measures taken for an optimal fulfilment of the production tasks incumbent on the industrial units in the capital city, on the way in which operations have been performed this year in Ilfov agricultural district, as well as on the steps taken for the realization of the investment projects, the planning programmes and schemes for Bucharest's administration and urban development. Morewver, the speakers made critical and sef-critical analyses of the activity unfolded by the capital city's party organization for party work as a whole to live up to the great requirements and exigencies placed before party organizations and all working collectivities in the capital city. On the occasion there have been highlighted a series of good results achieved in industry and agriculture and in the other domains of the economic and social activity and there has been pointed out the resolve in which work is being done to immediately eradicate certain shortcomings that still persist in certain sectors, to take all the activities to a superior standard of quality and efficiency.

Nicolae Ceausescu considered that as a whole the capital city achieved a series of good results which, though, through a better organization of labour, could have een better, in keeping with the modern means and the powerful technical and material base of the municipality. The party general secretary laid stress on the need to work more firmly for the application of the programmes for enterprise orgainization and modernization, for improving the technial and quality standards of products, and showed there is a need, to this end, for a wide mobilization of all the technical and scientific forces in the capital city. The party general secretary stressed the need for all the measures to be taken to turn out entirely and under conditions of best quality the production meant to be exported, this being a most important target that should permanently focus the preoccupations of all the party and state bodies and organizations in the capital city.

Emphasis was placed on the importance of intensifying the political-educative work for the fulfilment of the plan provisions, the cutting down of the energy, raw materials and auxiliary materials consumptions, the increase of labour productivity and products' quality, a higher economic efficiency in all domains of activity. IN this sense, nicolae Ceausescu stressed that the main criterion of assessment of the party activity is -- and must be -- the concrete results scored in the fulfilment of the plan, of the tasks regarding the country's socioeconomic development. Referring to the activity in the Ilfov agriculture sector Nicolae Ceausescu recommended that operative measures be taken for the gathering of the crop the soonest and without loss.

During the meeting, the RCP general secretary, referring to the problems of the municipality's systematization, development of urban amenities and proper administration, requested that firm measures be taken for these activities to proceed in the best of conditions, so that Bucharest may become a model of administrative and urban organization, a modern capital in every respect. In this context, he requested that the programmes of development of services to the population be recondsidered and futher improved. Stressing that in this five-period bucharest will know an intensive, quality, really new development from all points of view, the RCP general secretary expressed his belief that the city party organization would work most responsibly, in a revolutionary spirit for the fulfillment of all its tasks, for a growing contribution of the capital to the country's socio-economic development.

ARMY'S LC ORGANIZATION COMMITTEE MEETS

[Text] Belgrade, 18 Jun (TANJUG) -- A second session of the Committee of the LC Organization in the Yugoslav People's Army was held in Belgrade today. It focussed on topical issues concerning the moral and political situation in the Yugoslav People's Army and also on the tasks of communists and LC organs and organizations in the coming period.

The committee noted that the Army's moral and political unity ensures the successful carrying out of all the tasks within the purview of commands, units and establishments. A decisive influence on the consolidation of ideopolitical unity and moral-political strength is carried by the increased activity of the LC organization, commands, and other bodies in the Army, particularly in connection with preparations for the 13th congress and the realization of the Army's modernization program. This also contributes to the activities to mark the 40th anniversary of victory over fascism and the liberation of the country, the public discussion on draft conclusions of the 13th LCY Central Committee session, the elections within the LCY organization in the Yugoslav People's Army, and others.

The committee also took several measures and actions aimed at increasing the effectiveness of political education and training. The program of scientific and research work in social sciences in order to better coordinate it with the needs of the party and political work was expanded.

Attention was drawn to the responsibility of the LC Organization in the Army and to her bodies in the army organization to ensure and to further develop the Army's ideopolitical unity as regards the program orientations of the LCY and the creative approach to the new contents of political and educational work, aimed at more effective preventive activity and the substantiated interpretation of the issues imposed by social and Army practice.

The session approved a decision to appoint five permanent commissions of the committee.

ARMY LCY PRESIDENT ONCOMBAT, CADRE POLICY

LD181406 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 0008 GMT 18 Jun 86

[Text] Belgrade, 18 Jun (TANJUG) -- A strong internal ideopolitical unity and a high degree of combat preparedness are the main achievements of the communists and all members of the Yugoslav People's Army (JNA) over the last 4 years. The Army is determinedly pursuing the path marked by Comrade Tito and is committed to the goals of the LCY's program, i.e. to a united Yugoslavia, a community of equal nations and nationalities, to self-management, brotherhood and unity, and a nonaligned policy and international cooperation based on the principles of equality. This was stressed by Georgije Jovicic, president of the organization committee in the JNA, in an interview he gave to NARODNA ARMIJA and FRONT. We have the habit of saying that, despite the difficult economic situation, we "have not considerably lagged behind in our development" -- Jovicic stressed. This is an achievement much more important than one made under normal, more favorable conditions where we were able to make a "seven league" step forward.

In recent years we have introduced a large number of modern systems of military equipment -- home-manufactured tanks, transporters, aircraft, helicopters etc. The efficiency in anti-armor combat and fire support has been increased by 50 percent. There has also been an improvement in the system of leading and commanding. The organizational and formation structure of the units and their mobilization preparedness have been improved. Scientific, research, and educational-political work have been given due attention.

In reference to the attempts to negate the concept of All-People's Defense and the cases of labeling and attacking the Army, Jovicic said that, in his view, ignorance of the objective situation in the world and at home and also of the essence of our concept of All-People's Defense were behind these phenomena. We must not, however, disregard the cases of conscious and direct opposition to the LCY's policy regarding the country's defense and the development of the Army. But, Jovicic said, we are not frightened of it since we have Yugoslavia's working people and citizens behind us who know that the country cannot be defended by improvisations and regional or other divisions. Our defense system must be a unique, one Yugoslav, comprising all of our society's forces and all of its sections.

In reference to the recently held LC congresses and conferences, the president of the LCY committee in the JNA described as encouraging the fact that not one of these gatherings failed to emphasize the need for unity, for strengthening self-management, and safeguarding the revolution's fundamental achievements. It is good that strong demands were heard for changing all that is hampering our development and that considerable changes and rejuvenation have taken place in the cadre policy, Georgije Jovicic, president of the LCY organization in the JNA, stressed in his interview for NARODNA ARMIJA and FRONT.

LCY'S LOLIC ADDRESSES JOURNALISTS FEDERATION

LD181924 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatioan 1412 GMT 18 Jun 86

[Excerpts] Belgrade, 18 Jun (TANJUG) -- The forthcoming 13th LCY Congress will be the congress of the Yugoslav Communists' thoughtful confrontation with social reality, the congress of determination for action and the congress of the LCY's ideopolitical unity. At today's session of the Yugoslav Journalists Federation Presidium it was said that the public information media are expected to present events at this meeting in their totality through objective and responsible reporting, that is, all the solutions which will result in overcoming the present socioeconomic difficulties.

Taking part in the discussion, Marko, executive secretary of the LCY Central Committee Presidium, assessed that the public information media have greatly contributed to the preparations for the 13th LCT Congress. They can be given full credit for creating a mobilizing climate, for an adjusted presentation of the congress documents, and for detailed reporting from congresses and conferences of the republican and provincial LC, he said. However, according to him, apart from indisputable results in reporting to date, there are some omissions.

Some of the press, Lolic said, one-sidedly present precongress events and congress discussions, which is reflected in efforts to stress wisecracks and verbal "curiosities," without going into their essential messages.

They also present views which are not completely in accordance with our basic sociopolitical orientations, and there are also instances of regional-local reporting from the congresses and conferences of the LC. Some of the press, Lolic said, do not focus attention on congress themes but on some others, which are offered as some kind of political stands and suggestions.

At today's session of the yugoslav Federation of Journalists Presidium Ilija Despotovic, hitherto TANJUG journalist in Montenegro and deputy president of the Presidium, was elected president of the Yugoslav Federation of Journalists Presidium.

POLITIKA CRITICIZES GREEK POLICY ON MACEDONIA

LD182237 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1915 GMT 18 Jun 86

[Text] Belgrade, 18 Jun (TANJUG) -- Tomorrow's issue of POLITIKA carries an editorial commentary entitled "Reality Without Mist", which deals with the attitude of official Greek policy toward the so-called "Macedonian question".

For us in Yugoslavia, the editorial says, the attempt by Greek Prime Minister Papandreou to negate the identity of the Macedonian people and the existence of the Macedonian nationality is a political provocation toward which we cannot remain indifferent. We believe that this is well-known in Athens and it can never be different.

The fact that the Greek prime minister touched upon the "Macedonian question" because of internal political competition with the opposition cannot be taken as an excuse. Because in this matter and in this kind of internal competition the prime minister used devices to cloud reality in the Balkans. It is in the interest of Greece, the editorial says, and of course in the interest of Greek-Yugoslav good-neighborly relations, to disperse this cloud.

The reality in this part of Europe is different than that suggested by Panandreov's vision that "apart from Greeks, only Serbs, Croats, and Bulgarians live in the Balkans". He has thus also completely overlooked a neighbor of his country -- Albania and the Albanian nation.

When it comes to Yugoslavia, he overlooked the fact that apart from Serbs and Croats, full equality is enjoyed by all other nations and nationalities. All of us in our country experience Papandreov's mistaken vision of Yugoslavia as an attempt to commentary stresses, because with political overlooking of this kind the Greek prime minister bypasses the existence of the SR of Macedonia as a constituent part and equal state of the Yugoslav federation. If we were to take this defective political vision to its absurd conclusions, it would turn out that Greece has no northern border.

With a little more political realism, the commentary continued, misunderstandings of this kind would quickly disappear. Moreover, since there are not a few examples behind us, both sides are interested almost equally in the development of good neighborly, friendly, and close relations between Yugoslavia and Greece. If we go back to a realistic policy on the Balkans in more concrete terms, and to the complexities of Yugoslav-Greek relations, we find that it is hardly necessary to confirm to our neighbor Yugoslavia's stable interest in promoting mutual ties.

Nor is it necessary to confirm that Yugoslavia's united foreign policy is being built and developed by all the republic and provinces of our federation, and that it is the only way in which to achieve all areas of friendship with Greece and to remove all the obstacles on this road through agreements.

BORBA EXAMINES ELECTION OF AUSTRIA'S WALDHEIM

AU171803 Belgrade BORBA in Serbo-Croatian 14-15 June 86 p 13

[From the "Week in the World" column by Vlado Teslic: "Austria"]

[Text] Austria has got a new head of state, but it has also got a new prime minister, new minister of foreign affairs, and almost half of a new government. The president was elected by a majority of votes, and the changes in the government were simply forced by such a choice of the head of state.

The election of Kurt Waldheim will not change much in Austria's position on the international scene, and the formation of a new government is a serious sign of shifts on the internal political scene. That is a hint of a possible turn to the right even of those who traditionally stood at the center.

This is certainly a unique case in postwar Europe, that a man with an unenviable war record is elected head of a state, whose independence and status was established by great allies at the end of World War II and whose neutrality was one of the first, more significant postwar agreements.

There is much controversy about those elections -- the belated discovery of Waldheim's war past, his ascent in postwar Austria leading to his unanimous election for UN secretary general, and the full confidence he enjoyed in that position. Also controversial are the first unreserved congratulations on his elections coming from the USSR and the Warsaw Pact, as well as all Arab countries, and the reserve and restraint shown by the West and some others.

Everything in this complicated and controversial world has been more or less predictable and everything has come to its place in the end. Most Austrians simply could not swallow the interference from abroad in the election of their head of state and a significant portion of those Austrians, by electing Waldheim, wanted not only to bury their war past and pacify their pricks of conscience, but also to rehabilitate that past.

The only bigger puzzle in the entire case is the collocation of motives lying behind the campaign against Waldheim, which occurred precisely at this moment, especially if its initiators knew about Waldheim's past and failed to contest his election and his activity at the time when he was the first man of the United Nations. Is that not also an attempt to discredit not only the United Nations, but also an entire period in international life -- one can call it now a very responsible period -- in which the meaning of statesmenship was identified with the struggle for detente and peace?

REGULATION ON OFFICIAL'S RETIREMENT REVIEWED

AU182038 Belgrade Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1700 GMT 18 Jun 86

[Text] At its session today, the SFRY Assembly Federal Chamber should have adopted the amendments to the Law on State Administration using a shortened procedure. After harsh criticism voiced in the respective assembly committee, the FEC withdrew its proposal. Such a sequence of events shows how important the control function of the assembly is, and how the public nature of the work of the highest institution is (?an irreplacable) democratic achievement. Ilivija Rusovac reports:

The point of the intended amendments to the Law on State Administration amounts to the question of whether (?67) workers, mostly of the Federal Secretariat for Foreign Affairs and the Federal Secretariat for Internal Affairs, should be able -- even after the legal limit for retiring which is 30 June -- to remain working until the end of 1988. The FEC, proposing the law, points out that, forced by the law, several ambassadors, general consuls, (?plenipotentionary) ministers, counselors and special counselors, assistants, and chiefs from the two institutions should be retired. Along with those who were pensioned off last year, those people's retirement would leave a gap in performing specific tasks for which it is difficult to train cadres anyway.

With such arguments, after two short periods of time, the FEC has already attempted to work out exemptions to legal regulations on retirement conditions which apply to all employed people in the country. Even the very (?defense) of reasons on the basis of which one demands that some high state officials be exempt from the law, points to something like class consecration and needless encapsulation that finally has its revenge in an unsatisfactory cadre situation, although the Federal Administration [word indistinct] all the time and numbers over 15,000 people at the moment.

It is perfectly understandable that institutions such as the Secretariat for Foreign Affairs or Secretariat for Internal Affairs must take care of many aspects of the people they employ, but it is not good when it is difficult to discern (?differences) between professional selection of cadres and avoiding that obligation for always acceptable reasons. Let us recall the broad debate about whether officials are irreplaceable which began in society when provisions for forced retirement were decided upon. It seems now that even clerks are considered irreplaceable, clerks of whom -- to make things even more absurd -- also work for a shortened length of service.

The climate where there is a tendency to ignore mistakes in cadre renewal and where some people have the right to be irreplaceable for an unjustifiably long period, seems not to be incidental. Cadre policy is only one of the privileges. The activity of the SFRY assembly's previous composition has shown that there were more privileges. One need only recall the official's right not to work for 6 years and still get paid. That right was abolished. There was also fuss about housing credits with the minimal interest rate of 2 percent, then about the misuse of the housing fund of the Federation. Had it not been for the agility of individual delegates, many things would have remained concealed from the eyes and opinion of the public. The more delegates insist upon the public activity of the work of the assembly, the easier it will be for them to find their way in the maze of the powerful and unrelenting administration.

BULGARIAN MBFR DELEGATE SPEAKS AT VIENNA SESSION

AU161907 Sofia RABOTNICHESKO DELO in Bulgarian 13 Jun 86 p 5

[Petur Ivanov report: "An Essential Incentive at the Vienna Negotiations"]

[Text] Vienna, 12 Jun (RABOTNICHESKO DELO dispatch) -- Ambassador Enyo Savov, leader of the delegation of the People's Republic of Bulgaria, took the floor today at the plenary session of the Vienna negotiations for the reduction of armed forces and armaments in central Europe.

Ambassador Savov pointed out that the reduction of the level of nuclear confrontation is the most important of the efforts of Warsaw Pact, aimed at the consolidation of security in the world, and that, at the same time, this task is closely linked to the solution of the problems of reducing conventional weapons. This line of the socialist countries was also included in the decisions of the recently concluded conference of the Warsaw Pact Political Consultative Committee held in Budapest.

The appeal to the NATO proposes a detailed and essential limitation of conventional arms, Armed Forces, and tactical nuclear weapons in Europe -- reaching from the Atlantic to the Urals. Unfortunately, as the Bulgarian delegate, stressed, the NATO bloc has not yet manifested any readiness to reduce in practice, or to limit its military programs. Everyone is aware of the fact what serious consequences for international security and for mutual confidence among the countries can result from the unilteral refusal to implement the commitments included in the most important international law documents, pertaining to the limitation of the most terrible types of weapons -- namely, nuclear weapons.

The Bulgarian delegate devoted an essential part of his statement to the question of confidence between East and West at the Vienna negotiations.

It appears after all that the NATO states are still incapable of renouncing the temptation to take advantage of these negotations to conceal the so-called additional rearmament to disrupt the existing military parity in the central part of our continent and to achieve superiority over the Warsaw Pact states. The leader of the Bulgarian delegation closed his statement by stressing that without a bilateral interest in achieving the goals assigned by the Vienna negotiations, namely in achieving a reduction of armed forces and armaments in central Europe, it is impossible and unthinkable to expect a successful conclusion of the negotiations.

TRUST CHAIRMAN ASSESSES STATE OF POWER INDUSTRY

AU191932 Sofia Domestic Service in Bulgarian 1730 GMT 19 Jun 86

[Text] A festive meeting was held this evening in the "Georgi Kirkov" hall of the BCP building to mark "Energetics Day." Professor Nikola Todoriev, chairman of the "Energetika" economic trust, delivered a report in the presence of Comrade Chudomir Aleksandrov, labor frontrankers and party, economic, trade union, and Komsomol figures from the power industry branch.

In making an assessment of what had been achieved during the year, Prof. Nikola Todoriev noted that due to the restrictive measures introduced in the administration of the power supply and due to strict control, a system has been created that will guarantee normal electrical supplies for domestic consumers and industry during the forthcoming autumn and winter period. Much has been done to stabilize the power supply system, Nikola Todoriev stated, but the reserves are not exhausted. Energy is available; it will continue to be available for all, but order and strict technological discipline are necessary.

However, it was pointed out that despite the high level of mobilization and the rate of fulfillment of the schedules for the repair of basic production capacities, [words indistinct] a fully satisfactory level had not (?been achieved). It was noted that in the combines of the trust, one of the largest investors in industry during the 5-year-plan period, conditions have still not been created for [words indistinct] towards the achievements of the world's power industry.

PRESIDIUM, FEDERAL GOVERNMENT ON PACT MEETING

LD191749 Bratislava Domestic Service in Slovak 1630 GMT 19 Jun 86

[Text] In Prague today, the CPCZ Central Committee Presidium and the Federal Government discussed the report on the Warsaw Pact Political Consultative Committee meeting in Budapest 10-11 June.

They approved the course of actions of the Czechoslovak delegation led by Gustav Husak, general secretary of the CPCZ Central Committee and president of the Republic, and the documents adopted at the session. These documents based on profound analysis of the current situation in the world and the conclusions of the fraternal communist and workers parties' congresses, provide new convincing proof of the constructive approach of the Warsaw Pact to tackling the most crucial issues of our times.

The report goes on to say that reactionary and militaristic circles in the United States and their followers in NATO, acting against the interests of mankind and against their own interests, resort to the dangerous policy of force, confrontation, and feverish arming. They block the settlement of the most important problems in the world and the efforts to remove hotbeds of tension in various parts of the world. The fact that even in this situation the proposals of the Warsaw Pact indicate concrete ways and means of achieving mutually acceptable agreements on the limitation and halting of the arms race, disarmament, improvement of the situation in the world, and guaranteeing security for all states and nations -- all this reflects their high degree of responsibility for the peaceful future of mankind.

The appeal of the Warsaw Pact to NATO and to all European countries is a new and important foreign political initiative of the socialist community directed toward a substantial reduction of armed forces and conventional weapons in Europe from the Atlantic to the Urals. It organically complements the Soviet proposal for the total liquidation of nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction by the end of this century. It offers a realistic way to change Europe into a continent of permanent peace and cooperation.

The CPCZ Central Committee Presidium and the Federal Government expressed full agreement with the draft appeal, the content of which is fully in keeping with the foreign political line set out by the 17th CPCZ Congress, and which is in harmony with the vital interests and desires of our peoples.

The CPCZ Central Committee Presidium and the Federal Government also supported the conclusions of the Budapest session of the Political Consultative Committee on strengthening the defense military-political ties of the socialist states and further improving their cooperation in all spheres. They expressed conviction that the peaceful efforts of the Warsaw Pact, the cooperation of all peace-loving states, and progressive, realistic forces in the world will contribute to averting the danger of war and securing peaceful development.

They tasked the relevant state and party bodies and institutions to implement with thoroughness and initiative the conclusions of the Budapest session of the Warsaw Pact Political Consultative Committee in all their activity.

HUSAK MEETS CZECH NATIONAL COUNCIL PRESIDIUM

[Text] In Prague Castle today, Gustav Husak, general secretary of the CPCZ Central Committee and president of the Republic, received the newly elected Czech National Council Presidium, headed by Josef Kempny, member of the CPCZ Central Committee Presidium and chairman of the Czech National Council, and the new government of the Czech SR, headed by Josef Korcak, member of the CPCZ Central Committee Presidium and premier of the Czech Government.

Comrades Josef Kempny and Josef Korcak emphasized that the Czech National Council and the Czech Government are fully aware of their responsibility for implementing the conclusions of the 17th CPCZ Congress and they will do everything to ensure that the Czech SR makes an active contribution to the development of the entire Czechoslovak national economy. The activity of ministries, national committees, enterprises, and cooperatives will be orientated in this direction. Fulfillment of these tasks demands an improvement in the quality of management of economic units and national committees, the removal of bureaucracy and overcoming inertia and routine in the work of states management organs. Care will be taken to ensure that the methods and style of work of the state management of the Czech SR and economic organizations correspond to the new demands arising from the strategy of speeding up social and economic development.

An important task in the next period will be further improvement in the quality of the work of national committees. It is a matter of making more effort in linking their increased jurisdiction with greater responsibility, of implementing the principle that every national committee is the manager in the whole of the territorial area. By means of more effective coordination of the intentions and plans of sectors with conditions in towns, the harmonic development of territorial areas will be secured.

At the close of their speech, Comrades Josef Kempny and Josef Korcak assured Comrade Gustav Husak that in the interest of the further flourishing of Socialist Czechoslovakia the goals of the Czech National Council and the Czech Government will be more effectively unified and the joint approach of their organs with organs of the federation and the Slovak SR will be made more effective.

Comrade Gustav Husak cordially congratulated the members of the newly created Czech national organs on their election and appointment to responsible state and government positions. He praised the share of the highest organs of the Czech SR on the positive results of the construction of socialism and he sincerely thanked all those who worked in the Czech national organs in the past period for their deserving activity.

The program which we adopted at the 17th CPCZ Congress, Comrade Gustav Husak continued, corresponds to our needs and possibilities. We are concerned to ensure that Czechoslovakia, as an all-round developed, modern, advanced socialist state, should develop dynamically and have a lasting and dignified place in the world. In order to fulfill this resolution and in order to be able to secure a further growth in the standard of living of our citizens, we must speed up economic and social development. This strategy will designate the content of our activity for the whole future period.

Other fraternal socialist countries are also striving for the speeding up of social economic development. This is why we follow with particular deep attention the approaches to the working out and implementation of this strategy in the Soviet Union.

Much of what was spoken about by Comrade Mikhail Gorbachev at the CPSU Central Committee session at the beginning of this week is educational for us for it shows the directions of solving problems which we also face.

A key question in all sectors is the working out of the 17th CPCZ Congress program and to consistently secure it. Great demands are placed on the governments from this viewpoint by the highest executive bodies of state power. However, they correspond to the importance of their activity, which has a marked impact for the whole of society, and the quality of which affects the efficiency of the whole state mechanism and the activity of management organs at all levels. Comrade Gustav Husak emphasized that it is necessary that the struggle for intensification, for the speeding up of scientific and technical development, for implementing structural changes, and for considerable improvement of planning, has become the main content of the coordinated activity of the federal and national governments, of all state and economic organs. This demands an improvement in the style of work in all sectors, better organization and discipline, the creation of a demanding atmosphere, and changing the thinking and behavior of people. It can only benefit the cause if legislatsive bodies make a greater contribution to the social control of state, economic, and social policy, and take care that their recommendations to executive organs are respected.

Fulfillment of the conclusions of the 17th CPCZ Congress, Comrade Gustav Husak went on, is possible only with the active and enthusiastic help of the people. This principle has general validity. It is exceptionally important and it has an irreplaceable role in the activity of the national committees. It is necessary for the highest national organs to be concerned with further improvement in the work of the national committees, which must make full use of the jurisdiction entrusted to them, must secure the complex development of their areas, harmonize social and local needs and interest in a more effective way, and create conditions so that the greatest possible number of workers takes part in the management and upkeep of towns and villages.

In conclusion, Comrade Gustav Husak wished the deputies of the Czech National Council and the new government of the Czech SR much success and he assured them of full support from the highest party and state organs.

KORCAK ADDRESSES NOVE MESTO NATIONAL COMMITTEE

LD192151 Prague Domestic Service in Czech 1930 GMT 19 Jun 86

[Text] Josef Korack, member of the CPCZ Central Committee Presidium and premier of the Czech Government, today took part in the constituent meeting of the city national committee in Nove Mesto nad Metuji.

Nove Mesto nad Metuji was given the title of Exemplary Town of the Seventh 5-Year Plan for Results Achieved in the Socialist Competition of national committees in 1981-85. The city national committee has also set itself high goals for the new election period. In harmony with the election program it has extended commisions for the environment, trade, and tourism as necessary.

In the discussion, Comrade Josef Korcak emphasized the responsibility of deputies of the national committee for all aspects of life in the city and their right and duty to take standpoints and to express themselves on all questions of the development of the area. It is necessary for every deputy, and especially a leading official of the national committee, to be able to act in a statesmanlike way and not a bureaucratic way, so that he does not evaluate the affairs of the citizen like a beaucrcrat (?behind a desk). Josek Korcak also emphasized the importance of the election program for the development of the area and he devoted particular attention to the activity and initiative of the deputies and the national committee.

JAILING OF BRATISLAVA CHRISTIAN REPORTED

LD152228 Vatican City International Service in Czech 1730 GMT 15 Jun 86

[Text] According to foreign news agencies, Marie Kotryskova, formerly Foltynova, was sentenced in Bratislava on Tuesday 10 June to 10 months imprisonment. She was accused of inciting disturbances, according to Paragraph 100 of the criminal code and of damaging the interests of the Republic abroad, according to Paragraph 112. The accusation was based on the fact that during a search of the accused's house, the police found eight typewritten copies of a translation of the book "Das Atentat" which she had been proofreading and copying at home. In 1985, she had lent individual copies to several acquaintances. The book mentioned the role of the Soviet and Bulgaria secret services in preparations for the assassination of John Paul II.

A statement by the Committee for the Defense of Unjustly Prosecuted No 525 adds to this: The absurdity of the accusation is borne out by an allegation that the motive of the accused stems, above all, from the fact that an illegal lay apostolate has caused her her religious conviction has outgrown the positions of enmity toward socialist society. She wrote to and was in personal contact with the representatives of the lay apostolate in the Vatican and with the Papal Council for Laics. She supported various Catholic missions abroad.

This statement clearly illustrates the aim of the prosecution of Marie Kotryskova. Her religious and charitable activities are to be prevented above all. The actions of the police and judicial organs directly contravene Article 19 of International Covenant on Civic and Political Rights, which guarantees free and unlimited search, propagation, and handing over of information across state borders. The agencies' reports end in a brief note: All this is even more disgusting when taking into account that the sentenced Marie Kotryskova is six months pregnant.

IDEOLOGY SEMINAR ON FOLLOW-UP TO CPSU CONGRESS

Fojtik, Havlin Addresses

AU110540 Prague RUDE PRAVO in Czech 18 Apr 86 pp 1,2

[CTK report: "On Ideological Work After the 17th CPCZ Congress; Comrades Jan Fojtik and Josef Havlin Address Statewide Seminar in Prague"]

[Excerpts] Prague (CTK) — A statewide seminar on the party's ideological work after the 17th CPCZ Congress began in Prague on Thursday [17 April] Jan Fojtik, candidate member of the Presidium and secretary of the CPCZ Central Committee, spoke about the main tasks of ideological work after the 17th CPCZ Congress.

He stressed that from what was said about ideological work at the congress unequivocally arises the need to thoroughly and critically assess the methods of work to date, its standard, and effectiveness and even firmer and organically to link it with the tasks we are resolving in the national economy, the social sphere, and our entire society.

As the congress recalled, the weltanschauung and ethical and work-oriented education must at present be linked, above all, with the struggle for speeding up our economy's transition onto the path of intensive development, Jan Fojtik said. This is a task that, together with changes in the methods of the management of the economy, also requires serious changes in the thinking of the people, in their psychology, in molding an active and creative attitude of working people, and in fostering a creative attitude of the working people, and in fostering a creative and exacting atmosphere at every worksite. Our ideological front must link to a much greater extent the clarification of domestic policy with the international situation and with the ongoing struggle between socialism and capitalism, and must oppose more offensively and more determinedly the attacks of imperialism, which has launched psychological warfare against the countries of the socialist community. It wages it unscrupulously, with unprecedented cynicism and demagoguery, with the aid of most modern techniques. The education in the spirit of socialist patriotism and internationalism, especially of the young generation, has always been important. It comes to the foreground especially at present; it must become the axis of educational work.

Comrade Jan Fojtik said that many important and stimulative ideas were voiced at the congress on the manner in which our propaganda and agitation are being conducted and on ways to make them more convincing and more concrete. Information media must truthfully and promptly provide information about life in our country and about events in the world; ensure the providing of extensive information about the work of party, state, and economic agencies and social organizations; more boldly expose various abuses; help creating an atmosphere of high exactingness on the quality of work and of irreconcilability toward shortcomings; and be a broad democratic rostrum for the exchange of views and experience of work collectives and citizens.

At present, Comrade Jan Fojtik said, there cannot be a more important task than the struggle for peace, for averting nuclear catastrophe, for thwarting the plans of aggressors. Here, the principledness of the policy of the socialist countries is being consistently combined with exceptional prudence and circumspection. An example of such a course was demonstrated at the 27th CPSU Congress, which proposed the creation of a system of international security. Its basic idea is the peaceful coexistence of states with different systems. Our propaganda, Comrade Fojtik emphasized, must point out the vital necessity of peaceful coexistence and, at the same time, demonstrate the exceptional complexity in regard to ensuring it. As the barbarian aggression of the United States of America against the Libyan people reaffirms, in the struggle for peace it would be dangerous to succumb to illusions.

Josef Havlin, secretary of the CPCZ Central Committee, spoke about tasks in education, science, culture, and the arts after the 17th CPCZ Congress.

In his speech he noted that in the past period the Czechoslovak educational sphere fulfilled with honor the task of the 16th CPCZ Congress, which determined the ensuring of the further growth of the intellectual level of our nations and nationalities and the deepening of the democratization of the education of all people. The conclusions of the 17th CPCZ Congress unequivocally show that what has been done in this field thus far will not be enough, Josef Havlin stressed. We cannot remain satisfied with the fact that in the past years our educational sphere proceeded on the correct course, that it reacted to new stimuli and practical requirements. This is only a firm foundation on which all further measures must link in such a way as to achieve a permanent improvement of knowledge, skills, and the overall personality profile of a young person. The most important task in the near future is for all teachers, former teachers of vocational disciplines, educators, and other pedagogues perfectly assimilate and identify themselves with the conclusions of the deliberations of the 17th CPCZ Congress and the 27th CPSU Congress and be able to work perfectly with them, without unnecessarily marking time to incorporate them in their everyday educational activity.

[CTK report: "Statewide Seminar of the CPCZ Ideological Aktiv Has Ended; Explaining All Phenomena and Events Truthfully and Convincingly"]

[Text] Prague (CTK) -- The statewide seminar on the party's ideological work after the 17th CPCZ Congress continued in Prague on Friday [18 April]. The seminar was attended by Jan Fojtik, candidate member of the Presidium and secretary of the CPCZ Central Committee, and by Josef Havlin, CPCZ Central Committee secretary.

Jaroslav Pecen, director of the Institute of Philosophy and Sociology attached to the Czechoslovak Academy of Sciences, spoke about topical issues pertaining to the education of youth. He paid attention to the preparation of young people for life and work, their aware active participation in the intensification of the national economy and in increasing their share in implementing scientific-technical progress in practice.

Idenek Horeni, RUDE PRAVO chief editor, dealt with increasing the action capability of our mass information media. He stressed that not only the propagation of the achieved results and extensive information are important, but public dialogue contributing to the solution of problems and shortcomings is important as well. The conclusions of the 17th CPCZ Congress are a challenge for journalists, for greater initiative when creating a broad current of a democratic exchange of views and experience in the press, radio, and television. The foundation here is prompt, truthful, and convincing information.

Frantisek Valenta, director of the Economic Institute attached to the Czechoslovak Academy of Sciences, spoke about the main tasks of economic science. He said that science must expose more boldly and more systematically the objective laws of economic development that requires new methods in the work of the entire economic-science front. The political economy of socialism must become a more effective methodological foundation and theoretical starting point for the party's economic and social policy.

Inocent Sarman, secretary of the CPCZ West Bohemian regional committee, stressed the need for a more offensive waging of ideological struggle in the contemporary class-divided world. On the specific conditions of his region, he demonstrated the importance of the further intensification of the struggle against hostile ideology and propaganda. He said that propaganda activity must contribute to creating pride among our citizens in the results of socialist construction.

Vladimir Divis, deputy central director of Czechoslovak television, spoke about the work of Czechoslovak television after the 17th CPCZ Congress. He depicted the improvement of the content of television reporting and other programs and the raising of the promptness of information and its argumentative effectiveness as being the primary task. He also spoke about the influence of entertainment programs on the shaping of the viewers' socialist consciousness.

Karel Rychtarik, director of the Institute of Public Opinion Research, stressed that the path of a consistent assertion of the strategic concept of intensification is connected with the struggle for the change of the people's way of thinking. We must, therefore, combat hack work and interia, must not be afraid to admit shortcomings, and must truthfully and convincingly explain all phenomena and events. He said that in order to enhance the effectiveness of ideological work, one also has to improve its theoretical background.

Stanislav Kibik, scientific secretary of the Czechoslovak Academy of Sciences, pointed out the need to concentrate all energy and means of basic research on the solution of vital tasks. The cooperation of the Czechoslovak Academy of Sciences with Czechoslovak institutes of higher learning and with scientific institutions in the other socialist countries must effectively contribute to this. The political, professional, and moral preparation of scientific workers also plays an important role in this.

WARSAW PACT MEETING, INITIATIVE DISCUSSED

["Studio Seven" program with moderator Lubos Taraba, "Prague Radio editor"; Emil Keblusek, "adviser to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs"; Dusan Rovensky, "head of the foreign political section" of RUDE PRAVDO; and Bohumil Horak, "editor in chief of the International Affairs Department" of Prague Radio]

[Excepts] [Taraba] Two days ago the session of the Political Consultative Committee of the Warsaw Pact member-states ended in Budapest. This supreme organ of the defense organization of the socialist countries took the opportunity to propose to the NATO member-states and all the European states an extensive disarmament program in the sphere of armed forces and conventional weapons in Europe, and that is what we will be talking about in our discussion.

Let me welcome to the studio the participants in the discussion: Emil Keblusek, adviser to the minister of foreign affairs. Hello.

[Keblusek] Hello.

[Taraba] Dusan Rovensky, head of the foreign political section of RUDE PRAVO. Good afternoon.

[Rovensky] Good afternoon.

[Taraba] And Bohumil Hurak, editor in chief of PRAGUE Radio's international affairs department. He was also the station's special correspondent in Budapest during the session of the Warsaw Pact member-states political consultative committee. Good afternoon.

[Horak] Good afternoon.

[Taraba] Let me remind you that you listeners can also take part in our discussion by phoning in your questions to 26-01-51, and the lines are open now.

All right, let's move on from political to military issues. Comrade Keblusek, what is the current situation in the balance of forces between the Warsaw pact and NATO?

[Keblusek] Well, I can say that in the light of the development of the international situation and also in the balance of forces on the political, military and ideological plane, a stabilized balance of forces has been created in Europe and, in fact, throughout the world. The nature of the development of mass-destruction weapons and their means of delivery, as well the stockpiles accumulated between the leading powers of both military-political groupings have created a new security situation in the world. Since these weapons cannot be used to promote the foreign political and military interests of one side exclusively, we can therefore say at present that there is a kind of deterrence overkill. In this situation the historical socioeconomic conflict between the two systems cannot be solved by war.

The existing mass-destruction weapons threaten the very existence of mankind, and such a war cannot be won; neither is it possible to win the arms race. Therefore, the logical inference is that in this situation another solution has to be found, and that is why we talk about importance, above all, of a political settlement of the balance of forces between the main powers and the military political alliances in the sphere of nuclear and conventional weapons, in numbers of weapons and troops, and in areas of possible conflict between these two groups; that is to say, in our region of Central Europe. We also speak about the accumulation of other factors which are very important for creating mutual confidence, for doing away with the lack of trust which has built up in the last few years. Therefore, the factor of a political settlement of this balance has now become the main issue. Let us add that the time available for making decisions about fundamental strategic issues -- that is to say, the time in which the fate of mankind might be decided -- is getting short. That is why this situation must be approached from the point of view of new political thinking. This is something the socialist countries have stressed, and Comrade Gorbachev has emphasized it several times, and this must take into account the existing mutual balance of forces.

[Taraba] What was the atmosphere of the Warsaw Pact Political Consultative Committee session in Budapest? I would like to add that Comrades Rovensky and Horak were on the spot in the Hungarian capital. Comrade Horak.

[Horak] The session was the center of special media attention not only from the socialist countries, which is natural, but also from the bourgeois countries; 226 foreign journalists were officially accredited from 29 countries in the press center in the Budapest Hilton hotel. In addition, 240 Hungarian journalists were there too. The most distant country that sent its journalists to Budapest was Australia; 44 journalists were from the USSR, 30 from the United States; 16 from the FRG; and 15 from Japan. So much for the participation of journalists. The discussions by experts, especially those from the Soviet delegation, were very interesting. The participation was very representative: Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Comrade Petrovskiy was there; also Colonel General Nikolay Chervov; and academician Sagdeyev from the Space Research Institute. They briefed journalists at press conference on individual aspects of the current situation in the world, and immediately after the end of the Political Consultative Committee, on the individual parts of the adopted appeal.

[Taraba] Comrade Rovensky, what were the prevailing opinions of the foreign journalists from the West in Budapest?

[Rovensky] I met a number of journalists in Budapest whom I used to know during my tour in Washington and London, and also some FRG journalists, who highly praised the good press conferences organized by the press center. In addition to those regular press conferences which Comrade Horak mentioned, the meetings with experts were also very interesting. For example, a question I asked was answered by Comrade Petrovskiy, deputy foreign minister of the USSR, and by Colonel General Chervov. I asked them about the underground tests of nuclear weapons and the moratorium. In my opinion, the major international press conference at the end of the Political Consultative Committee session was very good; all participating journalists gained a wide-ranging outlook on the question under discussion. I should not forget to mention that the documents were issued very quickly. I left Budapest in the late afternoon after the end of the session, and even before we arrived in Prague, the documents were issued. This means that the work of the press center was really excellent.

[Horak] The final press conference was translated into seven languages in addition to Hungarian.

[Taraba] Comrade Keblusek, could you tell us something about the issue of control covered by the appeal.

[Keblusek] Dusan Rovensky has mentioned a very interesting question that was often misued by the imperialist propaganda against us: They claimed that no agreements could be concluded concerning control of armaments and disarmament because the socialist countries seem to be against control, as though they wanted to hide something, and therefore, allegedly, there are some military units which we do not report at the talks, such as in Vienna and elsewhere. Naturally, this issue was deliberately exploited and it is not true. Our latest initiative also proves that the socialist countries are just as committed as our opposite numbers, and considering our historical experience in this part of Europe, we are definitely more committed than anybody else to being albe to know how the treaties on the reduction of armaments and disarmament are being fulfilled. This means that we are naturally committed to the idea of control, but we want to really control reduction. We are against the West's efforts to push through an agreement on control only instead of reduction, and this means de facto the legalization of their spying. We say: Control must accompany real results in disarmament. If that takes place then we shall be for a very wide spectrum of control by national and international means, including control on the spot as was confirmed yet again in our new proposal in Budapest too.

[Taraba] Two days have passed since the publication of the appeal by the Warsaw Pact member-states in Budapest, and that is long enough to be able to give at least a rough assessment of the attitude adopted to this new initiative by the governments of the West European countries and the U.S. Government. How would you describe the reaction so far to these proposals, Comrade Rovensky?

[Rovensky] I think that as far as government reaction in the capitalist countries is concerned, we have to be realists. We can hardly expect Washington, where the main influence on the government is exerted by the Californian and Texan arms lobbies, to throw its arms around our neck and enthuse about such proposals. But it may be that the reaction of the Western governments -- this reaction, of course, is still not clear enough for us to be able to assess it in all it s aspects -- but perhaps these reaction, in my view, is slightly different than it has been in the past. I would say it is a little more cautious, there rejection is not as forthright as it has been in the past. There is a whole series of reasons for this. In my view, the main reason is the fact that the new Warsaw Pact proposals are far-reaching, and the chances are that they will win widespread support from the public. At the same time, some governments in the capitalist countries have to take into account such realities as forthcoming elections, in the FRG, for example. There will be Congressional elections in the United States in November.

[Taraba] We are talking about disarmament, but at the same time in the United States intends to renege on SALT II. What are your views on this, Comrade Horak?

[Horak] To come back to your question, I have in front of me a quote from the U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger in which he says that the United States no longer wishes to be bound by this dubious treaty, by which he means SALT II, and that it is the needs of U.S. security, according to Secretary Weinberger, which will henceforth be the sole concern of the United States. What does this mean?

It means that Weinberger understands the notion of security not in the sense of comprehensive security or mutual security, which we have already talked about earlier in the discussion, but only as security for the United States. In practice this means that this attitude represents the end of arms control. The question arises; What if the United States were really to violate the SALT II treaty, were really to renege on it, and what if the Soviet Union logically came up with the appropriate response to that situation? I would like to stress that this is not of the Soviet Union's own choosing, it would be a decision that was forced upon the Soviet Union, and in any case this is not what the Soviet Union hopes for.

[Taraba] All right, we have strayed a little from the subject of our discussion, but to get back to the point, Comrade Keblusek, which forums should the new proposals of the socialist countries be discussed?

[Keblusek] We make no stipulations about where they should be discussed; the negotiating platforms already exist. One is Stockholm; that is to say, the conference on measures for building confidence and security in Europe. Then of course there are the Vienna talks on reductions in armed forces and equipment in central Europe, which could be extended to deal with the matters we discussed in Budapest. Or a separate forum could be established to deal with these matters. It is natural to expect that the process of reducing armed forces and weapons, which we are talking about here, should begin between the NATO and Warsaw Pact member-states, and that other countries would then join in. Once again we can see the great, and I would even say statesmanlike, approach of the socialist countries in that it provides the opportunity to choose a platform that would be agreed between us and the other side.

[Taraba] Now I have some questions from listeners Jana Mravcova from Ostrava asks what tasks emerged for Czechoslovakia from the session of the Political Consultative Committee in Budapest?

[Keblusek] Perhaps I could answer that one. Primarily the task is to elaborate on the documents with which we have been acquainted in the press, and then of course -- and this is the most imporant part -- to involve ourselves actively in explaining our new initiatives to our partners. In practice this means stepping up the diplomatic activity of the Czechoslovak foreign service, using the wealth of contacts we have accumulated at all levels, not only at the level of those who deal with this kind of thing by profession but also at all political levels when we come into contact with our foreign partners. Then the third area, you might say, is to use the existing negotiating forums in Geneva, New York, in Vienna and elsewhere, and above all to concentrate on good preparation for the forthcoming Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe; that is to say, the review conference which will take place in the autumn in Vienna.

[Taraba] Another question from our listeners: Zdenka Ferenska from Ostrava and Petr Kotrba ask what the main aim of the session was. Well, we've already answered that one, in fact. Here is another question from Mr Riha in Teplice. What reaction do the Warsaw pact member-states expect from the NATO states, and if the response is negative, what measures will be taken?

[Rovensky] I don't think it would be useful to make predictions because this is a classic situation in which we have to wait and see. The text of the documents which will be conveyed by the diplomatic missions of the Hungarian People's Republic will no doubt be studied by the relevant ministries of foreign affairs, and this usually takes some time. Then of course, depending on the response conveyed to them, the Warsaw Pact member-states will react accordingly.

Let me answer the listener who asked the question in this way: Stopping the arms buildup is obviously a very long, very difficult, and very complex process. Even though a number of obstacles have to be overcome, we must continue to make every effort. and I think the main thing is to win over public opinion, because public opinion can bring a certain degree of pressure to bear on the policies of the Western governments.

[Taraba] And here is the last question: Martin Cerny asks about the disarmament conference in Geneva. Comrade Horak?

[Horak] Well, this Geneva conference is really an irreplaceable way of discussing the multilateral aspects of disarmament. Some 40 countries are taking part in the conference, and it is a unique multilateral forum of its kind. It is being attended by five nuclear powers. It began to function in 1962, and it is discussing the main issues of stopping nuclear weapons tests, nuclear disarmament, preventing nuclear war, preventing the arms race in space. Of course, it must be said that the potential of this conference is not yet being fully utilized because of what I would call the obstructive approach of the present Reagan administration.

[Taraba] Thank you, gentlemen. Unfortunately our time is running out. I think, however, I can say that this discussion has once again shown clearly that the socialist states have come up with a new stimulus from the point of view of the politics of disarmament and detente, and that their overriding task and aim is the politics of peace.

SCHUERER, LU DONG SIGN ECONOMIC PROTOCOL

AU130931 East Berlin NEUES DEUTSCHLAND in Germana 7-8 Jun 86 p 2

[Text] Berlin (ADN) -- On Friday [6 June] in Berlin the negotiations between delegations of the GDR and the PRC ended successfully with the signing of a protocol by Gerhard Schuerer, deputy chairman of the GDR Council of Ministers and chairman of the State Planning Commission, and by Lu Dong, chairman of the PC State Economic Comission. The document contains an assessment of the state of cooperation in reconstructing Chinese industrial enterprises, establishes new projects, and calls for an expansion of the exchange of experiences on current and future tasks in the management and planning of the national economy.

Proceeding from the talks that Erich Honecker, greneral secretary of the SED Central Committee and chairman of the GDR State Council, had with Li Peng, vice premier of the PRC State Council; with Wu Xuequian, state commissioner and PRC minister of foreign affairs; and with Song Jian, state commissioner and chairman of the PRC Commission for Science and Technology, the two sides emphasized that the increasingly developing cooperation between the GDR and the PRC strengthens the international positions of socialism and exerts a positive influence on the struggle for safeguarding peace and on the consolidation of the international economic relations.

The delegation leaders assessed the results of the deliberations and emphasized that these had made an important contribution to deepening the cooperation between the two countris in economy, science and technology.

It is in this context that Gerhard Schuerer and Lu Dong valued the recently concluded second session of the GDR-PRC Economic Committee and its results as an important step in the expansion of bilateral economic relations.

During earlier consultations, Gerhard Schuerer had acquainted the Chinese guest witeh the decisions of the 11th SED Congress. The unity of economic and social policy constitutes the main battlefield in the further fashioning of the developed socialist society, he said. It was possible through the SED's economic strategy to make production intensification the decisive basis for a performance increase, and to lastingly ensure the necessary economic growth. It is important now to more and more closely link the advantages of socialism with the results of the scientific-technical revolution. Particularly important in this context are the extensive use of modern key technologies, the maximum refinement of raw materials, and materials and the reduction in production inmput.

Lu Dong explained the key points laid down by the Chinese party-state leadership for further development in socialit transformation. The recently adopted five year plan set forth high targets for economic growth and for enhancing the standard of living.

The past results in building the national economy provide good starting positions, he said. Like the GDR, the PRC also needs peace for its building effort. It resolutely strives to prevent the danger of a nuclear war and particularly to prevent the militarization of outer space.

The delegation of the PRC State Economic Commission under the leadership of its chairman, Lu Dong, was received during its 1-week stay in the GDR by Willi Stoph, chairman of the GDR Council of Ministers; and by Wolfgang Rauchfuss, deputy chairman of the Council of Ministers. It conducted talks with Dr Guenter Wyschofsky, minister of chemical industry; Felix Meir, minister of electrical engineering and electronics; and with Gerhard Tautenhahn, minister of construction of general machinery, agricultural machinery and vehicles.

Ma Xusheng, PRC ambassador to the GDR, participated in the negotiations and in signing the protocol.

GROUPS UNITE IN SOLIDARITY WITH NEAR MIDDLE EAST

AU130955 East Berlin NEUES DEUTSCHLAND in German 7-8 Jun 86 p 6

[Text] Berlin (ADN) -- The GDR Solidarity Committee, the FDGB Federal Executive, the National Council of the National Front, the FDJ Central Council, the Peasants Mutual Aid Association, the Federal Executive of the Democratic Women's League of Germany, the GDR Peace Council, the League for Friendship Among Peoples, and the GDR Committee for Human Rights have conveyed their fraternal greetings to all forces in the Near and Middle East that are struggling for peace, national independence, and social progress.

It is being noted in a joint statement on the "Week of Solidarity with the Anti-Imperialist Struggle of the Peoples of the Near and Middle East," published on 6 June, that these peoples' struggle against imperialism, neocolonialism, Zionism, and reaction enjoys the respect and solidaristic support of the CDR population.

The struggle of the peoples of that region is an important factor in repelling the course of the arms buildup and confrontation pursued by the most aggressive imperialist circles. It constitutes an important contribution to the peoples' efforts, the statement goes on to say, to achieve progress in preserving the most valuable asset of mankind in the Year of Peace proclaimed by the United Nations. The need emerges with all possible clarity for solving conflicts by political means and for doing everything possible to precent an escalation that threatens world peace. This is why the GDR reaffirms its demand for a comprehensive, just, and durable solution of the simmering Middle East conflict.

"The immediate and unconditional withdrawal of Israel from all Arab territories occupied since 1967 and the assertion of the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people, including their right to form an independent state, are indispensable preconditions for this," it is noted in the statement. The U.S. aggression against the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriyan is emphatically denounced and the solidarity with the anti-imperialist struggle of the Libyan people is proclaimed.

The assurance is given in conclusion that in the future, in their anti-imperialist struggle, the peoples of the Near and Middle East can also count on the active solidarity of all the forces united in the GDR solidarity movement.

[Excerpt] [Bernath] The permanent committees are the organs of the National Assembly which express opinions, put forward proposals, and supervise. I announce that the committee has a quorum. As an introduction I would like to greet with pleasure and respect the three new members of the Foreign Affairs Committee: Ivan Boldizsar, Mrs. Lajos Duschek, and Dr Alfred Schoener who are participating in the session of the Foreign Affairs Committee for the first time.

There are three subjects on the agenda of the committee today: The first is the report on the implementation of the 1985 budget of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs; the presenter of the report is Dr Peter Kovari, deputy minister of foreign affairs. The second subject is a brief on the session in Budapest of the Warsaw Pact Consultative Committee; the presenter of the brief is Miklos Barity, deputy minister of foreign affairs. While the third subject is a brief on the Hungarian-FRG relations -- the presenter of this report is Istvan Horvath, Hungarian ambassador to Bonn.

[Bernath] Thus, after the brief opening speech by Matyas Szueros, Peter Kovari orally supplemented the written report, or rather account, which summed up the financial management in 1985 of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Both the document and the speech were an example of the fact that an account can also be a collection of political intentions and actions. It is a very important task of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs to create, or assist in creating, those international circumstances and conditions necessary for the internal construction. However, foreign policy costs money.

[Kovari] The total expenditure of the Foreign Ministry and the organs under its supervision in 1985 exceeded 2.3 billion forints, while at the same time the sum of our own income reached about 50 percent of the expenditure; it was 1.2 billion forints.

Let me say a few words about the income of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs because for years in the accounts provided there have been hardly any words on this issue. The ministry as a state administrative budgetary organ stands not only on one side of the ledger of the peoples' economy via the spending of the money of the homeland, but it endeavors to fulfill the expectations of the other side, the income ledger as well. It is well known that foreign policy is a political and not a service institution, but still the income which in the course of its activity is drawn for the debit of the state budget is not negligible. In the majority of cases income comes in hard currency instead of forints. We consider an important achievement that what was budgeted for 1985 by the higher financial leadership; we have been able to not only fulfil in terms of income, but have even exceeded by 15 percent. The bulk of our income, altogether 871 million forints, has stemmed from the many individual and peculiar services offered by foreign representation activity. Nearly 770 million forints of the sum -- this is roughly $15.5 million -- is income from the so-called consulate activities like stamp duties and visa related income. Income stremming from other activities of the foreign missions is also a little over 100 million forints.

[Bernath] The year 1985 was not an ordinary year in the life of Hungarian foreign policy. Matyas Szuros listed some of the most important events, because of shortage of time.

[Szuros] The year 1985 was an outstanding year in Hungarian foreign policy activities; it was in 1985 that the Warsaw Pact's validity was extended. Regarding CEMA we signed the Complex Technical, Scientific Development Program to the Year 2000. Janos Kadar met several leaders of the socialist countries and these were extraordinarily important talks. In addition to these, important talks were held with the leaders of the capitaist world. Comrade Pal Losonczi was present at the UN jubilee session and on this occasion, too, Hungary expressed its commitment to the United Nations. Budapest also played the host to the European Cultural Forum. I will not list any more. These were such outstanding events which demonstrate and illustrate that Hungarian diplomacy and those working in foreign affairs carried out great work.

[Bernath] Deputy Ivan Boldizsar asked what the ministry was doing to improve propaganda activity abroad. Recently, for example, foreign missions were given modern technical equipment which assists in the better illustration of our homeland; they bought for example videos and video projectors. Their own video laboratory is in part serving the dissemination of information and is also for the entertainment of those living abroad. It is also used to prepare compilations of an informative nature about our hiomeland for the children of those working abroad, which is a very important task.

Professor Janos Szentagothai spike about his own experiences. During his travels abroad on official visits in the past 10-15 years he observed the regular improvement of the work of foreign missions, even if monetary means did not increase. At the same time, however, in regard to his visit to China, he also called attention to the fact that not only experts with general training were needed for the acquisition of foreign markets but there is a need for special experts as well. This however needs money; it is not only Paris which is worth a mass. The reply to this was, briefly: the organization of this, i.e. the expedition of special experts is already afoot.

To add something to this: It was also noted in connection with the financial and political account that, as a result of the saving measures, the ministry had even repaid 200 million forints into the state budget while its tasks had grown significantly.

[Bernath] This year's diary is full of events, of which the most important ones for us are Mikhail Gorbachev's visit to Hungary and the Budapest session of the Warsaw Pact Political Consultative Committee. Deputy Foreign Minister Miklos Barity briefed the members of the Foreign Affairs Committee, not primarily on the content of the communique and of the appeal -- this is something that the deputies are familiar with -- but on the political significance of these discussions.

[Barity] For our country preparing for and holding these discussions was an extremely great honor and responsibility. According to the unanimous appraisal of all the participants we have fulfilled our role of host and provided good conditions for the work of the session.

During the past week the eyes of the world were on Budapest. Both Comrade Gorbachev's visit to Hungary and the Political Consultative Committee session were events of world political significance. At the session of the political consultative body the communique was approved, as was the appeal of the member states of the Warsaw Pact to the NATO countries, to every country, to the countries of Europe, concerning the program for the reduction in European armed forces and conventional weapons.

[Bernath] The general secretaries and first secretaries who led the delegations formulated their view of the international situation in the communique. The deputy foreign minister said the following on this topic.

[Barity] The leaders of the member states noted with concern that a radical, favorable turn of events in the sphere of the international situation had not yet come about. The hopes regarding a rebirth of detente, which were evoked in world public opinion by the Soviet-American summit in Geneva, have not yet come about. The United States has taken measures in various areas which are contrary to the spirit of Geneva; it is continuing the realization of the plans to deploy weapons in space, has refused to join the Soviet moratorium on nuclear tests and, most recently, it announced the repudiation of SALT II.

These are unfavorable and dangerous developments because they are hindering progress on those issues which we regard as the main problems of the present time. These are: making progress in the sphere of the limitation of armaments and disarmament, the strengthening of international peace and security, the universal advance of the concept of security, and advancing the process of the rebuilding of detente.

Based on the consistent principled policy of the Warsaw Pact starting from the realistic evaluation of the situation, emphasis was placed at the session on bringing about forward-looking steps aimed at improvements. The session dealt in detail and in a comprehensive manner with the situation of the European Continent. It reaffirmed our firm intention to strengthen and advance European cooperation and the Helsinki process.

Europe has a great interest in the revival of detente and the posssibility exists for achieving it. Despite the setbacks and temporary standstills, the Helsinki process, the Final Act signed in the Finlandia Palace, have stood the test of time: They are still providing a framework and forums for strengthening European dialogue and cooperation.

The session provided a clear statement as regards the East-West dialogue: It requires its continuation, endeavoring to ensure that the dialogue will lead to concrete agreements and results. It is in this spirit that we are preparing for the Vienna meeting to be held in November this year.

The member states are for this reason urging the establishment of official relations between CEMA and the Common Market and the development of economic relations between the countries belonging to these organizations.

[Bernath] The new Budapest appeal of the Warsaw Pact received particular emphasis during the National Assembly Foreign Affairs Committee deliberations.

[Barity] This proposal completed the sphere of all those initiatives that the Warsaw Pact and the Soviet Union have made to the world during the recent period. The proposal complements the comprehensive Soviet initiative -- made on 15 January - for the elimination of nuclear and chemical weapons by the end of the century in a very important area. It is frequently said in the Western countries that the reason progress has not been achieved in nuclear disarmament and arms limitation is that the Warsaw Pact has considerable superiority over NATO in the fields of armed forces and conventional armaments.

The Warsaw Pact has proven with this proposal that it does not aim at superiority in this field either, and is ready for reduction and disarmament by taking the security points of view of all concerned sides into consideration. The reduction of armed forces and conventional armaments is particularly important on our continent, as the level of military opposition is the highest here. The proposal aims at reducing tension, at extending detente to the military area, and at assuring military balance on a lower, rationally sufficient level.

The proposals put forward in the appeal form an independent whole; there are no preconditions for discussing them and we are ready to examine the proposals and opinions of all concerned sides, including the NATO countries, in a constructive way. There are a number of alternatives for discussing these proposals. They could be discussed in the course of the second stage of the conference dealing with the questions of European security and measures aimed at strengthening confidence, within the framewrk of the Vienna talks on force reductions, or even at a special European forum to be convened for this purpose.

The question of verification is also characterized by an important, new, flexible, constructive approach. The possibility exists for achieving serious and wide-ranging agreement, for the use of national and international means and processes of verification, including on-site inspection.

[Bernath] According to the general evaluation, a new stage of the detente process could open up in the wake of the appeal. Deputy Foreign Minister Miklos Barity summarized the first reaction as follows:

[Barity] Naturally, we have not yet been able to prepare a final and comprehensive evalution. It can, however, already be stated that the appeal has been received with great attention and interest everywhere in the world. Statements made by leading statesmen and politicians promise that the proposals will be examined carefully and seriously. The fact that, unlike the reaction to our initiatives in earlier periods, the West has not rejected the current proposal and has promised to examine it seriously, may in itself prove to be a major and favorable change.

[Bernath] May, but whether it will or not is something that even the deputies in the Foreign Affairs Committee could only ask questions about. Do those in charge of the practice of foreign policy know when the process of troop reductions incorporated in the appeal might reach us? The essence of the reply given by Matyas Szuros is that we must be very rigorous in taking reality as our point of departure; we are waiting for the West's reply and negotiations can only begin if NATO responds favorably. If the negotiations were to reach a favorable conclusion, the process of troop reductions and arms limitation could reach Hungary soon afterwards. However, at the moment we are only at the very beginning of this road.

REAGAN TONE ON USSR ARMS PROPOSAL 'FAVORABLE'

[Report by Elemer Csak in New York]

[Text] The U.S. President has spoken in an usually favorable tone about the most recent USSR disarmament proposals. Elemer Csak reports from New York.

It is a new development in the relationship between the two great powers that in the recent past the USSR has submitted a series of proposas, said Reagan, and he added: The most important of these is the proposal which the USSR made in Geneva for the reduction of nuclear weapons. The United States cannot accept the plan without certain changes, yet the proposal shows that Moscow has resolved to make serious efforts, stated the President. Mutual will can lead to a turning point, continued Reagan, and he expressed his conviction that the atmosphere is favorable for a serious exchange of views. The U.S. President reiterated his readiness for the summit meeting planned for this year, and urged that the meeting to prepare this should be held at a location according to choice. On the topic of the problem of disarmament, the U.S. President this time did not accuse the USSR of armament, and he stated that on his part he is ready to seize every means to reduce of nuclear weapons.

Gebula Speaks

["Gebala Speech (abridged)" -- PAP headline; at 19 June session of the Sejm in Warsaw]

[Text] Warsaw, June 19: Over the past two years -- as a result of the reforms in the national economy -- state-run enterprises and other factories achieved a status of independent and self-governing bodies operating in tune with the principle of self-financing and being in a position to allocate funds for remuneration and to choose ways of distributing them.

Factory remuneration systems cover more than 6,200 plants with about 6.4 million employees. The process of introducing them is still under way. A return to the previous and obligatory ways of remunerating, connected with particular industrial branches, could waste the achievements of the two-year period of transforming the consciousness and economic education of employees in accordance with a slogan: Both the Pays and Their Increases Should Depend Only on Quantity and Quality of Work and Economic Effects of an Enterprise.

The government presented a bill which in the best way matches the need to preserve the to-date achievements of the collective labour contracts with the principles of economic reform.

The bill also provides for new solutions which are to adapt collective labour contracts to the new legal, economic and social conditions. It has been required that collective contracts should be compatible with law and social and economic policy of the state formulated by the Sejm in the national socio-economic plan.

The law settles the issue of solving disputes and includes a proposal to exclude the right to start a collective dispute still in the period of passing and registering the law. The government is of the opinion that actions concerning negotiations on contracts should take place in an atmosphere of public peace.

The most profound modifications concern functions of a collective contract in enterprises operating in the system of the economic reform.

Thus it is expected to set up a two-level system of collective contracts, namely, a contract for an industrial branch and department and a contract in an enterprise connected with the first one.

The bill grants broad powers to factory agreements. They are to define, among other things, tasks aiming to improve results achieved by a factory and to strengthen work discipline and joint actions to fulfil enterprises' plans and to obtain more financial means.

It is necessary, according to the government, to fix the volume of wage components in collective contracts and factory agreements by dint of the work evaluation method, as the latter provides the way to a gradual but comprehensive putting to rights of the extremely complex wage relations in enterprises, branches, professionals and on a national scale.

The government wants to put the matter clearly -- in connection with striking up collective contracts there can be no escaping from the mechanisms of raising the remuneration based on self-financing, set in the new economic system, and on the motivation wage function, tying the volume of remuneration to the work output.

The draft leaves powers to a considerable part of enterprises to pursue their own wage policies, based on the self-financing principle while, generally, the draft respects the inalienable rights of the trade unions to represent the economic and social service interests of the working people, matching these powers with the remaining functions of the trade unions.

The draft stipulates for an important part to be played by the branch and professional contracts in putting the wage proportions to rights, barring, on the other hand, a rebirth of the practice of giving arbitrary priority to the group interests to the detriment to the social ones.

COMMENTARY ON LETTER TO REAGAN REGARDING KUKLINSKI

LD191834 Warsaw Television Service in Polish 1730 GMT 19 Jun 86

[Text] Alojyz Mazewski, chairman of the Congress of the American Polonia [Poles living abroad], was offended by the Department of State statement on Kuklinski, an American spy, which, we quote: Does not answer many questions important to Poles and Americans of Polish origin! In connection with this, the Voice of America reports, he sent a letter to President Reagan in which he asked why Kuklinski could not find a job after his arrival in the United States; why U.S. broadcasting stations have not yet interviewed him; and finally, why solidarity was not warned about the planned declaration of martial law.

Had Mr Mazewski acquainted himself with the Polish Government press spokesman's statements, he would not have had to pretend to be absolutely naive and would have understood Washington's embarassment. However, one ought to agree with one statement by the chairman of American Polonia, namely, we quote: The trust and friendship of the Polish nation toward America has been undermined! Let us add: Toward the U.S. Administration, and not for the first time.

I note, the collocutor underscored, that President Nicolae Ceausescu had been the first head of state to have advanced such a proposal, as far back as 1978, and I consider this initiative is the only one to lead to a just resolution of the intricate issues in the region, including the situation of the Palestinian people. He hoped that Romania's demarches on Mideast questions, on peace problems at large, will yield good, tangible results. The head of the delegation pointed to the fine relations between the Palestanian and Romanian parliaments, their close collaboration, bilaterally and internationally alike.

ZARKOVIC ASSESSES LCY INTERCONGRESS ACTIVITY

[Text] Belgrade, 19 Jun (TANJUG) -- The forthcoming 13th LCY Congress is expected to enhance the awareness in society that difficult problems facing us cannot be resolved except by increased efforts, better performance, and more courage on our part in tackling them. This task will be easier since in the intercongress period, and after the 13th session of the LCY Central Committee, in particular, the League of Communists succeeded in providing full insight into the causes of the crisis, pointed to the ways out of the difficulties, and did a great deal in stimulating overall social activities.

This is how Vidoje Zarkovic, president of the Presidium of the LCY Central Committee, assessed the LCY's activity in the period between the two congresses and formulated the tasks of the 13th LCY Congress in an interview for Yugoslav television.

Admittedly, he said, it was with considerable delay that the LC became aware of and exposed the tendencies which led to the economic crisis. It also showed inadequate determination in its reaction to the mounting voluntariasm in the economic sphere. It is also true that, rather belatedly, the LC sounded the alarm signal for a more resolute confrontation with some tendencies which tended to distort the fundamental aspects of socioeconomic relations as established by the SFRY Constitution and the resolutions of the 10th and 11th LCY Congresses.

In the course of the preparations for the 13th congress the LCY Central Committee paid particular attention to the following three tasks -- to stimulate and accelerate the development of socialist self-mangement, to accelerate the activities aimed at strengthening the unity of both our entire community and the LCY, and to create conditions for the speedier abandonment of the extensive type of economic activity.

If this is to be achieved the LC must, Zarkovic stressed, make changes in its composition and its manner of work. It must, to a greater extent, be representative of the working class and working people and of their interests and views, it must democratize its internal relations and at the same time it must strive toward greater unity on the principles of democratic centralism. It is of particular importance that in the period to come the party acts in a more resolute and fighting manner. The strength of our opponents does not stem from their numbers or the forcefulness of their ideas but, above all, from our weaknesses.

The great weakness of the LC lies in its inadequate activity in implementing its own stance and conclusion.

For, he noted, any conclusions and decisions are worth the extent to which they are implemented in practice. If they are not carried out all the efforts invested in preparing them are futile. Our weakest point, Zarkovic stressed, is the lack of action and unity within the LC in the sense that there is no united action in carrying out the policies we all agreed upon. Unfortunately this weakness is not characteristic of the LC alone -- society as a whole seems to be afflicted by them since many normative acts, both legal and self-managing as well as laws fail to be enacted.

One of the reasons behind the LC's inefficiency is the fact that as a result of the loosening of the principle of democratic centralism, some organizations and communists in them are behaving as if the adopted stance and decisions are no concern of theirs. In the coming period the LC must base its activity on the fact that it will be able to enhance its tarnished reputation as the vanguard of the working class to the extent to which it is capable and to change the situation and develop practical activity and not just to the extent to which it is capable of describing them. Of course, Zarkovic stressed, this is closely connected with the issue of responsibility in the LC, and its leaderships in particular.

Zarkovic went on to note that in recent years polycenteric etatism had gained ground at all levels in sociopolitical communities and stressed that there is no difference in the attitude on the part of polycentric etatism to self-management from that of centralistic etatism. Both kinds of etatism are striving to push self-management aside and to take over the control of those social activities for which people in associated labor, organized on the basis of self-management, are responsible. However, polycentric etatisms are not clashing with self-management alone but are in conflict with each other, thus weakening the unity not only of the country but also of the LCY. It is understandable, Zarkovic stressed, that polycentric etatism and its negative consequences cannot be defeated by returning to etatistsic centralism. Our unity would not be strengthened by it at all; it would remain as weak as it is in the conditions of polycentrism. Polycentric etatism, like any other form of etatism, can be overcome only by a struggle for a more consistent realization of the constitutionally-determined position of workers in associated labor.

First of all, Zarkovic said, it is necessary to strengthen self-management in basic organization of associated labor. The League of Communists will oppose all trends which try to diminish the role and significance of basic organizations as the basic cells of self-management, and it will also oppose all dogmas and prejudices about the omnipotence of associated labor in its basic cells, which try to make them only cells in a system of freely associated labor. In order to realize this, we shall have to fight more resolutely than we have so far against group-property tendencies within the organizations of associated labor themselves.

According to Vidoje Zarkovic greater attention will also have to be devoted to further development of the delegate system, since it is presently considerably formalized, as there is no regular communication between delegates and their grassroots. We shall also have to do much more on explaining certain obscurities about the role of state in our system. On the one hand we must oppose the arbitrary spreading of state authority in managing tasks of social reproduction, while on the other hand we must more resolutely demand that the state should carry out more efficiently those functions which are under its purview.

We are against etatism, but we are not against the role of the state in our system as an instrument in the hands of workers and working people organized on the principles of self-management.

At the end of the interview the president of the Presidium of the LCY Central Committee concluded that the period between the next two congresses should include a gradual way out of the economic crisis and opening up of prospects for a dynamic development in stable conditions. All the necessary conditions for this have been achieved. On the one hand the League of Communists has thrown light on the causes of the economic crisis and on the other difficulties, and pointed out directions of activity to overcome them. On the other hand, the awareness that we can get out of these difficulties only through strengthening unity, rather than through divisions has matured, but only through the development of self-management, rather than etatism, Vidoje Zarkovic stressed in his interview with Yugoslav radio and television.

FORTHCOMING 13TH LCY CONGRESS WORKINGS PREVIEWED

[Text] Belgrade, June 19 (TANJUG) -- After almost 20 years, the 13th Congress of the League of Communists of Yugoslavia (LCY) which will be held late this month will abandon the practice under which the highest gathering of Yugoslav Communists only approved the members of LCY bodies, elected earlier by congresses and conferences of the republican, provincial, and Yugoslav People's Army party organizations. The Central Committee auditing and statutory committees will be elected by delegates to the 13th congress.

Under a decision of the present Central Committee, the 13th congress will elect 165 members of the Central Committee by secret ballot. The candidates were nominated in April and May at the republican and provincial LC congresses and conferences.

If a candidate does not win a sufficient number of votes, a new candidate will be put forward at the congress itself and will be elected by secret ballot.

The new Central Committee will hold a session immediately after the congress at which it will elect, again by secret ballot, the Presidency of the LCY Central Committee. The Presidency comprises two members from each of the republican and provincial LC organizations, while the presidents of the republican, provincial and Yugoslav People's Army LC organizations are members of the body of virtue of office.

In the case that a candidate does not secure sufficient votes, another will be nominated at the same session and the election procedure will be repeated.

Yugoslavia's 2.1 million communists will have 1,544 delegates at the 13th congress. Almost two-thirds were elected under the principle of one delegate for every 2,000 communists. In addition, 470 delegates were elected under the parity principle. Namely, each republican LC organization sends 60 delegates, the provincial LC's 40 and the Yugoslav People's Army organization 30 delegates to the congress.

The 13th Congress will be attended by 204 members of LCY bodies -- the central, auditing and statutory committees -- who also have delegates status. This means that a total of 1,748 delegates will be taking part in the work of the congress.

Of the 1,544 elected delegates, 374 are aged between 27 and 35, while 305 are over 56. Where qualifications are concerned, the majority have university degrees (718) and are followed by workers (316). The delegates also include 226 veterans of the people's liberation struggle and 321 women.

SINAN HASANI CHAIRS PRESIDENCY SESSION

LD192229 Zagreb Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 2000 GMT 19 Jun 86

[Text] A session of the SFRY Presidency, chaired by Sinan Hasani, has examined the cooperation of the SFRY Presidency with the Presidencies of the republics and autonomous provinces. Taking part in the work of the session were the presidents of the Presidencies of the republics and autonomous provinces. It was assessed that this cooperation has been successful, particularly in the area of the country's defense, protection of constitutional order, and foreign policy. It was also stressed that this cooperation should be further promoted, starting with the constitutional obligations of the SFRY Presidency to harmonize the common interests of the republics and autonomous provinces in order to achieve the equality of nations and nationalities. In the debate, the need was noted for the SFRY Presidency, in cooperation with the Presidencies of the republics and autonomous provinces, to regularly and more directly contribute to the more effective coordination of stances with circumstances and the adoption of decisions in federal organs.

PRESIDENCIES ON HALTING EMIGRATION FROM KOSOVO

[Text] Belgrade, June 19 (TANJUG) -- The Presidency of Yugoslavia and the Presidency of the Central Committee of the League of Communists of Yugoslavia (LCY) today reached concrete measures and actions for preventing migration of members of Serbian and Montenegrin nationalities from the Yugoslav Province of Kosovo. The measures are the most precisely worked out ones since the counter-revolutionary events took place in Kosovo in 1981.

The state and party Presidencies set definite time limits for clearing up all suspicious cases of damages, diversions, fires and explosions in the province, which is part of the Yugoslav Republic of Serbia.

The Presidencies also instructed that all complaints about acts by the interior affairs bodies be investigated, and that the exact number of immigrants from Albania be established, as well as how the acquired property in Kosovo.

The two Presidencies obliged the Yugoslav Government to establish all cases of usurpation of public property and propose measures for its return.

The Yugoslav state and party Presidencies sent a request to the competent bodies to remove all illegalities committed during the expropriation of property.

The two Presidencies also proposed that the possibility of introducing compulsory bilingual schooling and mixed classes be reviewed, because, as they stressed, this facilitated life together, employment and mutual closeness.

Since Kosovo separatists are trying to break up ethnically homogenous villages, the two presidencies consider it essential that measures be taken to prevent Albanians from moving to such communities.

The carrying out of these and other measures should finally enable the migration of Serbs and Montenegrins from Kosovo to stop, as well as ensure the return of many citizens who, under pressure from Albanian separatists, moved to other parts of Yugoslavia.

SAWPY BODY DISCUSSES TANJUG'S FINANCIAL WOES

[Summary] Belgrade, 19 Jun (TANJUG) -- Today's SAWPY Federal Conference Presidium session debated housing policy. Presidium member Marjan Rozic, in his introductory speech, said that the first quarter of this year had seen a revival in construction, but because of previous delays the situation in the housing sphere is largely unchanged.

"The Presidium approved the conclusions of the SAWPY Federal Conference section for information and public opinion on the need for a speedy and permanent solution to the material position of the TANJUG, which is bringing into question the ability of this organization to carry out its basic activities. For 7 years in a row, according to TANJUG Director Mikhail Saranovic, TANJUG has not had the funds nor the possibilities for strengthening the material bases of its work. Nevertheless, in terms of output, it has become one of the five or six largest agencies in the world and is among the most productive organizations and institutions of its kind.

"Speaking about TANJUG's sources of income, Saranovic stressed that this organization only has a regular business relationship with associated labor. From the other two sources of financing, the federation and the information media, TANJUG has for years been receiving payments for its services and programs which are considerably below their real cost. Thus the technical situation is very worrying, and this is also why in this relatively small collective of about 800 people, 23.3 percent have not had their housing situation resolved; we have only 2.33 square meters of workspace per employee, and personal incomes are below the level of the branch to which we belong, Saranovic said.

"The TANJUG director stressed that the agency had never in the past several decades received a dinar in subsidies, and is not seeking this now. It is only asking for the full cost price for its programs, and will try itself, as it always has, to make the most rational and efficient use of these funds and to continue to develop as the agency of the federation, republics and provinces, and of associated labour."

Saranovic concluded that because of its financial position the question of housing for its employees is also a major problem for TANJUG. Following the debate on this problem, support was given to proposals for a long-term and systemic solution to TANJUG's material problems. The need was also stressed for securing funds to finance the modernization of TANJUG's technical basis, including computerization.

The Presidium also relieved Milan Uzelac of his post as chairman of the SAWPY Federation Conference Presidium Cadre Council Commission because of his appointment to a new post, and elected Stojan Dimovski, secretary of the SAWPY Federal Conference, as the new chairman of this commission.

The session also appointed Milan Rakas, hitherto chairman of the SAWPY Federal Conference section for information and public opinion, as new director of the BORBA work organization, and Stanislav. Marinkovic as new chief and responsible editor of the paper.

SETINC ON CENTRALISM, SEPARATISM, LANGUAGE IN ARMY

AU161950 Belgrade BORBA in Serbo-Croatian 7-8 Jun 86 p 3

[Interview with Franc Setinc, president of the SAWP republican Conference of Slovenia, by Jovan Pjevic -- date and place not given]

[Excerpts] The 10th Congress ofthe LC of Slovenia adopted clear stands concerning all the most topical and important questions about the further development of the SFRY and about the position of the SR of Slovenia in the SFRY and its responsibility for a successful socialist and self-managing development of the SFRY, and these stands were also acceptable to all Yugoslavs of a socialist and self-managing orientation beyond the SR of Slovenia too. Nevertheless, there are still various questions, even provocative and tendentious ones, asked about the so-called "Slovenian attitude toward joint problems and interests of Yugoslavia," about which we talked with Franc Setinc, president of the SAWP Republican Conference of Slovenia (and candidate for member of the LCY Central Committee and its future Presidium from the LC of Slovenia).

We were first interested in his opinion about the complaints that the Slovenes live well (although there are not only Slovenes living in the SR of Slovenia, over 10 percent are members of other peoples and nationalities), and that they are therefore against changes in the system, that is, that the status quo suits them.

First, Setinc stresses, the division of the people into those who favor changes in the system and those who allegedly favor the status quo is senseless. If you ask people whether they favor the change of our social order (socialist self-management, policy of nonalignment and independence, federal order, etc) you will see immediately that most of them from every republic and province are against the revision of those achievements for which our peoples and nationalities waged such a heroic struggle and lost so many lives. Those are our foundations which we consider inviolable.

[Pjevic] Nothing has been given forever, and a system cannot be made forever either, that is, some changes are necessary.

[Setinc] Revolutionary changes of everything within these foundations, everything that has shown itself in practice to be not good and to hamper development, are necessary. This is being worked upon at the moment.

[Pjevic] One can hear remarks that the danger of federal centralism, unitarianism, and great-Serbian hegemonism is too much emphasized in Slovenia, and the danger of separatist nationalism underestimated.

[Setinc] Our standpoint is that both those tendencies are equally dangerous, that they mutually cause and stimulate each other, and that therefore one must underestimate neither of them. By the way, danger sometimes looks bigger through the eyes of fear, so one proclaims as unitarianism and separatist nationalism even those things which are not that. For instance, one can and must by no means proclaim the debate on the common Slovene cultural area as nationalist separatism, because what is involved is the concern of a people about its parts on the otherside of our borders.

[Pjevic] What is the real significance and impact of some rather lonely demands on nationally homogenous units in the Yugoslav People's Army [YPA], and why does one discuss so much the language in the YPA and inscriptions in barracks, when those questions have been adequately solved by the Constitution and law?

[Setinc] The demands on nationally homogenous units in the YPA are, as you have put it, rather lonely, and so senseless that they do not deserve more attention. On the other hand, it is wrong and damaging if the very discussion on language in the YPA is proclaimed as something damaging and even hostile. Although that question has been legally adequately regulated, there are some problems that appear in practice which we must examine and solve. Since he does not believe that animosity toward the Army has such proportions as some people say it has, Admiral Mamula, federal secretary for national defense, showed interest in the remarks of young people from Slovenia and expressed the wish to hear the young people who have both founded and well-intentioned critical remarks which are, by the way, often presented at party and other meetings in the YPA itself. Some people simply think that one should not publicly discuss the Army at all, something which has not been true for a long time now. The reasons for the small number of Slovenes in military schools are deeper, and will have to be seriously analysed, and are not, as some people very erroneously think, individual excesses.

DIZDAREVIC ANSWERS QUESTIONS ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

[Text] Belgrade, 19 Jun (TANJUG) — With its partners from the Nonaligned Movement, Yugoslavia is at this juncture involved in discussions of all essential questions related to preserving peace and security. This is completely understandable when it is taken into account that we are in the last stage of preparations for the Eighth Summit Conference of Nonaligned Countries in Harare.

This was stated today by Raif Dizdarevic, federal secretary for foreign affairs, at a meeting with foreign journalists in the International Press Center in Belgrade. Dizdarevic commented in great detail on all aspects of Yugoslav activity on the international stage and answered questions by foreign correspondents accredited to Yugoslavia.

In his introductory address the federal secretary for foreign affairs stressed that Yugoslavia is maximally involved in developing bilateral contacts and promoting cooperation with all partners on the international stage. Among the priorities of Yugoslav foreign policy, he indicated the policy of goodneighborliness, activity in all tasks related to the CSCE and which lead to strengthening peace, cooperation, and security in Europe. Yugoslavia is developing bilateral cooperation with all European countries and also its activity in the group of neutral and nonaligned European countries, Dizdarevic said.

Speaking about the political and economic problems the world is facing on the eve of the Harare summit, Dizdarevic assessed that international relations were aggravated, which also implies relations between the Soviet Union and the United States, as well as North-South relations.

Relations between the Soviet Union and the United States are not developing in the way we expected after the Gorbachev-Reagan Geneva meeting, Dizdarevic said, assessing that this is also reflected in the general international situation. According to Dizdarevic, because the United States has announced that it will not honor SALT II, the world may enter a new arms race.

The federal secretary positively assessed the fact that both the United States and the USSR maintain their positions on negotiations, and have made efforts for a new Gorbachev-Reagan meeting, and said negotiations and agreements are needed by the whole world.

Dizdarevic singled out international economic problems as the second key problem of the modern world, citing them among the most significant problems on the agenda of the Harare conference. He spoke of the enormous syphoning of assets from the developing to the developed countries. From 1981 to 1985, developing countries repaid $600 billion of debts to creditors, out of which interest amounted to 338 billion. Because of a drop in raw material prices, developing countries lost $65 billion last year, and because of a drop in oil prices, this loss will be increased by another 60 billion this year. Dizdarevic spoke of the danger of a "financial bomb" explosion, which, he said, would not choose its victims.

Raif Dizdarevic linked the entire complex of political and economic problems of the modern world with the preparations for the Harare summit, saying that they will be on the summit agenda, with particular attention being devoted to hotbeds of crisis, primarily the situation in South Africa.

Several journalists expressed interest in the Yugoslav stand on the election of Kurt Waldheim as president of Austria. Raif Dizdarevic stressed that Kurt Waldheim had been elected by the Austrian people and that Yugoslavia had and still has an interest in having as good as possible relations with neighboring Austria. He recalled that the Austrian foreign minister will pay a visit to Yugoslavia at the beginning of July, when reference would be made to all aspects of bilateral cooperation.

Replying to a question on the pending visit of Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang, Raif Dizdarevic said that relations between Yugoslavia and China are developing very well. With regard to relations with the EEC, Dizdarevic noted the "period of difficulties" because of the ban on imports of agricultural products from Yugoslavia. He expressed the hope that the forthcoming talks on cooperation between the SFRY and the EEC will be successfully concluded and that they will contribute to the further development of cooperation.

On the topic of relations with Albania there have been no changes for the better, Dizdarevic said in reply to a question. Albania is continuing to persistently advocate propaganda and stands which make impossible an improvement in relations which Yugoslavia desires and which would be in the interests of both sides.

We have tried and are trying to develop cooperation with all our neighbors, Dizdarevic said, and expressed regret that conflicts have arisen recently with Greece which Yugoslavia neither desired not evoked. The worsening of relations came about through the fault of the other side, which is negating the existence of the Macedonian nation. Raif Dizdarevic repeated that Yugoslavia has no interest in poor relations with any of its neighbors.

Replying to a question on the recent attack on Libya and the reaction of the SFRY and of the international community, Raif Dizdarevic stressed that in every aspect of this case the nonaligned countries defend the principle of territorial integrity, independence, noninterference, and the sovereign right of every country to determine its own internal and foreign policy.

Yugoslavia endorses all proposals leading toward halting the arms race, the federal secretary said in connection with the proposal of Soviet leader Gorbachev on the Warsaw Pact nuclear disarmament program and on the reduction of conventional weapons in Europe.

Replying to questions, Raif Dizdarevic warned of the danger from racism in southern Africa, and expressed the fear that as a result of the refusal of the South African Government to meet the demands of the majority of the population, there could be bloodshed of unimaginable proportions. The majority of the population is left with no alternative but to resort to arms to achieve its elementary rights, Dizdarevic said, and stressed that at the Harare summit the problems of southern Africa will be a priority item on the agenda.

The federal secretary did not agree with the views of some foreign journalists who asked questions in connection with the "erosion" of the policy of nonalignment. Since the meeting in New Delhi, Dizdarevic said, there has been a consolidation of the state of affairs in the movement, a strengthening of unity on the basis of the original principles, and greater involvement of the nonaligned in international affairs. In the 25 years of its existence, Dizdarevic recalled, only Burma has left the Nonaligned Movement, but it has continued to conduct a policy of nonalignment.

Speaking about conflicts between individual nonaligned countries, Dizdarevic recalled the historical heritage, which has not favored these countries, and the external influences. He assessed the Iran-Iraq war as senseless and equally harmful to both sides, stressing that the nonaligned countries will make a new attempt in Harare to end this conflict.

The federal secretary also answered questions on terrorism. He stressed that Yugoslavia has always been and will continue to be not only against all forms of terrorism, but will also continue to advocate the cooperation of all countries in preventing this evil. He recalled that Yugoslavia has often been the target of terrorism, that seven Yugoslav diplomatic representatives abroad have been killed and 15 seriously wounded as victims of terrorism. Dizdarevic said that double standards should not exist where this problem is concerned, and he underlined that Yugoslavia will not allow its territory to be used for terrorist activities.

The federal secretary's conversation with foreign journalists lasted over 2 hours.

OLYMPIC COMMITTEE'S TAKAC ON 1988 GAMES VENUES

AU162054 Bratislava PRAVDA in Slovak 14 Jun 86 p 8

[Unattributed report: "The Proposals Are Realistic, I Believe in an Agreement; Artur Takac on the Question of Organizing the 1988 Olympic Games also in the DPRK"]

[Text] Yesterday we reported on the proposal advanced by the International Olympic Committee (IOC) in connection with the 1988 Olympics. Artur Takac from Yugoslavia, member of the board of the International Athletics Federation (IAAF), who is in Bratislava as an honorary guest of the PRAVDA-Televizia-Slovnaft track-and-field event, naturally takes an intense interest in problems concerning the Olympic Games, all the more so as he is personal adviser of IOC chairman J.A. Samaranch. Together with Rudolf Dusek, our member on the board of the European Athletics Association (EAA), he participated in a well-attended press conference yesterday where he answered many questions concerning the queen of sports. We took this opportunity to obtain clarity about the most topical issue in connection with the 1988 Olympics -- the question of staging some Olympic competitions also on the soil of the DPRK.

"The IOC and its chairman and everyone interested in sports take foremost interest in ridding the Olympic movement and the Olympic Games of the problems that weighed on them not only in the period of Moscow 1980 and Los Angeles 1984, but even earlier, particularly in connection with Munich 1972 and Montreal 1976," A. Takac told us. "But now we are in an even more complicated situation because the next Olympic Games will be held in Seoul. Of course, the Olympic Charter must be respected. The 1981 session of the IOC chose Seoul in an election. We take a special interest in having all IOC member-countries take part in the 1988 Olympics. This interest is shared by international sports federations and national Olympic committees."

[Question] However, the problems caused by the choice of Seoul must be resolved.

[Takac] One way out would be a reasonable agreement between the national Olympic committees of the DPRK and South Korea, between the agencies of the two states. The IOC proposes that the competions in three to four sports (which I would not like to name yet) be held on the territory of the DPRK. Of course, the National Olympic Committee of South Korea must first express its approval of this proposal and the DPRK National Olympic Committee must also express its opinion. The adoption of our proposal would mark a great victory for the Olympic idea, sports, and world youth.

[Question] The two national Olympic committees know the proposal in some detail and should present their positions by 30 June. Do you believe in the success of this proposal?

[Takac] The IOC proposal is really good and I am convinced that an agreement will be reached.

POLITICAL OBSERVER LAUDS JOINT SOVIET APPEAL

[Text] Sofia, June 22 (BTA political observer Nencho Karanov) -- A call for political responsibility, for joint actions against the nuclear threat -- thus may be assessed the resolution of the commission on foreign affairs of the Soviet of the Union and the Soviet of Nationalities of the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R. This document analyses the situation which has been brought about by the actions of the U.S. Government against the Soviet-American agreements for limitation of strategic arms. The resolution contains an appeal toward the members of the U.S. Congress, toward parliamentarists from other countries in the world, to do all they can to influence the U.S. Government in order that it observer the Soviet-American agreements SALT-1 and SALT-2, that it should withdraw from actions undermining the agreement for limitation of anti-missile armaments.

The debates in the commissions on foreign affairs of two chambers of the Soviet parliament were provided by the recent decision of the U.S. President that the U.S. shall cease to observe the agreements for limitation of strategic offensive arms, which has been concluded between the U.S.S.R. and the U.S.A. It is well known that these actions of Washington caused serious alarm all over the owrld, as well as in the U.S. themselves. Even the House of Representatives of the U.S. Congress has adopted a resolution appealing to the President to observe SALT-2. According to THE NEW YORK TIMES, despite the fact that this resolution has not the force of a law it reflects the wide discontent in the Congress from the decision of the White House to elminate SALT-2. Influential circles among the West European allies the U.S. also have expressed their dissatisfaction.

There is a growing conviction that these actions of the U.S Government undermine the whole process of limitation and reduction of armaments and increase the dangerous international tension.

In this situation everybody's responsibility is growing, the responsibility of those who hold the power, of parliamentarists, of all people who feel responsible for the fate of mankind. A barrier should be raised before the dangerous ambitions of the U.S. to destroy the military-strategic parity, to reach military superiority over the Soviet Union.

Members of parliaments may give a special contribution of their own. That is why one may only greet the initiative of the Soviet MPs for organization, as soon as possible, of a businesslike meeting between members of the commissions on foreign affairs of the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S R. and of the U.S. Congress, which should discuss the situation brought about by the threat hanging over the Soviet-American agreements for limitation of strategic armaments. Another theme which should also be discussed is the necessity of halting of all nuclear test.

These problems concern the interests of mankind. That is why the appeal to parliamentarists all over the world is timely, it is a call to all MPs to express categorically their will for avoiding of the threat hanging over the planet, to oblige their governments to lead active policy of peace, disarmament and settlement of disputes through negotiations.

AS far as the socialist countries are concerned, the top level session of the Warsaw Treaty member-states in Budapest in the beginning of this month, once again clearly and categorically expressed its support to the numerous Soviet initiatives for peace and turn toward disarmament, proposed new important ideas for security and confidence. These initiatives are our joint platform for concrete actions for elimination of nuclear war threat.

CENTRAL COMMITTEE APPROVES PACT SUMMIT RESULTS

[Text] At its 17 June session the BCP Central Committee discussed and adopted a report on the work of the Warsaw Pact Policital Consultative Committee conference, held on 10 and 11 June in Budapest. Full and unanimous approval was expressed for the work of the Bulgarian delegation headed by Todor Zhivkov, general secretary of the BCP Central Committee and chairman of the State Council of the People's Republic of Bulgaria.

The BCP Central Committee expressed great appreciation for the thorough analysis of the complicated and tense international situation, contained in the documents adopted at the Budapest conference, which represent a further development and specification of the important aspects of the former declaration, adopted at the Sofia meeting of the Warsaw Pact Political Consultative Committee. The BCP Central Committee wholeheartedly supports the conclusions and the practical measures mapped out at the Budapest conference for the further consolidation of the political and defense alliance of the fraternal socialist countries in the interest of peace and security of the European Continent and throughout the world and for resolute resistance against the the forces of imperialism, in particular, as regards the imperialist circles in the United States, which neglect the will and aspirations of peoples to live in a world without weapons, in a world free of war.

The appeal, signed by the leaders of the delegations of the Warsaw Pact, to NATO and to all European countries, pertaining to the reduction of armed forces and conventional weapons in Europe, is a brilliant new confirmation of the peace-loving spirit, realism, and constructive character of socialist foreign policy, of the readiness of the fraternal countries to cooperate by all means for the preservation and intensification of political dialogue. The new peace initiatives of the allied socialist states represent an organic part of the further creative development of the program submitted by the socialist countries to halt the arms race, prevent nuclear disaster, establish a reliable system of universal security, and ensure constructive and mutually useful cooperation among states. These initiatives represent a comprehensive and all-around platform for joint practical actions aimed at achievement of the profoundly humanitarian goals that were pointed out at the Budapest conference.

The Budapest Central Committee once more confirmed the stand expressed by participants in the Budapest meeting that in the contemporary world there is no sensible alternative to the guarantee of the salvation and survival of human civilization except peaceful coexistence among states with different social systems and the full elimination of nuclear and conventional weapons, the foiling of the imperialist plans for "star wars," and the establishment of a lasting peace on earth and in outer space. This is why the BCP Central Committee unanimously and wholeheartedly supported the dynamic and constructive foreign policy of the CPSU and the Soviet Government, their program for the full elimination of mass destruction weapons, the coordinated line of the Warsaw Pact members aimed at the preservation and consolidation of peace, and at security on an equal basis for all peoples. The BCP Central Committee confirmed its profound conviction that the path leading towards these goals, which are of vital importance, is the gradual, stage-by-stage reduction of the military-strategic balance up to full and universal disarmament under strict international control.

The BCP Central Committee pointed out with particular gratification the comradely atmosphere, the constructive spirit of unity and cohesion, of sincere friendship, and of fruitful cooperation that characterized the work of the Budapest conference.

The BCP Central Committee evaluates the increasingly close cooperation among the fraternal Warsaw Pact members in the constant consolidation of their defense, their military-political alliance, in all sectors of their relations, as a guarantee for further successes in the peaceful advance of socialism, in implementing the historical projects mapped out at the party congresses in the interest of peace and constructive work, for the sake of the bright future of all mankind.

PROGRESS IN RELATIONS WITH ZIMBABWE PRAISED

[Text] Sofia, June 21 (BTA commentator Rumen Popov) -- The official visit to Bulgaria of Zimbabwe's President Mr. Canaan Banana, confirmed once again the upgrade development of the traditional friendly relations between the two countries and peoples. During their talks the two leaders assessed positively the mutually advantageous cooperation in the political, economic and techno-scientific sphere, and expressed the mutual desire for utilisation of all possibilities for further widening and deepening of the bilateral relations.

The significance of the visit of Zimbabwe's president lies not only in the outlining of the prospects for development of the bilateral cooperation but also in the fact that both sides have expressed identical or similar positions on the vital issues concerning the international situation. The two sides voiced their concern over the dangerous tension in the world due to the policy of the most aggressive imperialist circles. The Republic of Zimbabwe expressed its support to the comprehensive initiatives of the socialist community for halting of arms race, above all the nuclear one, for liquidation of chemical and all other kinds of weapons for mass destruction, for prevention of armament in outer space.

The two leaders condemned resolutely the racist policy led by the Republic of South Africa and its aggressive actions against neighbouring countries. Mr. Todor Zhivkov and Mr. Canaan Banana expressed their support to the struggle of the peoples from the southern part of the African Continent for national and social liberation, against imperialism, colonialism, neocolonialism and racism. Bulgaria and Zimbabwe stressed the great importance of the actions of the non-aligned countries in international aspect [as received] for strengthening of understanding and cooperation among the peoples. The forthcoming 8th conference of the government and state leaders of the non-aligned countries in Harare is a proof for the high prestige of the Republic of Zimbabwe on the international arena, it is a recognition of its consistent policy toward liquidation of the tension in the southern part of Africa, against apartheid and racial discrimination.

The visit of Zimbabwe's president to Bulgaria manifested the desire of the two countries to continue to develop their relations on a mutually advantageous basis, to contribute to the elimination of the danger from nuclear catastrophe, to the consolidation of peace and security on the planet.

ATANASOV HAILS SOVIET COOPERATION ON GAS PIPELINE

[Text] Sofia, June 20 (BTA) -- The flame symbolizing the completion of the U.S.S.R-Bulgaria gas main was lit in the town of Elin Pelin, Sofia County, today. Attending the ceremony were Mr. Georgi Atanasov, Politburo member of the CC of the BCP and chairman of the Council of Ministers, members of the government, senior party officials and business executives. Also present at the opening was a Soviet delegation, headed by Mr. Viktor Chernomyrdin, the Soviet minister of the gas industry, who delivered a congratulatory address. He said that the U.S.S.R.-Bulgaria gas main is the last word in technology and will be of decisive importance for the intensification of the economy. The further promotion of Soviet-Bulgarian ties and cooperation, he said, got fresh impetus from the 27th Congress of the CPSU and the 13th Congress of the BCP, which set new tasks for accelerated growth to the economies of the two countries.

For his part, Mr Georgi Atanasov said that this project is an offspring of the April general line of the Bulgarian Communist Party, a line that placed the national economy on a scientific basis and that gave scope to the country's industrialization. The Bulgarian specialists, builders and mounters, together with their Soviet colleagues, worked selflessly for the successful completion of the gas conduit on the territory of Bulgaria. The construction of the second stage of the project and the closing of the circuit, related to an increase in the import of natural gas, became possible as a result of Bulgaria's participation, together with other C.M.E.A. member states, in building the "Soyuz" gas pipe line from Orenburg to the western border of the U.S.S.R.

Now this country has a gas conduit on an up-to-date techno-scientific level, more than 1,400 km long and immensely important for the construction of the material-and-technical basis, for the successful building of the advanced socialist society in this country, Mr Georgi Atanasov pointed out. The utilization of the valuable raw material helps achieve high economic and social efficiency both in terms of raised labour productivity and an improved quality of output.

Mr Georgi Atanasov emphasized that Bulgaria's gasification is a fact as a result of the line of all-round cooperation and increasing closeness between the two countries and peoples, jointly worked out and consistently implemented by the BCP and the CPSU. The cooperation with and the help from the Soviet Union in building the gas main have more dimensions than one. They range from the design of the project to the training of Bulgarian specialists and workers, from its building and operation to the delivery of construction machines and technological equipment.

In conclusion, on behalf of the CC of the BCP and the government Mr Georgi Atanasov thanked the Bulgarian and the Soviet builders, mounters, specialists and workers who took part in the construction of the gas pipe line. Millions of cubic metres of gas round the clock come on the main running from Kharkov via Izmail and then through the territory of Romania to the industrial areas in northern and southern Bulgaria. The amount of gas arriving every two minutes is equivalent to 30 metric tons of fuel oil, and the conduit meets one fifth of this country's needs of petroleum products.

Bulgaria's gas supply system went under construction in 1969, when the first intergovernmental agreement was signed on the delivery of Soviet natural gas via Romania. So far the Bulgarian national economy has received more than 44,000 million cubic metres of natural gas, on which 53 enterprises are now running in metallurgy, heat generation, the chemical, cement and glass, ceramics, and other industries.

CPCZ'S HERMAN, USSR ENVOY ADDRESS PEACE RALLY

[Text] A traditional peace rally and meeting of Czechoslovak-Soviet friendship was held today in the Gottwald Valley in Brno-Lisen. More than 100,000 citizens welcomed a delegation of the CPCZ Central Committee led by Vladimir Herman, candidate member of its Presidium and leading secretary of the South Moravian Regional party committee.

In his address to participants at the peace rally, Comrade Vladimir Herman said that working people of the South Moravian Region are ready to implement responsibly the conclusions of the 17th party congress for the benefit of strengthening the socialist present and life in peace. It is in our power to achieve more, he said, it is only necessary to utilize all the reserves, also to achieve a much higher quality of work, to manage and organize better, and to remove negative phenomena. He recalled the challenging targets of the program of social and economic development and stressed the need for accelerated introduction of results of science and technology into production and the need for a better orientation and utilization of people's initiative.

When speaking about the struggle for peace, he said that, although the United States and some of its allies do not hesitate to threaten military intervention and continue in feverish armament in their efforts to achieve world rule, we support the peace initiatives of the Soviet Union and the socialist countries.

Comrade Vladimir Herman also recalled the appeal of Warsaw Pact states to members of the North Atlantic pact which supports the program of complete and general liquidation of nuclear and other mass destruction weapons by the end of this century, and stressed that we must not relax in the effort for the preservation of peace.

Viktor Lomakin, Soviet ambassador to Czechoslovakia, thanked the Czechoslovak working people for the strengthening of the Czechoslovak-Soviet friendship. When speaking about the foreign peace policy of the Soviet Union, he said that it is necessary to fight against the war before it starts. This is why the Soviet Union has proposed a comprehensive program of liquidation of nuclear weapons up to the year 2000 and has been observing for approximately 1 year the moratorium on all nuclear tests.

A rich cultural program was available for the whole day for participants in the peace rally in Brno-Lisen today.

'SKEPTICISM' 'SUSPICION' GREET REAGAN SPEECH

LD201836 Prague Television Service in Czech and Slovak 1730 GMT 20 Jun 86

[Text] President Ronald Reagan made a speech to the graduates of Glassboro High School. In an optimistic-sounding speech, he welcomed the new Soviet disarmament proposals as the beginning of serious efforts to limit nuclear arsenals. The U.S. press today comments on these words with considerable skepticism and points out that it could be just a new maneuver made under pressure of continually stronger opposition to the decision not to uphold the SALT II agreement. At the same time, some commentaries express suspicion that the U.S. Government may only want to blunt the cutting edge of congressional protests. Agencies point out that now it is up to the White House to show by deeds, not words, how seriously it means its efforts to limit nuclear arament.

HUSAK CONFERS WITH NEW SLOVAK OFFICIALS

[Text] Gustav Husak, general secretary of the CPCZ Central Committee and president of the Republic, today received at Prague Castle the newly elected Presidium of the Slovak National Council headed by its chairman, Villiam Salgovic and the new Slovak Government, led by Peter Colotka, its chairman, CPCZ Central Committee Presidium member.

Peter Colotka and Viliam Salgovic spoke on behalf of the representatives of the Slovak Socialist Republic. They assured Gustav Husak that the deputies of the Slovak National Council and the members of the Sovak Government are fully aware of their responsibility for the implementation of the program of the 17th CPCZ Congress. They emphasized that the Slovak people identify with and actively support the line of the congress since they are aware that it expresses the vital needs and interests of the Czechoslovak peoples, our nations, and nationalities.

In the interest of reinforcing the Czechoslovak federation, the Slovak National Council and the Slovak Government would closely cooperate with the Federal Assembly, Federal Government, the Czech National Council, and the Czech Government and strive for furthering the unity of the Czech and Slovak peoples and the other nationalities, and reinforce the unified economy of Czechoslovakia.

Comrades Peter Colotka and Viliam Salgovic went on to say that in the struggle for the quality of production, for more courageous application of the results of science and technology in practice, and for improving management and reinforcing order and discipline in all sectors will be at the center of attention of the supreme Slovak state bodies. More exacting demands would have to be applied also for the work of the top bodies of the Republic, and new ways of tackling problems that brake our progress will have to be sought.

They emphasized that further improvement of the work of the Slovak National Council, and of the Slovak government and of national committees, linked with the development of general initiative of the people and expanding their participation in management and administration, is of great importance for the implementation of our goals. Slovak bodies would stress in particular that national committees make full use of the authority entrusted to them in the comprehensive economic, social, and cultural development of relevant territorial parts. They expressed a conviction that a successful implementation of the conclusions of the 17th CPCZ Congress in the Slovak Socialist Republic would contribute to the further flourishing of Czechoslovakia.

Gustav Husak, general secretary of the CPCZ Central Committee and president of the Republic, congratulated the representatives of the national bodies of the Slovak Socialist Republic on their election and appointments to important state and government offices. He also expressed thanks for the positive results achieved by the Slovak National Council and the Slovak Government in the past period. The account of our work, as we assessed it at 17th CPCZ Congress, should that Czechoslovakia made an important improvement in all spheres. As a consequence, the economic potential of Slovakia in the framework of a united CSSR has also considerably strengthened, and the substantial differences in the conditions of economic, social, and cultural life of our peoples and individual areas of our state have been evened out. It can be justifiably said that with the efficient help of the Czech work class and intelligentsia, in the historically short period of socialist construction, Slovakia became an advanced part of the CSSR. This is convincing proof of correctness of the policy of the CPCZ and the socialist state on the issue of nationalities.

The results achieved in the social and economic development of Slovakia create not only a firm base for its further flourishment but at the same time they contribute toward the overall reinforcement of internal unity and of the international position of Czechoslovakia. They are also a good prerequisite for enabling Slovakia to contribute ever more to the qualitative development and reinforcement of the dynamic, unified Czechoslovak economy and the overall advancement of society.

The key issue for successful development of our society in the current stage is to accelerate the social-economic development through intensification, said Gustav Husak. In this effort we put foremost emphasis on the fulfillment of the Comprehensive Programme of Scientific-Technical Cooperation with the USSR. Their implementation, like the implementation of the agreed programs with the other CEMA countries, is a new step in the socialist economic integration and requires the active and responsible approach of the entire managerial and economic sphere.

The struggle for accelerating social-economic development requires new approaches to the fulfillment of the tasks in all sectors. Now the important thing is to thoroughly implement this line everywhere through concrete deeds. The governments and the ministries must concentrate in their work more on conceptual solution of the crucial tasks and problems, to control and organize the fulfillment of adopted resolutions with greater exactness, make the structure of administration systems of state and economic bodies simpler, promote the limitation of useless directions and rules -- or, to put it simply -- to implement their constitutional role in a more effective way.

Of particular importance is to secure the unified proceeding of the federal and the national governments and their mutual close and active cooperation. It is continuously important to improve the style of work of the state administration system, its conceptual, organizational and control work, to purify all levels of administration from the elements of bureaucracy and narrow-mindedness in seeing one area only without taking the entire national economy into consideration.

We must demand from the ministries great state and working discipline -- in both the ministries themselves and their subordinate bodies. It is necessary to create a demanding work atmosphere in all areas and promote habits that had been useful in the extensive development of the economy.

Gustav Husak went on to point out the need for improving control and initiative work of the Slovak National Council in relation to executive bodies and generally develop the daily political work of deputies of all representatives bodies between citizens. In this connection, he emphasized the great responsibility of the national committees for the comprehensive development of their areas and for the care for the satified life of the people. In the entire activity of the national committees, he said, it is necessary to link local needs with society-wide interests and to have a sensitive approach to problems and proposals of the working people.

In conclusion, Comrade Gustav Husak wished the deputies of the Slovak National Council and the members of the Slovak government all the best and assured them of the full support of the highest party and state bodies of the CSSR in their responsible work for the welfare of the people and the flourishment of our state.

Then Comrade Gustav Husak entered into a cordial debate with the representatives of the Slovak Socialist Republic.

INDRA CALLS DISSIDENTS 'IRKSOME WEEDS'

[Speech by Alois Indra, chairman of the CSSR National Assembly, at the first joint meeting of the two chambers of the CSSR Federal Assembly in Prague on 13 June]

[Excerpts] By electing functionaries you have supported the proposals of the Central Committees of the CPCZ and of the National Front, and thus this act has also become the symbol of the political unity of all deputies regardless of their political affiliation and, of course, of the unity of the meeting, unity in the spirit of the policy of the CPCZ and the National Front. We view your unanimity as a promise to help us in our work and, where necessary, not to avoid criticizing our mistakes and shortcomings. We -- all of us together -- must see to it that the Federal Assembly and all its agencies really work, and that we do not tolerate formalism and superficiality in their activity.

The main yardstick of all the laws discussed can only be the support for progressive thinking and behavior, and for combating everything that slows us down on our way. With corresponding laws we will create conditions for asserting socialist entrepreneurship, we will stimulate the implementation of the lofty plans of socialist economic integration, particularly the direct international cooperation of scientific-production associations and enterprises. We also consider it our duty to take part in dismantling various bureaucratic barriers piled up by an uncontrollable quantity of -- often -- useless regulations and other directives.

The resolution of the 17th CPCZ Congress and the will of our electorate oblige us also to perfect systematically the control activity of the state's and the national economy's executive agencies. An exceptional advantage of socialist democracy is that the legislative and executive agencies abide by identical policy; they have identical aims. Of course, comradely cooperation must never be perceived as reducing exactingness; nobody must regard cooperation with parliament as "wasted time." This fully applies also to the -- legally determined -- mandatory attendance of comrade-ministers at meetings of the appurtenant committees of the chambers.

To put it concisely: The legislative and control activity of The Federal Assembly is to serve the all-round development of society, strengthening the socialist state, and assuring civic rights. The Constitution and the laws also oblige us to see to it that the guaranteed broad civic rights are always unconditionally connected with the fulfillment of civic duties. Of course, those who are loggerheads with civic and work discipline, who violate valid laws, or are abroad and often in foreign employ defaming their own country, cannot -- by referring to socialist democracy -- claim the right to take part in running society. Together with the government and other agencies, we face the task of figuring out how to protect society against the irksome weeds of often punished recidivists.

CPCZ PRESIDIUM DISCUSSES ENERGY CONSERVATION

[Editorial: "Saving Energy at Every Step"]

[Excerpts] The fuel and energy consumption per unit of national income in the CSSR is about one-third higher than in other industrially advanced countries. This is a fact that must rouse us to adopt effective corrective measures. The Seventh 5-Year Plan provided or energy and fuel savings of 12.2 million metric tons of specific fuel. This target was exceeded by more than 15 percent. This shows, among other things, that there exist many possibilities for additional savings. In discussing the basic targets of the Eighth 5-Year Plan last fall, the CPCZ Central Committee Presidium therefore decided to raise the contribution of state target program No. 02 [concerning fuel and energy conservation] by 10 percent. A few days ago, the CPCZ Central Committee Presidium again dealt with this issue and approved the conclusions adopted by the CSSR Government in its resolution No. 112 of 24 April this year. The main goal of that resolution is to achieve, by 1990, fuel and power savings of 15.4 million metric tons of specific fuel, compared with the level of consumption in 1985.

But even the accelerated speed of reducing the consumption of fuels and energy that is laid down in state target program No. 02 for the Eighth 5-Year Plan does not yet express our objective possibilities and hidden potentials. The set level of savings must therefore be regarded as the miminum level and efforts must be exerted to exceed it. In spite of this, not all agencies charged with ensuring energy savings have yet reported how they intend to achieve them. From this it follows logically that a greater degree of discipline and a carefully considered and plan-based approach must be introduced into the implementation of the state target program No. 02.

To tighten discipline in this respect, the CSSR Government has ruled that all specific actions ensuring fuel and energy savings must be projected into the economic plan for this year and that in capital investment and supplier-user reactions priority must be given to safeguarding the implementation of projects arising from state target progrm No. 02. The chairman of the State Planning Commission has been instructed to compile a list of all investment rationalization projects within the framework of state target program No. 02 that have budgetary costs of over Kcs10 million, and to include them in the appropriate draft executive plans of national economic development.

In addition to state target program No. 02, fuel and energy savings must also be ensured by other means, outside the program's framework. This concerns, in particular, structural changes in favor of less energy-intensive types of production, raising the technological standard and quality of products, reducing the material-intensiveness of production, introducing less energy-intensive technological processes, and asserting the thrifty and economical handling of all types of fuels, energy, and raw and industrial materials.

AXEN OF RESULTS OF WARSAW PACT MEETING

LD210540 East Berlin ADN Internationl Service in German 1746 GMT 20 Jun 86

[Excerpt] Berlin, 20 Jun (ADN) -- Three days of discussions by the GDR International Friendship League with the presidents and secretaries general of national societies for friendship with the GDR began in Berlin on 20 June. Horst Brasch, secretary general and first vice president of the league, welcomed guests for 68 countries and all continents to the opening.

Gerald Goetting, president of the International Friendship League, thanked those taking part in the gathering for their valuable work in the interest of peace, their tireles work to promote friendship and cooperation. "Jointly we are countering the policy of confrontation through our efforts to achieve understanding and trust," he said. The current international situation calls for a new way of thinking, he said.

Hermann Axen, member of the Politburo and secretary of the SED Central Committee, referred to the results of the Budapest meeting. Especially at a time of aggravated tensions, he said, the socialist states are taking the initaiative in order to give peace yet another chance. In the struggle for peace there is no time to spare. Attacks on the spirit and the agreements of the Geneva summit meeting will not be accepted.

There is clear proof, Hermann Axen noted, that the socialist countries, in their disarmament efforts, give no wide provisions to any of the types of weapon, including conventional arms. From space to conventional weapons there is a complete, coherent, realistic program for arms limitation and disarmament, he emphasized. In their appeal the Warsaw Pact states are considering the proposals and ideas of many sates and various social forces, for instance the parties of the Socialist International and the six heads of state and government from continents, as well as the wishes of the nonaligned states. The speaker pointed out that the arms buildup in the conventional weapon sector is proceeding unhampered at present. Their force of destruction is approaching that of mass destruction weapons. "Therefore," the speaker conculded, "the reduction of armed forces and conventional arms in Europe world be an extremely important practical disarmament step. It would help to reduce military confrontation in Europe."

The Budapest meeting has shown, Hermann Axen emphasized, that socialism is increasing its efforts at safeguarding peace. The call is loud and clear: We must not place the fate of peace and mankind in the hands of the forces of militarism.

FISCHER TOAST AT DINNER FOR EGYPTIAN COUNTERPART

AU191110 East Berlin NEUES DEUTSCHLAND in German 17 Jun 86 pp 4-5

[Toast by Oskar Fischer, GDR minister for foreign affairs, at dinner for Ahmad Ismat 'Abd al-Majid, deputy prime minister and minister of foreign affairs of the Arab Republic of Egypt, at dinner in the Unter den Linden Palace in East Berlin on 16 June]

[Text] Mr Foreign Minister, Dear Mrs 'Abd al-Majid, dear guests, dear friends!

It is 1 and 1/2 years ago that I was able to pay an official visit to the Arab Republic of Egypt as your guest. My entourage and I were impressed by the direct contact with the Egypt of today and at the same time by one of mankind's most ancient cultures, as well as by the cordial hospitality granted to us. I am all the more pleased that you, your wife, and the prominent figures accompanying you are now our guests.

I am convinced that your official visit will be another important step toward expanding mutually advantageous relations between our countries.

I am able to note with satisfaction that our joint efforts for fruitful cooperation are based on the solid foundation of a long-standing tradition of friendly relations between our peoples. The course of our talks so far strengthens me in the conviction that both sides want to further expand the relations to the benefit of their peoples. As we both were able to note, there are numerous possibilities in the fields of politics, economic affairs, culture, and education, as well as between social organizations and institutions; as examples I mention only sports and trade unions. We will utilize them with circumspection.

I am firmly convinced that in a time when the international situation has been dangerously aggravated and the whole of mankind faces dangers that threaten its existence due to their nuclear dimension, the conscientious cultivation of such relations is particularly important.

Nearly every day we must see how an unscrupulous policy of confrontation in diverse regions of the world -- in southern Africa, Central America, as well as in the Middle East -- undermines world peace.

Today, adherence to the motto "If you want peace, prepare for war" of Roman rulers and, according to which, rulers addicted to conquering have acted for 2 milleniums, would be disastrous for the fate of the entire human civilization. In the nuclear age the slogan can only be: He who wants peace, must not arm for war. Security is not achieved against each other but only with each other. The SED Central Committee general secretary and GDR State Council chairman, Erich Honecker, stressed at the 11th SED Congress, this requires us to approach things in a new way and to find new forms and methods in the relations between the diverse social systems, states and regions. What has become known as "spirit of Geneva" is reflected in the resolutions of the recently concluded Budapest meeting of the Warsaw Pact Political Consultative Committee. The hope for a world without wars, without arms, and without force, a world in which all peoples may freely decide about their development and their way of living is based on their implementation. We all share the responsibility to ensure that these hopes will come true. We know that the Arab Republic of Egypt, in view of the dangerous trends in the international development, shares the concern of all to whom peace of their country and world peace is dear.

In a noteworthy address in September 1985, Mr Minister, you declared that "a nuclear catastrophe will not differentiate between nuclear and non-nuclear states, for international security is indivisible."

As a consequence, your country works in the United Nations and other international bodies in this spirit. Also here we see important fields of constructive cooperation between our states.

As you know, the GDR, as a state at the borderline between two opposed political, economic, and military alliance systems, is particularly interested in ensuring that the increase of the danger of war, which was urgently referred to in the communique of the meeting of the Political Consultative Committee of Budapest, is reversed and that international development is again brought back to the calculable tracks of detente.

It is not the goodwill or the corresponding deeds which the socialist states are lacking; they have used the International Year of Peace called by the United Nations again to propose concrete programs of disarmament that do not omit any kind of weapon and the reliably controlled implementation of which would not only ban immediately lethal dangers for mankind, but would at the same time release enormous resources for solving the global problems of mankind. All forces aware of their responsibility in East, West, North, and South should regard it as their noblest task to work to rapidly achieve these aims.

We highly assess the activities of the Nonaligned Movement. The work for peace of this movement, of which the Arab Republic of Egypt is a founding member, strengthens us in the certainty that through the joint action of all peace-loving forces in the world reason and thus life will finally triumph.

Mr Minister, knowing about the indivisibility of international security and peace, the GDR watches with concern the increase of tensions in the Middle East and in the Mediterranean area as a result of imperialist policy of agression, interference and threats against Libya, Tunisia, the PLO, and Syria. Again and again the fact that world peace cannot be secured without a comprehensive, just, and lasting settlement in the Middle East has been proved.

Proceeding from this conviction, the GDR supports the proposal to convene an international Middle East conference under the auspices of the United Nations in which all interested parties, including the PLO as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people, should participate.

Allow me, dear guests, to ask you to raise your glasses to:

-- Peace in the world;

-- The further deepening of the fruitful cooperation between our peoples and states as well as;

-- Your well-being, dear friend, and the well-being of your wife and all members of your entourage.

'Abd al-Majid Replies

[Text] Berlin, 16 Jun (ADN) -- GDR Foreign Minister Oskar Fischer and Dr Ahman Ismat 'Abd al-Majid, deputy prime minister and minister of foreign affairs of the Arab Republic of Egypt, spoke in favor of further flourishing cooperation between the GDR and the Arab Republic of Egypt in Berlin this evening. At a banquet given by Oskar Fischer in honor of his guest, both sides stressed that the official visit is a further weighty step toward the expansion of mutually advantageous relations between the two countries.

The banquet in the Unter Den Linden palace was attended by Werner Jarowinsky, Politburo member and secretary of the SED Central Committee; Professor Dr Manfred Gerlach, deputy chairman of the GDR Council of State; Dr Herbert Weiz, deputy chairman of the Council of Ministers; and other persons from social life in the GDR.

In his toast, Oskar Fischer noted with satisfaction that the common efforts for a fruitful life together are based on the solid foundations of a long-standing tradition of friendly relations between the two peoples.

Dr Ahmad Ismat 'Abd al-Majid said in his reply that both states are united "by the striving for international security and world peace, and for maintenance of the principles of the UN Charter, and by the commitment to the wellbeing of man and by the striving for dismantling the centers of tension in the world on the basis of legality and justice." These principles form the firm foundation necessary for further flourishing cooperation between the two friendly peoples. The message of friendship and appreciation from the people and the government of his country to the people and Government of the GDR is linked with signs of the growth and flourishing of these relations. There are still far-reaching prospects "for further advancing cooperation between the two countries in the most varied areas in the interest of our peoples and as a contribution toward an improvement of the international situation." The foreign minister expressed his country's hope that cooperation with the GDR will develop further in the area of industrialization, for example, but also in the areas of cultural, scientific-technological and sporting exchanges.

Dealing with his country's attitude to the situation in the Near East, the politician said the Palestine issue is the nub of the Arab-Israeli dispute. A just and durable solution in the region can be achieved only through recognition of the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination and the right of all states in the region to exist and their right to a life in peace, in accordance with international law. An international conference under the auspices of the United Nations, with the participation of all states concerned and the PLO, as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people, at which the principles for a solution to the conflict would be discussed, is the best path toward the attainment of this goal.

The Egyptian foreign minister advocated the ending of bloodshed in the Lebanon and the country's independence and territorial integrity. He also demanded that the destructive war between Iran and Iraq should be ended. Egypt rejects terrorism and condemns it in all its forms. The best way to combat it, however, is in ascertaining its causes and motivations, in order to exterminate this phenomenon by the roots and to provide justice for all those who are robbed of their basic rights, and thus security and stability for the international community as a whole.

DINNER HELD FOR NICARAGUAN VICE PRESIDENT 17 JUN

Krenz Speaks

[Text] Berlin, 17 Jun (ADN) -- Egon Krenz, member of the Politburo and secretary of the SED Central Committee and deputy chairman of the GDR State Council, and Dr Sergio Ramirez Mercado, vice president of the Republic of Nicaragua, spoke this evening in favor of the solution of conflicts via negotiations and for efforts for a world of lasting peace free from the threat of war and safe from nuclear catastrophe.

At a dinner which Egon Krenz gave for his guest at the Unter den Linden palace, both politicians stressed in speeches that relations between the two countries and peoples had deepened. Egon Krenz assured the guests that the GDR would continue to stand in firm solidarity at the side of people of Nicaragua, who are fighting to defend the achievements of their revolution.

Both sides expresed their concern at the situation in Central America. They condemned the U.S. policy of interference in the affairs of the region and demanded a political solution to the conflicts. Every effort has to be made for the continuation of the Contadora process of negotiation.

Taking part in the diner were Werner Felfe, member of the Politburo and secretaery of the SED Central Committee; Bernhard Neugebauer, GDR deputy minister of foreign affairs; and other GDR public figures, and Alejandro Martinez, minister of foreign trade of the Republic of Nicaragua; Javier Chamorro, deputy minister of foreign affairs; and Rodrigo Cardenal Martinez, Nicaraguan ambassador to the GDR.

In his speech, Egon Krenz strongly condemned the aggressive actions of imperialism against Nicaragua. "Geographically we are separated by thousands of kilometers, but politically we are as close as reliable comrades-in-arms, for whom the happiness of the peoples and peace are the highest possessions of all,:" he said. Referring to the recent Budapest meeting of the Warsaw Pact member-states, Egon Krenz stressed that the socialist community possesses a comprehensive peace program for saving human civilization from destruction. "In accordance with the principle of equality and equal security it does not shy away from any type of weapon [as received] in the struggle for disarmament."

Opposing this was the announcement by the U.S. Administration that it would abrogate SALT II, in contradiction to the interests of the peoples. This step meant irresponsibility throwing open the door to an unbridled intensification of arming.

Not confrontation but dialogue, not mistrust but mutually advantageous cooperation, not an arms race but peaceful competition today correspond with an up-to-date approach to the development of international relations on all continents.

With the election result on 8 June the people of the GDR reaffirmed the mandate to continue the policy of dialogue as an important instrument for strengthening all forces of reason and realism on the basis of the decisions of the 11th SED Congress," Egon Krenz stressed.

The GDR will remain a reliable partner for all who want to get on well with one another under peaceful conditions. "Our efforts are directed toward reducing the weapons arsenals and building up trust betweent the states and peoples everywhere in the world." A halt to all nuclear tests would be a first step for this.

The constitutional discussion now taking place in Nicaragua clearly illustrates the ability of the people to take their destiny into their own hands. " All attempts to turn back the wheel of history in Nicaragua will fail finally. They are not only encountering the determination of the brave people of Nicaragua, but also the resistance of political reason in many countries of the world."

International solidarity and international law are on the side of free Nicaragua. The GDR welcomes the desire of the Contadore Group to make a contribution to a political solution to the conflict with peaceful means. Egon Drenz stressed: "The recent proposal by President Daniel Ortega, which are aimed at a peace settlement in Central America and the establishment of goodneighborly relations between the states of the region, have our full support."

He reaffirmed: "The hearts of our people beat with the heroic struggle of the new Nicaragua. Its resolute struggle for national sovereignty, peace and social progress has our full sympathy and our active solidarity." The talks held in the past few days in Berlin again show that relations between the GDR AND Nicaragua are deepening. Egon Krenz closed his speech with the words: "Rest assured that the GDR will continue to stand firmly alongside Nicaragua in its struggle for the defense of the achievements of its revolution."

The Nicaraguan vice president conveyed fraternal congratulations on behalf of the revolutionary government of his country, President Daniel Ortega, and the directorate of the Sandinist National Liberation Front [FSLN] to Erich Honecker on his election as chairman of the State Council. "Through the election, the leadership of this fraternal country is again placed in the hands of a person who is acknowledged worldwide and who enjoys recognition on account of his efforts and initatives directed toward peace for mankind."

The guest stressed that the visit and the fraternal, useful and cordial talks that had been held had strengthened the firm bonds of friendship and cooperation between Nicaragua and the GDR. Regarding the forthcoming seventh anniversary of the revolution, he said that in this short space of time the people of Nicaragua, led by the FSLN, have learned, under enormous sacrifice, how to shape its own destiny itself as a free and sovereign country.

"We have fought to alter the inherited state of subjugation, backwardness and poverty and to create in Nicaragua a truly democratic society in which the interests of the great majority predominate," the Nicaraguan vice president said.

Today the revolution is threatened by intervention. The policy of state terrorism of the U.S Government has already claimed more than 12,000 victims in Nicaragua. It is the cause of murder, torture, and rapes, whose victims are women and children, it is also the cause of fire and destruction. Nicaragua is defending the right to live in peace and to be able to build up peacefully a new, just, free and democratic country. "We share with the GDR the efforts for a world of lasting peace, a world free from the threat of war and safe from a nuclear catastrophe. We want the peoples to be able to decide freely for themselves and that all forms of oppression and hegemony, irrespective of whether they are political, racial or economic, are eliminated."

Sergio Ramirez Mercado noted that Nicaragua is trying, on the basis of agreed peace accords, to be able to set norms for coexistence with its neighbors. Therefore it continues to support the efforts of the Contadora Group. Nicaragua will continue to work for peace.

He praised the excellent relations between the GDR and his country. In its struggle, Nicaragua has always had the political solidarity of the SED and the government and the people of the GDR. This solidarity was expressed also in hospitals and vocational schools, in the realization of industrial, agricultural and agro-industrial projects, and in the care given to fighters wounded in the war. Above all it is manifest in the deep understanding for the struggle, which moved the entire people of the GDR as if it were their own struggle. "I would like to express our thanks to you today for this proven and unconditional solidarity."

Following the dinner, the Nicaraguan guests went to a concert in the Grand Hall of the Schauspielhaus.

Ramirez Mercado Address

[Toast by Sergio Ramirez Mercado, Nicaraguan vice president, at 17 June Berlin Dinner given in his honor by Egon Krenz, GDR State Council deputy chairman]

[Text] Dear Comrade Egon Krenz, dear Comrade Erika Krenz, dear comrades from the Politburo and the government, I am lucky to be in Berlin on the precise day when, according to the GDR Constitution, the highest state bodies are being elected. Therefore, I would especially like to extend, on behalf of the revolutionary Government of Nicaragua, of President Daniel Ortega, and on behalf of the Sandinist Front for National Liberation, fraternal congratulations to Comrade Erich Honecker on his election as chairman of the State Council. Through this election, the leadership of this fraternal country will again be placed in the hands of a personality of world prestige who enjoys recognition because of his efforts and initiatives aimed at ensuring peace for mankind. I also want to convey warm congratulations to our host, Comrade Egon Krenz on his election as deputy chairman of the State Council.

As you, dear Comrade Egon Krenz, already noted, our visit and the fraternal, fruitful, and cordial talks we conducted during it have strengthened the strong ties of friendship and cooperation between Nicaragua and the GDR, which existed from the very first instant of the victory of the Sandinist people's revolution on 19 July 1979.

Our revolution will soon celebrate its seventh anniversary. In this short but intensive timespan the Nicaraguan people, led by the Sandinist National Liberation Front, through enormous sacrifices have been able to fashion their destiny as a free and sovereign country. We have been struggling tirelessly to build a new system; we have struggled to change the inherited state of subjugation, backwardness, and misery and to build a truly democratic system in Nicaragua in which the interests of the great majority prevail, a majority that was deprived of everything throughout our history: the right to voice its opinion and the right to possess land, the right to education and health, the right to a life of human dignity, the right to freely decide its destiny, and the right to live in a soveriegn country. However, now through the revolution, we proudly voice our right to call ourselves the children of Sandino, of the simple general of free people, of the son of people who were humiliated by North American intervention.

It is the same intervention that threatens our revolution today, as well as other peoples in the world, and world peace. Yesterday when, on behalf of my people I laid a wreath at the monument to the victims of fascism, I recalled that Nicaragua had to suffer merciless aggression all through the war which emanates from the same evil and backward forces that are again embodies in the policy of state terrorism practiced by the U.S. Government against my homeland. This state terrorism has already claimed more than 12,000 victims in Nicaragua. It is the cause of murder, torture, rape, injuries, victims among women and children, fire and destruction. The terrorists of the White House insidiously destroy what simple people build day by day: Settlements, the peasantry, agricultural cooperatives, schools, and medical establishments. Just as Europe had to suffer under the boots of fascism, so in the same way, Nicaragua is the victim of terrorism today. What they are defending is the right to live in peace and peacefully build a new, just, free, and democratic country.

We share the GDR's aspiration for a world of lasting peace, a world free from the threat of war and safe from a nuclear catastrophe.

We want peoples to be able to make their own decisions freely, and want all forms of oppression and hegemony, irrespective of whether they are political, racial or economic, to be eliminated.

We are familiar with the prize we have to pay for being independent in our area in which the United States historically holds a hegemonic position which only harms the peoples of Central America.

However, on the basis of agreed peace accords, Nicaragua strives to set norms for coexistence with its neighbors. Therefore, it has supported and continues to support the efforts of the Contadora Group, which comprises eight Latin American countries.

We want to achieve a Central America free from foreign military bases and threats of intervention where we can live within secure borders, without being prey to blackmail which through the practices of the Reagan administration, has already turned into a norm of conduct.

We will continue to struggle for peace, even if we are attacked and threatened by military aggression. Although we are in the middle of a war, we continue to lay the foundation for economic and social changes in our homeland and to build our own democratic order, which is reflected in the new Constitution.

Dear Comrade Krenz, relations between the GDR and Nicaragua have always been excellent. In its struggle, Nicaragua has always had the political solidarity of the SED, and the GDR Government and people. This solidarity was also expressed in hospitals, vocational schools, in the support for building industrial, agricultural, and agro-industrial projects and in the care given to fighters wounded in the war; but above all, it is reflected in the profound understanding for our struggle which has moved the whole GDR nation as if it were its own struggle. For this proven and unconditional solidarity, I would like to voice our thanks to you today, dear Comrade Krenz.

I would like all comrades and friends present here to toast:

-- The ties of solidarity, friendship, and cooperation between the FSLN and the SED;

-- The well-being of President Daniel Ortega and Comrade Erich Honecker;

-- The unity and fraternal bond of the peoples of Nicaragua and GDR;

-- Peace for mankind freed from the danger of war;

-- Your well-being and the well-being of your wife Erika, as the well-being of all valued friends and comrades.

TECHNICAL COOPERATION PROTOCOL SIGNED WITH IRAN

[Text] Berlin, 20 Jun (ADN) -- The first session of the newly set up joint commission for Economic and Technical Cooperation Between the GDR/Islamic Republic of Iran ended with the signing of a joint protocol on Friday. The government delegations were headed by GDR Minister of Chemical Industry Dr Guenther Wyschofsky, and Iranian Minister of Industries Eng Cholam Reza Shafe'i.

It was noted during the deliberations that trade and economic relations have been developing further and, with the agreement to set up a joint commission, have been raised to a higher level. The two sides proceed from the premise that the cooperation will be deepened by utilizing the scope which still exists in many areas, and will gradually become long-term. The joint commission discussed new forms and opportunities for the intensification and dynamic development of the mutually beneficial economic and trading relations.

The Iranian Government delegation conducted talks with heads of the central GDR state and economic organs. It visited industrial enterprises and familiarized itself with their high capability for production and export.

AXEN TALKS WITH INDIAN NATIONAL CONGRESS LEADER

[Text] Berlin, 20 Jun (ADN) -- Effective arms limitation and disarmament steps are necessary to avert the danger of a nuclear war, to prevent the militarization of space, to get rid of nuclear weapons, and to overcome confrontation by cooperation between states. This was stated by Hermann Axen, member of the Politburo and secretary of the SED Central Committee, and Dr Raghunandan Lal Bhatia, general secretery of the Indian National Congress-I, at a talk in Berlin on Friday [20 June]. They agreed that the hopeful starting points for an improvement which began to germinate with the Geneva summit must not be undermined. They described the Budapest appeal by the Warsaw Pact states for a reduction in armed forces and conventional weapons in Europe as a significant step toward improving the international situation. The SED and the Indian national Congress-I support substantial negotiations to prevent the militarization of space, to limit, reduce, and ban nuclear and chemical weapons, and to end all nuclear tests.

Axen and Dr Bhatia paid tribute to the level of relations achieved between the SED and the Indian National Congress and discussed future arrangements. They noted with satisfaction that the extensive agreement between the two parties on the basic questions of international affairs gives an important impetus to the cooperation between their states to secure peace.

PETITION URGES END TO USE OF NUCLEAR ENERGY

LD201533 Hamburg DPA in German 1333 GMT 20 Jun 86

[Text] East Berlin, 20 Jun (DPA) -- In a appeal to the government over 300 signatories have demanded the GDR's withdrawal from nuclear energy in the medium term and a proper explanation to the population of the dangers and consequences of nuclear energy. As a result of the Soviet accident at the Chernobyl reactor, the signatories also call for a halt to the construction of the nuclear power station near Stendal, which is scheduled to go into operation in 1991, and cancellation of the expansion of the nuclear power station near Greifswald.

The length letter, which was also sent to the People's Chamber 2 weeks ago, [passage indistinct] says that a change is necessary in the present policies on energy, economics, and information in the GDR. The investment eramarked for expanding nuclear energy should be used for the promotion of alternative energy sources, says the appeal, which was made known in East Berlin today. Energy policy should be altered with the aim of being able to dispense with nuclear energy by 1990, also through concentration on energy-saving technologies. Price increases for energy and products using a lot of energy could be part of this. The broadest enlightenment of the population on possibilities for [word indistinct] energy is necessary, as well as the promotion of environmental awareness in the areas of work, leisure, and household. Lessons must at last be drawn from the experience, and translated into different political and economic action.

The reactor accident in the Ukraine caused "insecurity and a feeling of being threatened here" the appeal says. Furthermore, the effects of "an irresponsible and socially dangerous information policy in (?East) and West" has become clear. "The real dangers of operating reactors" were "played down in the press in an unprecedented way and withheld from public discussion" in the GDR. It was virtually impossible for sceptics to brief themselves adequately. Since Chernobyl one knows that the effect of a serious [word indistinct] have been drastically underestimated.

As long as nuclear power stations are still operating, there must be a proper explanation to the population of the dangers and consequences of nuclear energy and publication of the radiation levels measured. What is necessary, above all, is a "broad public discussion" on the quality of life and on the expectations of a socialist society.

As was further to be gathered in East Berlin, a signature campaign for a declaration aimed at a referendum on the futher use of nuclear energy has been launched, in addition to the appeal. The number of signatures was estimated by informed circles at several hundred thus far. The results of this signature campaign are to be communicated to the People's Chamber, although this has not yet taken place, it was said further.

In the declaration, reference is made to the posibility in the Constitution of a referendum, the implementation of which can be decided by the People's Chamber. As preparation for such a referendum, a broad discussion and comprehensive information for the population of the advantages and dangers of nuclear energy are described as necessary. New concepts, as well as those currently in existence, should be included in the referendum.

COMMENTARY SUPPORTS ON-SITE INSPECTIONS

DW222104 East Berlin Domestic Service in German 1100 GMT 22 Jun 86

[From the "Radio Question Hour" program]

[Excerpts] Our listerner (Stefan Raetel) from Karl-Marx-Stadt asks us: Why do we support on-site inspections only now? Our military-political commentator, Heinz Britsche, answers:

Well, Mr (Raetel), the Budapest appeal on considerable reductions of land forces and tactical air forces in Europe, including thier armaments, in Section 3 deals extensively with the verfication issue not for the first time, but definitely with special emphasis this time. Let me remind you of the fact that the Soviet proposal of 15 June 1982 on a convention banning the development, production, and stockpiling of Chemical weapons, as well as their destruction, in Section 3 on verification also envisaged on-site inspections. The USSR's recent proposal on a chemical weapons ban is more detailed in that respect.

It stands to reason that concluded agreements must be verified. However, verification measures alone are no substitute for the urgently necessary arms reduction and disarmament process. It is no secret that certain imperialist circles by demanding on-site inspections in the past pursued intentions entirely different from effective disarmament. They believed that in this way they could extend their espionage system, and because the Soviet Union was not ready to allow such inspections, it was to them the programmed pretext to prevent such disarmament measures.

Naturally, there are a number of treaties like the SALT agreements, the nuclear test ban treaty, and the space treaty in which verification only through national technical means was agreed on. That means that the observance of the treaties is verifed by satellites and radio monitoring installations. The treaties have always been concluded on the basis of the principle "in good faith," faith in the sincerity of the parties to the agreement. Technical means of verification satelites, for example, today allow us to monitor arms deployoments so exactly that there can hardly be any doubts abouts [words indistinct]

Certain aggressive NATO circles were trying to find political reasons for intensifying their armament so as to achieve military superiority and therefore claimed that the Soviet Union was violating treaties, even though those military experts are aware that such allegations are wrong. They know it from their own national verifiaction means. In view of the excessive armaments, in the interests of mankind, the point is halting the arms race, reducing arms, and initiating disarmament. In that respect, not even the verification issue should be an obstacle to effective agreements. Disarmament must not fail by the verficiation issue. Therefore, the national technical means are to be complemented by on-site inspections.

The Budapest appeal by the Warsaw Pact states therefore not only proposes the exchange of data on the total number of armed forces, the forces to be reduced, and the remaining forces, but also offers concrete verification possibilities. For instance, verification could be carried out through an international consultative commission composed of representatives of NATO, the Warsaw Pact, and interested neutral and nonaligned states. Checkposts at large railway junctions, in airports, and ports could supervise the process of force reductions between the Atlantic and the Urals. However, what matters is the treaty on force reductions and its implementation, naturally, under supervision. In that respect, the socialist countries now attach more importance to the verification issue.

SEVENTH CHAMBER OF COMMERCE CONGRESS OPENS

Havasi, Marjai Addresses

LD212150 Budapest MTI in English 1938 GMT 21 Jun 86

[Text] Budapest, June 21 (MTI) -- The 7th Congress of the Hungarian Chamber of Commerce took place in Budapest on Saturday. The Presidium included Ferenc Havasi, member of the HSWP Political Committee and secretary of the Central Committee; Jozsef Marjai, vice-chairman of the Council of Ministers, and other member of the government.

In his oral supplement to the written report of the Presidium, Tamas Beck, president of the Chamber of Commerce, stated that the members of the chamber increased from 484 to 1,250. The social character of the chamber has increased and its main target is to mediate, coordinate and represent its members' interest. It has gradually developed its relations with the organizations managing the national economy and takes part in economic decision making.

The chamber's task is to promote the international relations of Hungarian enterprises. It supports Hungarian enterprises mainly in countries where Hungarian goods are unfamiliar. It organized events to propagate Hungarian exports in the USA, Turkey, the Gulf countries and Southeast Asia. Relations with the socialist countries' chambers have been further promoted, establishing favourable conditions for direct enterprise relations. The chamber also plans to establish Hungarian-Soviet joint enterprises.

Ferenc Havasi, member of the HSWP Political Committee and secretary of the Central Committee, addressed the General Assembly of the Hungarian Chamber of Commerce in Budapest on Saturday. He pointed out that the party leadership and the government have thorough programmes for the construction of the country and the whole country was taking part in the implementation of the resolutions of the HSWP 13th Congress and the preparation of the 7th Five-Year Plan period.

"However, it is a problem that production last year and in the first half of the year fell behind the expected. Due to the deficiencies of our work and the unfavourable developments in international economy, the implementation of the 7th Five-Year Plan targets started under difficult conditions. The question is raised whether there are too much economic priorities and they can be enforced simultaneously? Whether the time for the elaboration of another action programme had arrived? Economic management is open and flexible, however, there is no posibility for making further concessions in our targets. We have to meet our liquidation liabilities, and the targets of the 7th Five-Year Plan period have to be implemented to reach this target. We also have to keep pace with international scientific and technical development. We also have to meet the living standard targets of the plan, as it is the condition of maintaining political concensus which is a result of the 30 year old successful policy of the HSWP. We have maintained this unity even under more severe conditions.

"Whether the 3 per cent increase of the national economy is justified? The answer is positive. However, it requires the exploration of further possibilities in the management work and system, the improvement of enterprise management, the better use of scientific potentials and the initiatives of managers and employees," stressed Ferenc Havasi.

In his address Jozsef Marjai, vice-chairman of the Council of Ministers, stated that the target of government's measures was to strengthen selectivity and accelerate the transformation of product structure. 237 essays have been received for the export encouraging invitation and 191 of them have been judged. Essays have been judged in two weeks in most cases. The majority of competing enterprises increase export by the establishment of new capacities. 80-85 per cent of investments include the modernization of machine stocks and the technical and technological level of production. The majority of developments serve the production of new goods and the improvement of quality. The rentability of surplus export goods is higher than that of the national economic and branch average.

More on Havasi Address

[Speech by Ferenc Havasi, Politburo member and Central Committee secretary to the General Assembly of the Hungarian Chamber of Commerce on 21 June -- recorded]

[Text] A situation exists in Hungary in which we possess carefully considered resolutions which also enjoy the support of public opinion. These resolutions relate to the building of our country, the improvement of our economic situation. On the other hand, we have a rather bad starting situation. Logically, there are three possibilities for changing this situation. One of these is to rewrite our documents. The second is to change our practice. There is also a third possibility; namely, we can change both to some extent, both the papers and the practice.

The reason why I would like to speak about this is that, explicitly or implicitly, in the wake of the congress and the adoption of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, the question is raised whether we are not working with too many priorities. Is it possible to realize all of them simultaneously? Let us see one by one, which priority could be relaxed?

One of these is the equilibrium. Those burdens which are putting pressure on us as a result of our borrowing, our indebtedness, are not small. They are serious burdens, but, nonetheless, we have taken the risk of undertaking investments, developments, even at the expense of our balance of payments, which on every rational calculation will pay good returns in the future.

If we take the other, the revitalization; well, here we face the fact that it would be needed very much. In other words, a more dynamic development, within a good structure, in a balance-oriented fashion and based on intensive resources appears to be the most promising way of breaking out from this vicious circle which we are in.

By employment we should understand efficient employment. This means full employment on a national scale, understood as the concern and task of the government, and efficient employment on an enterprise scale, and that all the social-political problems which this gives rise to must be, as is often said, accepted by the political sphere.

The next priority is the standard of living. In the Seventh 5-Year Plan we accepted that real incomes should grow by 1 percent per year. It is probable that our public opinion -- I am sure of this as far as the Central Committee and the government are concerned -- will regard it as acceptable if this year or next year we shall not be able to achieve this certain 1 percent increase.

There is another priority. It has already been said critically in the speeches here that we must not get mired at the current level of accumulation which has existed for years in this country; sooner or later the (?lack of) accumulation will endanger our future, our possibilities for development. If we add to this the pressure which develops within the sphere of accumulation with respect to technological and technical progress, that every single year lost amounts to laying the foundations, so to speak, for a handicapped situation lasting several years, then it becomes clear that more money must be devoted to this area than in recent years, in Hungary as well.

Finally, there is a third reason for which we must keep to these minimal targets. This is the political consensus of our society. Our public life and our system of political institutions are developing, I think fortunately, so as to strengthen the relations of dependence and hierarchy where these are appropriate, and where these do need to be strengthened. This development strengthens the elements of self-management and self-administration where these are most appropriate and effective; and where we confront a question of the coordination of interests, instead of decrees and instructions, it increasingly brings about the development and diffusion of a system of consensus.

It is with awareness of these that one can answer the question as to what ahould we be doing: Should we write documents or improve our practice? We must ask whether there is a social inclination for this type of endeavor. Is Hungarian public opinion willing to support conduct of this nature? I think that what this government is asked to do is not to change the reform. The majority of people are on the side of the reform. Hungary can never afford not to think rationally, pragmatically, in an economy-centric fashion, to forego educating people in the spirit of economy and [word indistinct]. Hungary shall not and cannot forego these in the coming decades either.

Domany Report

[Andras Domany report on the 21 June Hungarian Chamber of Commerce session]

[Excerpts] The Chamber of Commerce takes very seriously its new role of being the interest representative and interest promoting organ of Hungarian enterprises. This is particularly true since the decree of legal force which came into effect last year. This new role means and requires that the Chamber of Commerce should quite often be at odds with the administration, and that it should criticize those elements of regulation which, in their view, make enterprise management more difficult, for example, those changes introduced in the middle of the year but take effect retroactively. I can also say that there is a certain irritation in a number of speeches. One of the enterprise directors -- the majority of those present are directors -- said that in the chamber bodies there was a need for real debate and that directors should not have to listen to the generalities of officials who are once removed from those responsible. After hearing them the directors look at each other and ask: Are you as certain as I am? Someone else said that there was too much infertile debate stemming from the fear of losing prestige and power. Yet again someone criticized the various concrete economic regulatory means, the tax situation and other economic questions.

Interestingly -- and for me a bit surprisingly -- Deputy Jozsef Marjai and Industry Minister Laszlo Kapolyi, who contributed to the debate on behalf of the government, did not rebuff these sometimes rather harsh speeches but emphasized just how important it was also for the government that enterprises should possess real interest protection, that they really should have the right to have a say in economic work, and that in the end an agreement should be possible on the more important questions.

The chamber must be able to express a view regarding regression of branches or enterprises and on the changes of the structure of the people's economy even if this negatively affects certain enterprises that are chambers members; this view must be one of principle. Inner public opinion of the chamber must also reflect the opposing interests of the enterprises and also be able to assist in solving these differences.

Finally, another important matter: In the coming period, the chamber would like to partly undertake the interest protection of the enterprise managers as a special stratum of workers -- the term partly is used because the trade unions in themselves cannot do this. The more difficult the economic situation is and the more the new forms of economic management such as the enterprise councils are introduced, the more it may occur that the director needs personal protection as well.

REAGAN SPEECH MARKS 'NEW ELEMENT' IN RELATIONS

[Grzegorz Wozniak report from New York]

[Text] The speech by President Reagan in Glassboro, New Jersey, was in an exceptionally mild tone. The President spoke at a graduation ceremony in the local high school and referred to the historic meeting between the then Soviet premier, Alexey Kosygin, and Lyndon Johnson in the same Glassboro in 1967. Those talks preceded a series of U.S.-Soviet summit meetings. The concepts of the spirit of Glassboro signified the start of a new climate in relations between the two great powers. President Reagan maintained the plan of a successive summit and spoke of the new Soviet disarmament proposal made recently in Geneva with clear appreciation.

The President's rhethoric, full of reverence and gallantry, does indeed constitute a new element in Washington-Moscow relations. Behind it, however, the hard facts remain: the rejection of SALT II and other confrontational moves by the administration. If the renewed spirit of Glassboro is to be an authentic signal, it is also necessary for actions to follow words.

URBAN BRIEFS PRESS ON INTERNATIONAL ISSUES

AU131337 Warsaw RZECZPOSPOLITA in Polish 10 Jun 86 pp 4, 5

["Transcript' of press conference given to foreign and Polish journalists by Polish Government spokesman Jerzy Urban in Warsaw on 3 June]

[Excerpts] Joerg Bremer, FRANKFURTHER ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG: It is expected that Poland will try to obtain new loans from the IMF. Could you list three or four investments that Poland regards as priority projects which would require such loans?

Urban: Poland will make its proposals when the issue of loans has matured. Press conferences are not the places to speculate on such proposals months in advance. All I can say is that Poland's main desire in connection with eventual loans is to back up export-promoting projects in order to increase our exports.

Jerzy Gonczarski, EXPRESS WIECZORNY: Judging by the calls received by EXPRESS WIECZORNY, our public has welcomed the Constitutional Tribunal's decision that certain paragraphs of the famous government decree on higher rents for apartments bought from the state are incompatible with the appropriate Sejm law and the PPR Constitution. In view of this, does the government realize the political results of the obstinacy on the part of Minister Rybicki, who said he would fight this verdict? What is the overriding purpose of this fight?

Urban: First, I doubt whether you are entitled to speak on behalf of the public. I am not convinced that the public knows all about the matter in question nor that its position is as homogenous as claimed by you.

Second, it ws not Minister Rybicki but the government that said it would appeal to the higher forum of the Constitutional Tribual to change the decision of its lower forum. This is the government's obvious right because there are two forums within this tribunal. I fail to understand your anger over the government's intention to use its legal rights.

Friedrich Wilhelm Kramer, West German Radio ARD: What about the sleeping bags and blankets that are to be sent to New York? Any difficulties?

Urban: No difficulties, except that talks on delivering these bags in New York are still continuing. The Polish Committee for Social Assistance has had talks with a charitable organization in New York, which is ready to receive this delivery, but certain regulations have to be satisfied in advance. In this connection, I wish to state that it is not true that we are against the supplies of milk for Poland as claimed by the VOA.

Maria Goc, Radio Polonia: Could you comment on the recent CSCE conference in Bern?

Urban: The Bern conference had its specific and clear tasks that had been laid down by the CSCE conference in Madrid and accepted by 35 foreign ministers in September 1983. Briefly, these tasks were to examine how far it is possible to facilate contacts between people in Europe and to find better ways of strengthening security and cooperation within the CSCE process.

Poland went to the Bern meeting with specific and realistic proposals. Following long and tiresome negotiations the Polish and other realistic proposals were included in a compromise draft document drawn up by the neutral and nonaligned countries. This document also included the realistic proposals put forward by West European countries, Canada, and the United States on the subjects of enabling people to travel in connection with family matters, bringing together families living apart, and promoting contacts between various religious organizations and churches.

The Bern meeting was very close to adopting balanced and sensible recommendations for the governments of 35 European and American countries, but the unreasonable and confrontational stand of the United States, which refused to agree, defeated all efforts.

Even those closest to the U.S. disapproved of the U.S. stand, which for the sake of its big-power ambitions cancelled the agreement reached by all the European countries.

The Polish delegation defined the Bern conference as a meeting of lost opportunities because what was wasted comprised the results of negotiations that would be favorable for the CSCE process, as well as for Europe and the Europeans.

Leszek Pawlowicz, CBS: As for those sleeping bags, which charitable organization has agreed to distribute them in New York?

Urban: I do not remember its exact name. I can remember two words Here's life [published], but there are more words to it.

Guenther Schubert, ZDF: Is it true that some people who have offered their sleeping bags for New York have declared their readiness to take them there themselves and stay there for good?

Urban: You are referring to a joke making its rounds in Warsaw. The joke is that someone has published this advertisement: "Will exchange a villa in Zoliborz for a sleeping bag in New York." I am pleased to note that you like the jokes invented for every situation by the Warsaw people. I think this contributes to the charm of our city.

Peter Johnsson, GOETEBORG POSTEN: I have been reading articles on Chernobyl in the Polish press, especially in connection with the safety of the peaceful uses of nuclear energy. Unfortunately, the arguments in this connection are always the same.

For example, RZECZPOSPOLITA wrote that even if three times as many nuclear power stations were built, only a single accident might occur in a 1,000 years; some 2 weeks ago you said nuclear energy is safe and has a great future. However, the development of nuclear energy in other countries will be affected by considerable changes. For example, the SPD [Social Democratic Party of Germany] in the FRG stated that some types of nuclear power stations will not be built. Belgium has postponed the construction of a new nuclear power station and Great Britain has postponed the construction of facilities for neutralizing nuclear fallout. Finland will not build its fifth nuclear power station. Sweden and the Philippines have halted their programs and people in Austria continue to demonstrate against nuclear installations. The United States has closed a number of nuclear power stations, following the 1979 accident at Three Mile Island.

Does this not pose the danger that Poland, which intends to concentrate its resources on the development of nuclear energy in the eighties and nineties, will again be technologically behind the rest of the world insofar as energy is concerned? In view of this, is it not necessary to reconsider the program for the further expansion of Polish energy by changing investment priorities in favor of other types of power stations?

Urban: You have listed many countries in which various nuclear power investments have been postponed. We have also postponed the first stage of construction since the planning of the Zarnowiec power station took longer than assumed because of the necessity to improve and modify its safety systems. When all data on the Chernobyl accident are available we will take them into consideration and decide what lessons could be applied in order to improve the safety of Zarnowiec, although Zarnowiec is an entirely different type of power station.

Our specialists say that the Zarnowiec power station has very good safety standards. Insofar as laymen are concerned, the descriptions of all safety systems are most convincing.

We think that mankind will not change its intentions, but will continue to build nuclear power stations, having improved the safety systems still further. As for Poland, we do not want to lag behind too much in this regard. We will not lag behind insofar as the systems ensuring the safety of nuclear energy are concerned.

Peter Johnsson: Do I understand that you have halted the construction of Zarnowiec?

Urban: No, we have not. What I have said is that the work in Zarnowiec has been delayed for a year already because of the changes that have to be made in order to improve the safety systems.

Christopher Bobinski, THE FINANCIAL TIMES: Could you tell us how many political prisoners there are in Poland and whether their present number will increase sharply?

Urban: In line with principles I will not disclose the number of prisoners you, gentlemen, call political. I will give this number at the next press conference for Polish journalists. If at least a few Western government institutions tell our journalists the number of political prisoners in just a few Western countries, I will follow suit and do the same for you.

Renate Marsch, DPA: Last Thursday the press announced that television would screen Spielberg's movie "Sugarland Express," but there was no screening and viewers were disappointed. Does this mean that for political reasons the authorities want to reduce the screening of U.S. movies by Polish television to a minimum? Does the fact that this movie was advertised in ANTENA and was later withdrawn mean that television management and the political authorities differ on this score?

Urban: All I am able to answer is the second half of your question because television management is responsible for programs and for changes in them; you should ask them. The spokesman for the government does not normally discuss such changes, but I can tell you that there are no political differences between television management and other bodies that deal with television.

NIECKARZ SIGNS DOCUMENT FOR IMF MEMBERSHIP

[PAP report on the signing of the document admitting Poland to the International Monetary Fund by Stanislaw Nieckarz, PPR minister for finance, in Washington on 12 June]

[Text] Acting on behalf of the Polish Government, Minister Stanislaw Nieckarz signed a document admitting Poland to the International Monetary Fund in Washington on 12 June.

On the occasion of the signing, Minister Nieckarz met with the director of the organization, Jacques de Larosiere, and other senior functionaries of the IMF. Poland regards its entry to the fund as the next step on the path to the normalization of financial relations with members of the organization. These expectations were confirmed by the voting on Poland's admission; the overwhelming majority of IMF members favored Poland's acceptance.

Minister Nieckarz told Polish correspondents in Washington that "we are becoming an increasingly strong presence in the international financial community after many years of trying to exclude us from it, something which was not, of course, our fault." We cannot expect to benefit from IMF membership immediately. We can, howeverr, hope that it will be important in the long run. It should stop our creditors from making it difficult for us to repay our debts at an appropriate pace. In the opinion of Minister Nieckarz, Poland's entry to the IMF will enable us to implement the economic reform more boldly.

According to AFP, Poland's admission confirms our country's return to the international financial scene.

Western commentators stress that membership in the IMF will create new credit possibilities, but this is, of course, a question of time. AFP and AP write that a condition for obtaining loans -- as in the case of other IMF members who are seeking assistance of this kind from the organization -- is the consistent implementation of a program of far-reaching restructuring of the economy and increased economic activity, usually accompanied by economizing measures that make it possible to repay existing debts.

For this reason Minister Nieckarz said, "It cannot be excluded that in certain circumstances society may even be disappointed with some aspects of our participation in the IMF." The minister stressed the necessity of viewing the matter in overall terms. "It is not a panacea, to be sure," he added, "but one element assisting our economic development. We must, above all, count on our own energies."

MALINOWSKI ASSESSES RESULTS OF PRC VISIT

[Text] PAP -- A PAP journalist asked Sejm Marshal Roman Malinowski, who headed the Polish delegation on its visit to the PRC, for an assessment of this visit:

[Malinowski] This was the first visit by representatives of the Polish Sejm to the PRC, and at the same time, a return visit because last yeaer we hosted a delegation from the Chinese National People's Congress. Our visit ought to be regarded as necessary and useful. It possessed a political dimension, but will also serve to enhance the cooperation between both states in all spheres. Our economic, trade, scientific, and cultural relations have experienced a great revival in recent years. As the PRC's economic partner, Poland has moved from fourth place to second place among the socialist countries. Both sides possess the desire, confirmed yet again during our talks, to enhance this cooperation, extend it into new spheres, and enrich it with new forms. This applies not only to the already existing cooperation in mining, but also to such aspheres as energy, transportation, and the modernization of industrial premises that Poland once built in the PRC. We also discussed joint scientific research and innovations, as well as the development of trade with individual Chinese provinces. Both sides are also interested in the creation of joint enterprises; here it is worth recalling that there has been an enterprise like this in Shanghai -- Chipolbrok -- for 35 years. It was founded during the U.S. economic blockade of the PRC.

We also discussed the expansion of cooperation between PRON [Patriotic Movement for National Rebirth] and the PRC Political Consultative Conference and between trade unions and social organizations from both countries. We have recently established a rich legal infrastructure to bring about this kind of cooperation. I have in mind the appointment of the joint Committee for Economic and Scientific-Technological Cooperation, as well as the conclusion of agreements on this cooperation and the signing of a consular convention for the first time in the history of our relations. Further proposals are being considered, some of which have already been presented to the Chinese side by our Council of Ministers Planning Commission. I believe all this creates possitive conditions for frutiful cooperation in the long-term future.

We also discussed international problems and ways of opposing those dangers to the modern world connected with confrontation and armaments policy. It is here that cooperation between parliamentarians possesses great significance.

Finally, I wish to stress that we were received exceptionally warmly wherever we went, in accordance with the tradition of friendship and respect joining both our socialism-building peoples. Almost all of our delegation was in the PRC for the first time; we were impressed by China's cultural heritage, the Chinese people's industriousness, and the great changes that have occurred there in recent years. We encountered a great deal of evidence of positive sentiment and interese in Polish affairs and of an extensive knowledge thereof, just as in Poland there is a great interest is what is happening in the PRC. This climate of mutual interest augurs well for our future contacts and cooperation.

COUNCIL OF MINISTERS REVIEWS ANTIRADIATION WORK

[Text] Warsaw, June 20 -- The Council of Ministers which got together today acquainted itself with a report prepared by the government Commission for Evaluation of Nuclear Radiation and Preventive Measures in connection with the breakdown at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant.

The commission's work and the drafted conclusions were presented by its chairman, Vice-Premier Zbigniew Szalajda.

The commission's main task was to analyze and evaluate radiological situation in Poland on the basis of reports on the measurements of contamination and radiation doses, to make decisions on actions, chiefly preventive, to be taken by individual ministries as well as to inform the society about dangers and methods of limiting them. The commission also coordinated and supervised the realization of tasks entrusted to appropriate bodies.

Eminent specialists in radiology, radiological protection, health protection and experts in other domains took part in the commission's work.

Results of measuring and analyses carried out by competent institutions served as a basis for the commission's work in the period of radiological danger. The commission made use of norms worked out by countries of developed nuclear science and availed itself of suggestions of the International Atomic Energy Agency. As of April 29 the commission collaborated with the delegation of specialist of the USSR's State Committee for Hydrometeorology and Natural Protection staying in Poland.

The commission's report comprises a review of the radiological situation in Poland before April 28, 1986, an evaluation of the potential exposure in this country after the Chernobyl reactor accident, and, among other things, conclusions on the use of experience gained from the performance of the national organs and services under the conditions of potential radiological emergency.

The report provides precise data on radioactive contamination levels, as well as measures and decisions taken by any state organs, and it also carries justifications of every action undertaken.

In connection with the now-commencing construction of Poland's first nuclear power plant in Zarnowiec and with the preparations for the construction of further such plants, as envisaged by the power engineering development programme until the year 2000, the report carries proposals related to a consistent and unconditional execution of safety requirements during all construction phases and the future operation of power plants of its kind.

Basing on independent opinions, corrections will be made in the control and safety systems so as to secure a more efficient prevention of accidents in reactors and the elimination of their potential effects. Attention was also drawn to a proper training that must be given to the personnel expected to operate the plant's equipment and systems which are especially crucial from the viewpoint of nuclear safety.

The commission found it purposeful to accelerate international works on standards uniformization and formulation of principles and procedures of international cooperation in radiological protection and prevention.

The Council of Ministers determined that the commission had taken right decisions protecting the population's health from the occurring potential exposures and it had fully and without delay informed the nation about the contamination levels, their effects, and methods for health protection.

The commission followed the principle that it is better to protect human health by using preventive methods beyond actual needs than to risk any negligence.

While insisting on maximum safety, the commission tried to minimize any social anxiety stemming from the experience of a phenomenon which was previously unknown in Poland. The Council of Ministers highly evaluated the commitment and professionalism of the government commission, the collaborating persons, and institutions. The Council of Ministers acknowledged the international organizations' approval of the preventive measures ordered in Poland and of the country's overt information policy.

The Council of Ministers adopted a resolution on securing the execution of decisions and conclusions ensuing from the government commission's report on the evaluation of nuclear radiation and the preventive measures.

The resolution obligates the respective ministers and heads of central institutions to use the report and conclusions it carries in the further works performed by units under their command. The report will be a public document available to all institutions and persons concerned.

Next the Council of Ministers evaluated the state of health and safety in industry, and the implementation of tasks related to labour protection last year and in the first half of 1986.

Despite some improvement in the field of health and safety, the council noted that the situation here still needs continued systematic and consistent work. The council recommended a full-detail review of activities of enterprises from the angle of how they live up to their duty of protecting labour under the conditions set by the economic reform. Economic instruments will be adjusted to force the enterprises to improve their working conditions.

The council also adopted a resolution on obligatory evaluations of the health and safety aspects of machines and technical equipment in use. The resolution defines the accountability of manufacturers and the consequences to be faced by firms which launch the production of machines failing to meet the health and safety standards.

At this point of debate the Council of Ministers acquainted themselves with a report on the welfare activities and the state of works on the provisions of the law on social welfare. Budgetary spendings for this purpose reached 39.2 billion zlotys in 1985. The lowest social security benefit was increased this year up to 7,000 zlotys monthly. The financial assistance is being corroborated with other material benefits.

The council also adopted a resolution on the creation of an export development bank. The necessity to set up such a bank was pointed to at the party-economic conference in Poznan. The bank's principal task will be crediting, in Polish and foreign currencies, of ventures by state-run enterprises aimed at increasing the exporting potential of the national economy.

STATE COUNCIL VIEWS COMPLAINTS, APPOINTS ENVOYS

AU171500 Warsaw TRYBUNA LUDU in Polish 12 Jun 86 pp 1, 2

[Excerpts] At its 11 June session in Warsaw, the State Council evaluated the commitment of the people's councils to the issues raised by complaints from citizens and assessed the implementation of the tasks stemming from such complaints. Saying that the people's councils are greatly committed to the complaints and proposals from the citizens, the State Council noted that sensitiveness to the issues raised in complaints and a specific and effective response to them are important tasks of the councils in strengthening the rule of law and in making credible the service functions of the local bodies of government and state administration vis-a-vis the citizens.

Sporadic cases in which people's councils adopt formal attitudes toward the complaints and proposals submitted by citizens should be radically eliminated.

The State Council appointed Marian Fronczek ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary of the PPR to the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Stanislaw Kukuryka ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary of the PPR to the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriyah.

Mr. Fronczek was born on 12 September 1929 in Radoryz Smolany, Siedlce Voivodship, to a peasant family. In 1954 he graduated from the Main Foreign Service School in Warsaw and was head of the Olsztyn Voivodship Office for the Control of Press, Publications, and Entertainment. As a foreign service employee he worked in the International Control Commission in Laos and was a vice consul and consul in the Polish Consulate in Paris and the first secretary in the Polish Embassy in Paris. His most recent post was that of an adviser ot the minister in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. He is a member of the PZPR.

Stanislaw Kukuryka was born on 14 June 1928 in Jakubowka near Lublin to a peasant family. After graduation from a secondary construction school in 1947 he studied law and graduated from the Curie Sklodowska University in Lublin in 1954. Between 1955 and 1958 he worked in the Agricultural Department of the Lublin Voivodship People's Council and in housing cooperatives and was chairman of the Lublin Housing Cooperative and departmental director of the Lublin Housing Design Office. In 1967 he was deputy chairman of the Central Union of Housing Cooperatives and in 1972 chairman of this union. In 1982 he was appointed by the Sejm as minister of construction and building materials, at which post he stayed until 13 November 1985. He is a member of the PZPR.

MALINOWSKI SURVEYS POLISH AGRICULTURAL POLICY

AU191022 Budapest MAGYAR HIRLAP in Hungarian 16 Jun 86 p 3

[Interview with Roman Malinowski, chairman of the ZSL and marshal of the Sejm by Warsaw correspondent Laszlo Abran: "The Driving Force of The Polish Economy -- Interview In Warsaw With The Marshal of the Sejm on Agricultural Policy" -- date not given; first paragraph is paper's introduction]

[Text] Just like we Hungarians, the Poles too, the majority of city dwellers, are bound to the villages by the smae emotional ties. (Three-quarters of the cities' populations-- first or second generation -- still originate from among the peasants.) That is why they follow news coming from the villages with particular sensitivity and keep track of production results and the development of procurement of fooder supply. The people's interest in agricultural news has increased, particularly in recent years as the agricultural sector has virtually outrun the other sectors. We asked Roman Malinowski, chairman of the ZSL and marshal of the Polish Sejm, the Polish National Assembly, about the causes behind this development and its background.

[Abran] First of all: What are the general principles of your agricultural policy and how long have they been asserted?

[Malinowski] The foundations of this policy were jointly laid down by the PZPR and ZSL in 1983. The leading bodies of the two parties, the Central Committee and the Presidium, held a joint meeting -- their first joint meeting since the liberation. Taking into consideration both our favorable and unfavorable past experiences, we endeavored to work out a comprehensive and wellfounded program that also looked to the future. Ryszard Manteuffel, the leading member of the Polish theoretical agriculturists, concluded that never before has there been such a comprehensive, complex political decision that takes into consideration the reality in People's Poland in such a short time.

By implementing this decision consistently -- we believe -- we could create conditions for the rapid development of agriculture and the food industry and could become self-sufficient in agricultural produce and food by the end of the decade. Our legislative body approved this program adotped by the government. At the same time, we decided that the PZPR Politburo, the ZSL Presidium, the government, and the Sejm would reexmanine the program year by year and would modify and institute changes when necessary.

[Abran] Are there possibilities for public supervision also?

[Malinowski] In addition to the government report, the so-called public report is also submitted to the members of parliament. This report is compiled by the government's advisory body, the social committee of the Council for Food Economy. The bodies representing the interests of the agricultural production cooperatives, state farms, and individual farmers are represented in this committee.

[Abran] Coming back to the program itself, is it possible to implement it without limiting consumption?

[Malinowski] I am convinced that we possess all the necessary endowments to implement this program. We have enough arable land: We considerably exceed the per captia useful arable land counted on the basis of international norms. It is true, however, that our arable land is not of the best quality. We have much more loose and sandy soil that the other countries in Europe. Our production zeal, however, is quite intense. Individual and cooperative farmers are competing with each other in modernizing production. We could also increase our agricultural and food product exports considerably. And -- as has been proven recently -- agriculture is capabel of greater development compared to other sectors of the economy. Its net production value has already exceeded that of 1978, while that of the other sectors is still 15 percent behind the 1978 figures. The same can be said about the food market: in spite of the undoubtedly existing tensions, it is relatively our best supplied market. The supply is improving gradually and consumption is above the norms ste down by WHO, the World Health Organization. With the exception of meat supplies, we stopped the rationing of food a few months ago. We achieved progress by simultaneously improving the foreign trade balance of our agricultural and food products. Our foreign trade deficit stood at $2 billion in 1981, and by 1984 this deficit had decreased to $60 million.

[Abran] To what measures can you attribute the progress in agriculture and its results?

[Malinowski] We have taken various measures in all directions in order to achieve this. For example: We decided to increase the purchase price parallel with the increase in production costs. We have eased tax burdens. We are encouraging a more flexible modification of the industrial structure in accordance with the needs of the agricultural sector. Not long ago, only 4 percent of industrial production was being directed into agriculture and today this figure is 5-6 percent, and by 1990 it will reach 8-9 percent. This growth rate is above the general growth rate of industrial production.

[Malinowski] Obviously. For example, our food industry is lagging many years behind. Our agriculture produces 45 percent of the raw matherials used in the country in vain if we are unable to process a huge proportion of this amount, or is we process it inadequately. We urgently wish to change this situation. Neither is soil improvement progessing the way we would like it to: We have practically ceased to compensate for the reduation in arable land since 1975, thus we are losing 110-120 thousand hectores annually. In order to halt this process, we will meliorate 700,000 hectares in the current 5-year plan.

We have shortages of artificial fertilizers and pesticides. Of the latter -- counting the net chemical value -- there is 1 kilogram per hectare, while 3 kilograms would be desirable. The supply of fodder continues to be inadequate, despite the fact that we are producing enough fodder, since here even the potato is considered a fodder plant rather than a vegetable. But we are also forced to import better quality fodder with a higher protein content. We need 1 and 1/2 million metric tons annually but we get considerably less than that.

[Abran] The Constitution of the Polish People's Republic declared the individual farm to be a lasting element of agriculture. Does that mean that you have given up the long-term goal of the socialist transformation of agriculture?

[Malinowski] There are agricultural production cooperatives at present and these will also continue to be established in the future, but only on a voluntary basis and only in places where a greater performance capacity is expected of them than from the individual farmers. Quite a few people, respected experts among them, claim that with the above-mentioned paragraph in the Constitution, we have acquiesced in the existing situation. More than that, some people claim that we have even committed a crime against socialism. This is an incorrect and mistaken position. At the above-mentioned joint meeting of the leading bodies of the two parties we recognized the fact that the current ownership structure was outdated and could not be maintained for long. Progress, however, does not occur overnight and does not depend on the individual will and willingness of the farmers or of anyone else.

[Abran] There are, however, voices saying that the individual farms have exhausted their development possibilities....

[Malinowski] Neither our experiences nor the foreign examples confirm this. Many things are progressive in our individual farms. They produce more and are more closely linked to the market. The ownership structure is also improving -- larger and better equipped farms are being established which promise greater yields, greater efficiency, and a greater reduction of expenses. Of course, we are still far from greater ventures as the average size of the individual farms continues to be 5 hectares and even 2 hectares in some places. On top of everything they are generally made up of a dozen or even more thin strips of ground.... In spite of this, the process of manpower migration has ceased and an increasing number of young people are returning to their villages.

[Abran] The number of individual farms is 2,800,000. Is it possible to mechanize that many farms?

[Malinowski] There is no doubt that even the richest country would be unable to do that. That is why we are developing the so-called agricultural cooperatives groups' services, we are expanding cooperation between various sectors and creating associations for the more organized purchasing of products and for the common use of heavy equipment. The majority of farmers do not question the advantages inherent in joint farming. We recently organized an exchange of experiences at the "Igloopol" combine in Tarnow that covers several districts. Farmers with 2-3 hectares were lost in wonder. I told them, "Who forbids you from establishing similar joint farms at home in your villages? Get started and you will not be sorry."

[Abran] Finally, in your opinion, what is the Polish peasant like? What are his most particular characteristics?

[Malinowski] First of all, without prejudice: He is diligent, loves to work, and is capable of many things. Second: He is extremely active socially and politically. He can subordinate his own interests to those of society and the state. The roots of his behavior are to be sought in the past, in our traditions, and in the more than 90 years of the popular movement.

High-level political awareness was also characteristic of the Polish peasant between the world wars. The most fierce class struggle of this period, for example, was fought by the peasants: Several hundred thousand Polish peasants began a strike and turned against the regime in August 1937. The same people later took up arms against the Hitlerite occupation forces -- gathering together in their own independent fighting units, the so-called peasant battalions. They also remained true to themselves during the latest crisis: Solidarity was unable to acquire considerable influence in villages; only 140,000 people became members of the movement. In short, in the past the peasantry meant very strong support for the people's power and for the socialist state. I feel we can count and rely on them in the future also.

JOZWIAK DISCUSSES DOMESTIC TRADE PROBLEMS

AU161810 Warsaw TRYBUNA LUDU in Poland 11 Jun 86 p 5

[Interview given by Jerzy Jozwiak, minister of domestic trade and services, to an unidentified PAP correspondent: "How Is Trade Functioning?" -- date and place not given]

[Excerpt] [Correspondent] We read the communique from the 9 June government Presidium session that the unfavorable trends besetting deliveries of industrial and food commodities are to disappear by the end of June. What sort of trends are these and what goods do they apply to?

[Jozwiak] A certain danger has emerged that the principles of the Central Annual Plan for the first half of the year concerning deliveries of clothing and footwear for children up the age of 15, color and black-and-white television sets, towels, cement, and lime will not be fulfilled. The ministries in charge of industry have been placed under an obligation to make good the delays by the end of June. The differences are not considerable and this obligation should be successfully performed. The government Presidium also discussed the market forecasts for the second quarter. Steps have been taken which should protect the market against a shortage of footwear, underwear, and building materials. Suppliers have been placed under an obligation to increase the production of maturing cheeses and butter.

[Correspondent] The government Presidium also adopted a program for the development of small-scale production....

[Jozwiak] Many voivodships have adopted an excessively slow growth rate of small-scale production in their plans. What is more, a similar feature can be observed in the draft National Socioeconomic Plan for 1986-90.

All the government can do is create the conditions for the development of small-scale production. This involves the supply of raw materials, and favorable solutions in the economic-financial system (a 10 percent income tax rebate, concessions for investments, favorable credits, and so on). However, the implementation of the program depends most of all on the local authorities. From 1987 we will stop all control whatsoever over goods manufactured by small-scale production. Everything so produced within the area of a given voivodship will remain for the sole use of that voivodship. This should provide a stimulus for the local authorities, who depend on a good local market, the development of small-scale production, the use of local raw materials, and the development of services.

IMPROVEMENTS SEEN IN CONTROL COMMISSION WORK

AU131145 Warsaw TRYBUNA LUDU in Poland 10 Jun 86 p 3

[Interview given by Jerzy Urbanski, chairman of the PZPR Central Control Commission, to Anna Pawlowska -- date and place not given]

[Excerpts] [Pawlowska] At the end of April the Central Control Commission approved a report on its activities that will be presented at the 10th PZPR Congress. This document discusses the main directions of work and contains an abundance of figures. However, at the end of the meeting you said that the work cannot be evaluated solely from the point of view of numbers, the number of matters examined, and the number of decisions taken. Thus, how should the work of the commission be assessed?

[Urbanski] I believe the most important question is the extent to which we have been able to help in bringing about the effective implementation of the resolutions adopted at the ninth extraordinary congress, in overcoming weaknesses and strengthening the party, and in ensuring the observation of the party's ideological and ethical principles. That is how the party control commission sees its work. Experience shows how costly it is for the party to depart from Leninist principles, to treat them in a "slack" fashion, to have principles shaped by what is expedient at a given time.

We have, of course, been dealing with matters on an individual basis; this stems from the very nature of our functions. But the object of these activities is not one that ends at the individual level. Every matter that reaches the control commission should act as a red light -- this is happening more and more often -- that serves to warn party organizations, echelons, and communities.

[Pawlowska] Lately the Central Control Commission has devoted a great deal of attention to combatting the recurrence of various "illnesses of authority" that strike people who occupy managerial and leadership positions. Have these illnesses really proved to be incurable? Or are people's memories so short?

[Urbanski] The temptations presented by authority are probably a permanent phenomenon. But the party member who is entrusted with leadership duties and bears responsibility for an area of work assigned him, should remember about the existence of such temptations and should not allow himself to succumb to them. However, it should be added that for these temptations to arise a medium conducive to their emergence must exist in a given milieu -- an environment of a sycophancy, excessive tolerance, of complaisancy motivated by self-interest. When it comes down to it, the director, the chairman, and the chief are guilty. But what about those who helped in scheming, in avoiding work, in excessive banqueting, who saw what was going on but pretended to be blind -- are they pure and innocent? One's memory can deceive one when arrogance, the most dangerous "illness of authority", is rife.

Bad practices have been condemned in the harshest of words on many occasions. However, it is one thing to condemn them, even sincerely and from the bottom of one's heart, and quite another thing to conquer them, to eliminate them altogether. To condemn bad practices, an emotional reaction is sufficient; but to conquer them, resoluteness and consistency are called for along with political work. The party is conducting work of this kind by, inter alia, placing growing demands on its members who occupy managerial positions, by teaching them political culture, respect for people, and allegiance to principles. When, alongside improved cadre policy, all party organizations apply their statutory rights to the full and in relation to members who are "prominent personages," the fight against the "illnesses of authority" will be more effective and resisting temptations will become easier. At the same time, however, party control organs must intervene from time to time to apply some shock treatment.

[Pawlowska] Work in these party organs seems to be a particularly thankless task, having to view the darker side of life....

[Urbanski] It is not entirely like that. In view of its important educational status, this kind of work can and does give many members of the commission a great deal of satisfaction. However, comrades should not take up this kind of work if they lack faith in people, in people's ability to overcome error and conquer bad ways, comrades who are not firmly convinced that our ideas can not only transform the world but also transform man. The party needs this kind of work to be performed, something that the session now coming to end provides ample evidence of. People need this kind of work, even if they do not realize it at that critical moment when they come into contact with party jurisdiction. To provide an analogy, surely no one would think of a physician's work as being thankless.

I would also like to add that control commissions have gained a great deal of valuable experience during this last session. The session was a very difficult one, a unique one. I think this experience will be used in the future, and the work of the commission improved during the course of implementing the resolutions that will be adopted at the 10th party congress.

WALESA SUMMONED TO APPEAR AS TRIAL WITNESS

[Text] Warsaw, June 20 (AFP) -- Solidarity leader Lech Walesa Friday [20 June] was summoned to appear as a trial witness, shortly after he applied for a passport to make his first trip to the West since martial law was imposed in December 1981. Mr. Walesa is being summoned to testify on June 24 in a trial whose nature was not disclosed, his family said. Observers say he is likely to appear in the trial of Zbigniew Bujak, the head of the TKK, the underground leadership of the banned Solidarity trade union, who was arrested here May 31 and charged with seeking to overthrow the state.

Before receiving the summons, Mr. Walesa Friday applied for a passport, hoping to go to Italy on July 2 to 4 in response to an invitation by the Italian foreign minister, Giulio Andreotti, to attend a world conference on peace. Mr. Walesa's wife, Danuta, also applied for a passport. Since 1981, Mr. Walesa had never applied for a passport, fearing that Polish authorities would not let him back into the country if he left. His wife received the Nobel Peace Prize in his honor in Oslo in December 1983.

Mr. Walesa's parish priest, Father Henryk Janowski, a noted pro-Solidarity figure who is chaplain for the Gdansk shipyards, said that he also had received a court summons. He said he is scheduled to appear on June 23.

POLICE PREVENT ANNIVERSARY MARCH IN WARSAW

LD221531 Hamburg DPA in German 1353 GMT 22 Jun 86

[Text] Warsaw 22 Jun (DPA) -- The Polish police today prevented a workers march in the Warsaw suburb of Ursus and arrested several people. The march commemorated the 1976 protests against the increase in prices. To mark the 10th anniversary of the unrest, and following a mass, around 500 people marched to a memorial near the tractor works, which is located near the area where in June 1976 workers blocked the main railway lines to protest the increase in prices.

The police allowed only one small group, including a prominent member of the Polish opposition, Jan Jozef Lipski, to go up to the memorial with a wreath.

After this, informed circles in Warsaw reported that he and several other people, including opposition member Jacek Kuron, were arrested. The rest of the crowd was then pushed back and told to disperse.

During the memorial mass at the church in Ursus, where around 2,000 people took part, the worshippers prayed for the recently arrested underground leader Zbigniew Bujak and the Solidarity trade union.

[Text] The Polish civil rights campaigners, Kuron and Lipski, following brief detention by police this afternoon, have been released. Kuron said he had been questioned at Ursus police station for 2 hours when, after attending mass, he had tried to go to the memorial stone for the workers' protest of June 1976. Today Kuron, Lipski, and other dissidents attended the memorial service marking the 10th anniversary of the unrest. Police prevented a demonstration march from the church to the memorial.

SIX SOLIDARITY MEMBERS GIVEN PRISON TERMS, FINES

[Text] Warsaw, June 20 (AFP) -- Six militant members of the banned trade union Solidarity were given prison sentences and fines by a regional court here Thursday, their families reported Friday. They were charged with having printed, stocked and distributed clandestine pamphlets with the aim of "disturbing public order." They were arrested on June 12.

The two main accused, Wlodzislaw Hrabowski, an engineer and Maria Chmielewska, an industrial artist, were given eighteen months prison, suspended in the case of Mrs. Chmielewska, who was also fined 300,000 zlotys (1,700 dollars). The other four accused -- Anna Szymanska, Krystyna Rolecka, Anna Ciupa and Michael Marczewski -- were each given suspended one-year jail terms and fined sums ranging from 100,000-200,000 zlotys (570-1,140 dollars).

Judge Olga Wydrowa refused to allow the correspondents of AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE or the BBC to cover the trial.

Independent sources reported Friday that Michal Janiszewski, 32, was jailed for two years by another Warsaw court on Thursday for distributing Solidarity's clandestine weekly bulletin UNIA (UNITY). He was arrested in October.

KURON INTERVIEWED ON OUTLOOK FOR SOLIDARITY

PM191022 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER In Swedish 17 Jun 86 p 4

[Interview with KOR founding member Jacek Kuron by Maciej Zaremba: "We Are Sitting on a Powder Key" -- date, place not given]

[Text] It is not really true that the West's democracies cannot do anything for the people of the East. In front of me sits living proof of the international value of Western Europe's public opinion -- Jacek Kuron, whose temporary freedoms are always due to a certain extent to the protests triggered by his incarcerations.

But as recently as yesterday he was under arrest. Several Solidarity leaders, including Onyszkiewicz, who had applied for permission to arrange an independent 1 May procession were arrested as a preventive step at the beginning of May.

"It was not that bad," Kuron said, "they pretended to interrogate me and I had a book with me. From time to time the police colonel went out to make telephone calls. On one of these occasions the chief interrogator looked at his watch and said, 'I think they will probably let us go at nine.' But it is not that many people who are treated so politely."

Like everyone else I have spoken to, Jacek Kuron describes the political situation as completely deadlocked.

[Kuron] There is today no "center" in Polish politics, primarily for the reason that the government fears a political continuum, a sliding of viewpoints between those in power and opposition. For this reason they treat every attempt at mediation as opposition. Our strength is actually that there is no dividing line between the underground and civilian society. For that reason those in power have every reason to fear the "center."

But there is also another reason for the deadlock. The authorities we have today are on one point totally different from those in the time before the military coup. Despite everything, the communists in Poland previously had a weak point -- an ideological sensitivity -- not to opposition, but to workers' protests. Every major workers revolt led to the discovery of "deviations" in the party line and the leadership was changed.

It was, as it were, not in the party's ethos to shoot without embarrassment at workers. This was visible under Gieree in particular; anything you like -- they said -- but not workers' corpses. So they yielded, reversed price rises, tolerated KOR, and so on. But after that December night in 1981 this ideology ws swept away and in came naked force; things are still on this same road today.

In one way this is a good thing. The West -- and some Poles -- finally saw the true face of real socialism. But for us, for Solidarity, it is catastrophic -- those in power are no longer sensitive, they have gotten rid of their one weakness: their ideology. That is why we are standing still today -- no pressure has any effect. We could take part in rebellions, which would end you know how, or we make no progress.

The Poles have done what they could. We are de-Sovietized, we have this fantastic independent culture and this civilian society -- but we will get no further under our own steam. That is why we must wait.

[Zaremba] For what?

[Kuron] For the situation to once again make those in power sensitive in some way. At present I can see three extremely hypothetical and uncertain possibilities. The first -- that something happens in the Soviet Union so that Gorbachev says to Jaruzelski or some one else: "Listen, this is too unstable; you must do something." The second -- that some sort of factional conflict among those in power here gives the opposition new room to maneuver.

And the third, finally, that the West -- I mean Europe and the United States -- points out the danger in the explosive Polish situation and make them positions in the disarmament negotiations, the credit talks, and the discussions on technology exports in some way dependent on a compromise in Poland. That would immediately make our satraps sensitigve to domestic opinion.

But I am not saying by that that the West can solve our problems. It will never be able to do that -- that is something we have learned to live with. But it should also understand that it is unrealistic to try to achieve detente in the world without resolving the tension in Poland. People here are enormously frustrated; they can see no future, and what they are now being told is that they will have to learn to live in constant poverty.

They do not go out and demonstrate, for that serves no purpose, but they know their strength and we are preparing to act the moment they see a chance of succeeding. No one knows when this will come -- this fall or in 5 years' time. And no one knows how it will happen. But this means that we are sitting on a powder keg. If it goes off our rulers' coutermoves will sweep away everything that goes by the name detente.

Sometimes I think they are calculating on such an eventuality -- some in the hope of crushing us completely, others because they believe that after that they will be able to begin to liberalize. But I do not think that even they, and certainly not the West, are interested in the Russians' coming here, for that is what is at stake.

CEAUSESCU CHAIRS POLITICAL COMMITTEE MEETING

[Text] Bucharest, AGERPRES 20/6/1986 -- A June 20 meeting of the CC ofthe RCP Executive Political Committee, chaired by the general secretary of the Romanian Communist Party, Nicolae Ceausescu, examined and approved a series of documents related to the country's economic and social development in the ongoing five-year plan period spanning 1986-1990, and to the further improvement of activities in that area. The documents include the programme for the attainment of the goals set by the Thirteenth Congress of the RCP for the intensive growth of national economy over 1986-1990. It was shown that the programmes of measures -- set by branches, ministries, central departments and enterprises -- for improved production and work organization help boost the qualitative aspects of economic growth, the intensive development of industry, agriculture, of all branches and fields of activity, in keeping with the latest gains in science and technology, and are conducive to a more powerful mobilization of the existing resources, to a steadfast increase in effeciency, to Romania's growing participation in world economic exchanges.

In connection with the draft single national plan of socioeconomic development of Romania in the 1986-1990 five-year period -- another document debated and approved during the meeting -- it was shown that it provided for the stronger mobilization of the country's material and human resources, of the growing possibilities in the national economy, through a resolute passage to the intensive development, to the increase of efficiency in all fields of activity, to the achievement of a new higher quality of life and work in the whole people's life. As for the draft plan of development of agriculture and the food industry over 1986-1990, the Executive Political Committee assessed that it ensured the fulfillment of the targets of the new agrarian revolution, the complete capitalization of all resources of raising the vegetal and animal production to better satisfy the population's consumption needs, other needs of the national economy. Another document analyzed is the programme for the improvement of the financing and crediting of economic activities and of economic and financial norms.

As set by the Executive Political Committee, all these documents will be submitted for debate in the plenary meeting of the Central Committee of the RCP convened on June 23-24, 1986, and next in the Grand National Assembly (Romania's parliament) due on June 26.

During the same meeting, the Executive Political Committee also examined a report on the enforcement of the law on territorial, urban and rural planning setting measures for a better organization and systematization of all localities, the integral capitalization with utmost efficiency of built-up areas in towns and villages alike, to eliminate any form of improper use of farmland so as to make it available for the development of the agricultural production.

The results of the talks between President Nicolae Ceausescu of Romania and President Amin al-Jumayyil of Lebanon were approved by the Executive Political Committee of the CC of the RCP who met on June 20. During the meeting President Nicolae Ceausescu read an account of the visit paid by President Amin al-Jumayyil to Romania.

The results of the dialogue were assessed as an important contribution to the promotion of the relations of friendship and collaboration between the two countries, to the further development of bilateral cooperation -- in economy, technology, science, culture -- to the benefit of both peoples, of the cause of peace and understanding in the world.

Stress was laid on the signification of the exchange of views made by President Nicolae Ceausescu and Amin al-Jumayyil on current international issues, on the Mideast situation in particular.

The Executive Political Committee was highly appreciative of the steadfast position, reiterated on the occasion too, by President Nicolae Ceausescu, on the ways and means to solve globally, politically, the Mideast situation and to establish a durable and just peace in that region, based on the withdrawal of Israel from the territories occupied after the 1967 war, the settlement of the Palestinian people's issue, through the recognition of its national rights -- including the right to self-determination and to an independent state of its own -- and the ensurance of security, independence and integrity of all states in that region.

In context, emphasis was placed on the significance of calling an international conference for peace in the Middle East, under the UN aegis, with the participation of all the countries and parties concerned, including the Palestine Liberation Organization, as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people, as well as of the Soviet Union and the United States of America, and other states that might make a positive contribution to the resolution of the situation in the area.

The need was brought to the fore to step up efforts with a view to finding a way out of the present-day situation in Lebanon as soon as possible, for the total and immediate withdrawal of the Israeli troops from the Lebanese territory, for an end to any interference in that country's internal affairs, the identification of a path conducive to a braod national reconciliation of all political forces, the ensurance of the Lebanese people's unity, the strengthening of its independence and freedom.

Stress was laid on Romania's and Lebanon's resolve to boost cooperation in the world arena, pursuing a constructive resoltuion of the major problems that confront mankind, the attainment of all the peoples' ideals of peace, freedom, independence and progress.

During its June 20, 1986 meeting the Executive Political Committee of the CC of the RCP approved unanimously the documents endorsed at the Budapest meeting of the Consultative Political Committee of the States Participant in the Warsaw Treaty, considering them to open wide prospects to the struggle for peace, disarmament and international collaboration.

During the meeting Nicolae Ceausescu informed of the proceedings of the meeting of the Consultative Political Committee of the states participant in the Warsaw Treaty, that proceeded in Budapest over June 10-11, 1986.

The Executive Political Committee appreciated highly the activity carried out by Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu at the meeting and his contribution to working out the endorsed document, as well as the brilliant way in which the party and state head presented Romania's stance on the particularly important problems that were discussed, stressing this to be fully in harmony with the resolutions established by the 13th Congress of the RCP and to meet to the full the Romanian people's supreme aspirations after peace and progress and life in a world free of weapons and wars, in a climate of understanding and fruitful cooperation among nations.

Stress was laid on the special importance of the appeal endorsed by the states participant in the Warsaw Treaty regarding a programme for the reduction of the armed forces and conventional arms in Europe. The fact was considered that reducing arms, military troops and spending by 25 percent until 1990 would enable a passage to further measures so that by the year 2000 they may be diminished by at least 50 percent. This way, by diminishing the troops and conventional arms and the military spending, confidence and peaceful collaboration will be able to grow, huge material, financial and human means will be released to be used to provide economic and social progress, to improve the general welfare of all the peoples. The fact was pointed out that under the current international situation that continues to be particularly grave, everything must be done to pass to a complex approach of the issues of disarmament, to the implementation of a general disarmament programme that while focusing on the nuclear disarmament should also include measures for a reduction of the conventional arms as well as other measures conducive to a development of the disarmament process and to removing the danger of war.

The Executive Political Committee considered that implementing this set of measures asks for an activization and a most efficient use of the existing negotiating forums and particularly for an impetus to be given to a successful progress of the Stockholm conference on strengthened confidence and collaboration and on disarmament in Europe, as well as of the Vienna negotiations, in view of attaining, as soon as possible, an adequate agreement on reducing arms and military troops in central Europe. Romania is resolved to contribute actively to a progress of these conferences towards good results, being convinced that their successful conclusion would be of great importance for the disarmament and detente policy in Europe and throughout the world.

The Executive Political Committee also stressed the reed for the socialist countries -- without neglecting the problems of their peace and security -- to concentrate to a greater extent on developing their economic collaboration, on solving with joint effort the problems posed by the progress of building the new system.

Approving entirely the activity carried out by the Romanian delegation at the Budapest meeting, the Executive Political Committee has established that an immediate passage be made to concrete measures and actions so that Romania may make its full contribution to implementing the endorsed disarmament programme, to the general efforts for halting the arms race and removing the danger of war, for strengthening collaboration and detente, understanding and peace among all the nations.

RADU CONVEYS RCP MESSAGE TO TUNISIAN CONGRESS

[Text] Tunis, AGERPRES 20/6/1986 -- In Tunis, during the works of the 12th Congress of the Partie Socialiste Destourien, in behalf of the Romanian Communist Party, of its general secretary, Nicolae Ceausescu, of the whole Romanian people, the leaders of the Parti Socialiste Destourien, the delegates, the whole Tunisian people were conveyed a warm message of salute by the RCP representative at the congress, Constantin Radu, secretary of the CC of the RCP.

The message points to the fine relations of friendship and collaboration between the parties and peoples of the two countries, based on full equality, confidence and mutual esteem, which have expanded and deepened owing to the particular contribution made by fruitful meetings and talks between Presidents Nicolae Ceausescu and Habib Bourguiba. The belief is expressed in the message that these relations will further develop and diversify on multiple planes, in the interests of manysided cooperation between Romania and Tunisia, of the cause of international peace, progress, understanding and cooperation.

The message reiterates the RCP's known position on the cessation of the arms race and a passage to the adoption of a complex programme of general disarmament, centered on nuclear and chemical disarmament and which should also provide for the reduction of all conventional armaments, troops and military spending.

Romania -- the message shows [as received] -- energetically condemned the Israeli air raid on the headquarters of the Palestine Liberation Organization located in Tunisia, the American bombing of the Libyan capital and all shows of force in the world arena which encroach upon states' national sovereignty and run counter to elementary norms of the international law, considering them to have profoundly negative consequences on the situation in various zones and the world over. Romania's firm stand is also reiterated on the cessation of any conflicts and the settlement of all interstate litigious issues only by peaceful means, by negotiations. In this respect, the RCP and Romanian state are for a global solution, which should lead to a durable peace in the Middle East, on the basis of the observance of the Palestinian people's legitimate rights, including its right to independent statehood, of the withdrawal of Israeli troops from the occupied Arab territories, to ensure the independence and sovereignty of all states in the zone.

The RCP, the message also shows, is resolved to actively militate in future too for the strengthening of collaboration and solidarity with communist and worker parties, with socialist and social-democratic parties, with all progressive forces, on the basis of the principles of full equality, of each party's right to work out its own revolutionary strategy and tactics, in keeping with the conditions it works in, thus contributing to the cause of freedom, independence, democracy, social progress, peace and understanding among nations.

POLITIKA COMMENTS ON BUDAPEST PROPOSALS

[Aleksandar Nenadovic commentary "New Proposals From the East"]

[Excerpt] If arms reduction were in proportion to the proposals that are offered in that respect, Europe would be able to sleep more peacefully. There would have to be fewer arms and armies. Unfortunately, things sometimes look exactly the opposite: The more proposals to rein in and reduce military force, the stronger military machines are, particularly here in Europe. Must this remain so? It seems that one can discern some encouragement recently, especially after the Chernobyl nuclear nightmare. If nothing else, there is more desire to move from the stalemate in the debates on armament. It is about time.

The latest Warsaw Pact offer that was announced at the end of the Budapest summit as a firmly coordinated step of all members of the Eastern military alliance is obviously meant to spur new efforts. It seems to have two equally important aims.

The first aim is, to put it one way, political-psychological. It was directed toward the broader, European and world public, but also to partners in Western governments and political leaderships -- possibly particularly to those who remained sceptical toward the Soviet so-called global strategy. One wanted to let them know that despite the prolonged scrapes in American-Soviet relations and even unpleasant uncertainties in preparing the second summit meeting, there is no deviating from the foreign political line imprinted by Mikhail Gorbachev as the Soviet party and political helmsman.

The meaning of the message reissued through Budapest could therefore be summed up as follows: Instead of a military confrontation which keeps up and imposes unbearably high economic and other burdens, one searches for ways to a gradual, even if limited, harmonization and for an expansion of diplomatic communications which will make it easier to combat the inheritied mistrust and a stabilization of the international position of the East.

In other words, one has reached the firm conclusion that it is only in this way, through taking up and maintaining a political negotiating initiative that the warmongering currents, especially strong in Washington, can be combatted more successfully; they are the currents that doggedly strive to impose economic exhaustion through an acceleration and expansion of the arms race and to extort radical political concessions unacceptable to Moscow. At the same time, by opposing confrontation in this way in the name of a common future, one should also forge a parallel, economic path to the developed Western economy, to a greater trade which makes possible an approach to the most modern technology.

It is supposed that these long-term goals rule out any hesitation, regardless of the fate of any particular negotiating initiative. The primacy of the internal development imposes the persistence in searching for external relaxation; the modernization of the labor intensive, low productivity Soviet economy bears no delay. The future external stability both in their own Eastern alliance and as regards the Western rivals depends most on what the growth of the Soviet economy will be.

The initial Western reaction is more polite according to the protocol than it is politically binding. But it is not exclusively negative. It was even said in Brussels that the message from the Budapest summit is "a constructive step to arms control."

This is unusual praise. At the same time, "a serious study" was announced, with somewhat less loud apprehension about the motives of the Eastern allies, which perhaps is not just a tactical change. Will serious negotiations being after all on the control and reduction of armaments in Europe and in other places?

30TH ANNIVERSARY OF MOSCOW STATEMENT HAILED

[By Branko Stosic]

[Text] Belgrade, June 22 (TANJUG) -- The 1956 Moscow Statement establishing relations between the League of Communists of Yugoslavia (LCY) and the Communist Party of the Soviet Union (CPSU) after ties between the two countries were severed following the adoption of the 1948 Cominform resolution -- is one of the two documents which have proved fundamentally important for a steady development of cooperation between Yugoslavia and the Soviet Union.

The other document -- the Belgrade Declaration signed a year earlier, on June 2, 1955 to be exact -- had proclaimed the principles which the two governments would respect both in their mutual relations and relations with third states.

The principles defined in the Belgrade Declaration -- sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity, equality, mutual respect, and non-interference in internal affairs -- were extended to inter-party relations under the Moscow Statement.

On the 30th anniversary of the Belgrade Declaration last year, both Belgrade and Moscow had characterized the document as of historical significance, the same being true of the Moscow Statement.

The Belgrade Declaration and the Moscow Statement exceed in importance the framework of bilateral relations, having in the past thirty years decided not only Yugoslav-Soviet relations, but also the stance of the other Eastern European socialist countries towards Yugoslavia, and having fundamentally influenced the development of relations within the international communist movement.

Twenty years after the signing of the Moscow Statement, the main principles defined in the document were adopted at the Berlin conference of communist and workers' parties of Europe as the basis of inter-party relations and cooperation.

Respect for the principles defined in the Belgrade Declaration and the Moscow Stement and the mutual acknowledgement of the position defining the two countries' different social systems and different paths of socialist development as strictly their own internal affairs have made possible a continued upturn in Yugoslav-Soviet state and party relations, regardless of differences deriving from the two countries' different international positions and different paths of internal development.

Luncheon Toasts

LD202315 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1549 GMT 20 Jun 86

[Text] Belgrade, 20 Jun (TANJUG) -- Raif Dizdarevic, federal secretary of foreign affairs, hosted a luncheon in the Palace of the Federatio in Novi Beograd today in honor of Kamil Hasan Mansur, secretary of the General People's Committee for the People's Bureau of Foreign Liaison of the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriyah.

During the luncheon, which passed in a very cordial and friendly atmosphere, both the host and the guest exchanged toasts.

Having once again wished the Libyan foreign minister a pleasant stay in our country Raif Dizdarevic said that the time in which this visit is taking place is very important, and this makes the Yugoslav-Libyan exchange of views on the state of relations and cooperation between the two friendly countries all the more significant.

Having stressed that at the time when the Libyan Jamahiriyah was in a difficult situation, Yugoslavia rendered full support in its efforts to resist the pressure, and threats of U.S. aggression, Raif Dizdarevic recalled that similar support for the Libyan Jamahiriyah was provided also from the Nonaligned Movement and from the United Nations as well.

In providing support for the preservation of the independent and nonaligned Libyan Jamahiriyah Yugoslavia also defended the principles on which its own freedom and independence rested, Dizdarevic stressed.

Continuing his toast the federal secretary spoke of the support which the Libyan Jamahiriyah has received from the entire Nonaligned Movement. In Dizdarevic's view this was an example of solidarity and unity in denouncing an aggressive act on the Libyan Jamahiriyah.

Dizdarevic also stressed that during the exchange of views during the meeting last night and during the talks this morning a great deal has been said about the activities of the Nonaligned Movement to which both countries are bound with ties of crucial significance. For this reason Yugoslavia and the Libyan Jamahiriyah want the Nonaligned Movement to become even stronger, more efficient and an even broader mainstay for everyone. The preparations for the Eighth Harare summit should move in this direction because this is the wish of the two countries, of all members of the movement, and of other countries in the world.

Ending his toast Raif Dizdarevic said that Yugoslavia and the Libyan Jamahiriyah had for years been developing very useful and meaningful cooperation. The present international situation is the evidence -- said the federal secretary -- that we must go on developing, expanding and consolidating this cooperation both on the political and on the economic plane.

Having expressed his personal satisfaction for having been given an opportunity to visit Yugoslavia Libyan Foreign Minister Hasan Mansur said that the world today faces a difficult situation and that this very fact imposes the need for readinesss and sacrifices.

In this connection he recalled the resolve of the people of the Libyan Jamahiriyah and their readiness to make sacrifices; this was manifest at the time when that country was facing U.S. aggression.

Hasan Mansur then said that the Libyan Jamajiriyah in those very difficult moments took note, and it was a very pleasant to do so, of the solidarity expressed by all the members of the Nonaligned Movement regarding the support for the Libyan Jamahiriyah. That was a pleasant feeling, stressed the Libyan foreign minister. He went on to point out that the world today lives in a time when any small nonaligned country can at any time become a victim of aggression by the great powers.

The secretary for foreign affairs of the Libyan Jamahiriyah, Hasan Mansur, then said that the time has come to think about ways of preventing aggression which can be launched at any time by any country.

I can say that during 1 day's stay here alone and during all the meetings I have had, I confirmed my knowledge that Yugoslavia unswervingly believes in the well-known principles of nonalignment and that she is sincerely searching for realistic solutions for the problems confronting the world.

"My visit to and the talks I have had in Belgrade will not be merely a contribution to the consolidation of our friendship and cooperation but will also provide an example how the nonaligned countries can and should cooperate and operate."

PRISTINA LC COMMITTEE MEETS ON CITIZENS' MARCH

[Text] Pristina, 20 Jun (TANJUG) -- A session of the Presidium of the Pristina LC Municipal Committee was held this evening, at which the political-security situation in the municipality, following today's attempt by a group of citizens of Serbian and Montenengrin nationality to set off for Belgrade, was reviewed.

What happened was that early this morning several hundred local people from Batuse, Bresje, Kosovo Polje and other nearby villages as well as several places in the municipality of Klina set off, initially, in their cars, and tractor-drawn trailers with the intention of reaching Belgrade. Once there, they expressed their dissatisfaction at the slowness in solving the problems that are being created for them by Albanian nationalists and irrendentists. These intentions were stimulated by deliberate rumors which, in the last few days, have been spread by individuals and destructive groups in Kosovo on "the organized movement of citizens of Serbian and Motenegrin nationality" toward Belgrade.

In agreement with the highest federal, republican and provincial organs, these intentions, which are the consequence of the manipulation of people as well, were foiled by political activity and with the assistance of the security organs.

However, several hundred citizens nevertheless came on foot and gathered in Kosovo Polje this morning and attempted to push though toward Pristina, but at the exit to this settlement near the town they were stopped. Municipal, provincial, and republican officials, including Azem Vlasi, the president of the Kosovo LC Municipal Committee, Veljko Markovic, a member of the Socialist Republic of Serbia Presidency, and Petar Gracanin, a member of the Serbain LC Central Committee Presidium, talked with them for a long time and managed to persuade them not to take the road, they had said they would take.

After standing around for a long time on the outskirts of Kosovo Polje, this group of several hundred people returned home peacefully at about 1300. Public order and peace was not undermined in the process.

At today's session of the Kosovo LC Provincial Committee, which, in any case, was due to have met, consideration was given to these events, instead of the previously announced agenda. It was concluded, in a communique from the session stressed, that ideopolitical activity to foil every attemp to destabilize the political-security situation in the province and beyond should continue to be intensified in all areas.

At this evening's session of the Presidium of the Pristina LC Municipal Committee, a more complete political assessment was given of today's events in Kosovo Polje, concerning which, according to reports, there will be an official announcement tomorrow.

More on March

LD211551 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1307 GMT 21 Jun 86

[Text] Pristina, 21 Jun (TANJUG) -- As its expanded session last night, presided over by Dr Ragip Haljilji, the Presidium of the Pristina LC Municipal Committee considered the current political-security situation in Kosovo Polje, Batuse, Bresje and other villages in the municipality from which several hundred inhabitants gathered yesterday with the intention of making an organized journey to Belgrade.

The Presidium assessed, according to the statement from the session, that despite the activities and exceptional efforts being made by organized socialist forces to resolve the numerous problems, and the results achieved, these citizens were taken in by the persistent propaganda and disinformation of various groups and individuals.

The statement from the session in which Azem Vlasi, president of the Kosovo LC Provincial Committee Presidium; Bajram Gasi, member of the Serbian LC Central Committee Presidium; and Djumret Selmani, member of the Kosovo LC Provincial Committee Presidium took part, goes on to say:

"The Presidium of the Pristina LC Municipal Committee has for some time been pointing out and saying that certain destructive and nationalistic circles in Kosovo and outside Kosovo are operating with hostile intentions and are conducting propaganda with the aim of encouraging a number of Serbs and Montenegrins from Kosovo, and in particular from the Pristina municipality, to set off en masse on an organized demonstration to Belgrade. These forces have been acting for some time against our system, and are abusing the situation in Kosovo, especially the problem of the emigration of Serbs and Montenegrins from this province for their own nationalistic ends.

The Pristina LC Municipal Committee Presidium has in the last few days carried out intensive political activity with the aim to explain to the citizens such intentions of specific destructive forces.

The municipal organs and socio-political organizations in Pristina have for some time now been working on resolving the numerous problems correctly pointed out by citizens. Some important results have already been achieved in this respect and there is full unity, readiness and resolve to persist in the action for the stabilization of the situation. In such a situation in shortly before the 13th LCY Congress, nationalist circles, which incite the citizens to similar kinds of excessive behavior, are trying to destabilize the situation in our society, to prevent the action of the organized socialist forces aimed at resolving realistic problems, and to maintain the climate of political tension.

The attempt by these forces to organize a mass departure for Belgrade and instigate excesses was not a successful one. The vast majority of citizens of the Serbian and Montenegrin nationality oppose and disapprove of such behavior and give full support to the efforts of the organized socialist forces aimed at overcoming the problems and difficulties and carrying out established tasks for the stabilization of the situation and the creation of complete security for the citizens and their life in peace, brotherhood, unity and equality.

Residents of these places and citizens do not approve of excessive behavior, particualrly after numerous talks and agreement were organized by all the organs and structures at all levels with the aim of resolving concrete problems at a time when maximum effort is being exerted to stabilize the situation in Kosovo. Such excessive behavior can only further exacerbate the situation as well as effecting the further emigration of Serbs and Montenegrins from Kosovo.

The Presidium notes that the invitation by such forces of the Serbs and Montenegrins to a demonstrative departure or mobilization in order to carry out excesses also means an invitation to emigrate. Objectively speaking, this works to the advantage of irredentists who have this particular desire and who favor the further destablization of the situation and the deepening of the crisis.

The Pristina LC Municipal Committee Presidium expresses its readiness and resolve to undertake effective measures against the organizers of the action and will exert efforts in order to inform the citizens in a correct way on all the events and prevent them being manipulated. Also, the Presidium expects that other environments outside Kosovo will take the necessary measures against those hostile and nationalist groups and individuals who in a joint and organized manner instigate destructive action premeditating broader aims aginast our system of socialist self-management and LCY policy.

The Pristina LC organization and other socio-political organs and organizations will continue their intensive ideo-political activity aimed at resolving the problems and difficulties and realizing the ideo-political differentiation, suppressing anti-socialist tendencies, eliminating the causes and consequences of the process of the emigration of the Serbs and Montenegrins and supressing Albanian and other forms of nationalism.

The LC will exert special efforts in order to realize and develop brotherhood and unity, expand self-management and implement the measures and goals established by the SFRY Presidium and the LCY Central Committee Presidium and also the stands and conclusions of the Presidiums of the Serbian LC Central Committee and the Kosovo LC Provincial Committee," today's statement says.

GRACANIN SPEAKS OF KOSOVO AT VALJEVO MEETING

[Excerpts] The 45th anniversary of the formation of the Valjevo National-Liberaton Partisan Detachment was festively marked at Tito Square in Valjevo. Petar Gracanin, member of the Presidium of the Central Committee of the LC of Serbia, spoke at the celebrations.

Speaking about the situation in Kosovo, Gracanin said that we continue to face a seriously distrubed socioeconomic situation, and especially undermined relations among nationalaities. In the future, Gracanina stressed, our every step, conclusion, and position will be measured by its concrete results, and every question asked will be measured by the answer provided. It is our obligaiton that we return the trust among the nationalities in Kosovo and strengthen it, and we should do it not through petty corrections but through major moves. Above all we must return self-confidence to the Serbs and Montenegrins, as well as other peoples and nationalities, and their feeling of security and the possibility of a common like in Kosovo. We must stop emigration with all the political, economic, and administrative means available.

The counterrevolutionary activities of Albanian nationalism and separatism, and the protagonists of the Serbian nationalism and of all other forms of nationalism must be suppressed, and we must remove from self-managing and state organs all those who behave bureaucratically and illegally. Every man in Kosovo, in Serbia, and in Yugoslavia, regardless of his national affiliation, must enjoy all his freedoms and rights and must have his security and equality guaranteed. There is no socialism and no equal democratic relations among nationalities, and no brotherhood and unity without, Petar Gracanin said at the celebrations of the 45th anniversary of the formation of the Valjevo Partisan Detachment.

SLOVENE LC PRESIDIUM DISCUSSES ELECTIONS

[J. Pjevic report on the session of the Central Committee of the LC of Slovenia]

[Excerpts] Ljubljana, 9 Jun -- The first, more informative than analytic assessment of the activity of LC organs, organizations, and members in preparing and carrying out delegate elections reads as follows: Through its activity, the LC has contributed to the important step that was made in the democratization of elections, especially at the level of nomination of candidates, which is also confirmed by the mass participation of working people and citizens in the elections.

However, this "step," although it should not be undervalued, does not fully satisfy anyone, especially not members of the LC, their organizations, and leaderships.

Apart from passiveness and the action conducted in a limited way, there was also an "objective" difficulty which much incited improvisations, formalism, and inefficiency. The problem lay in the fact that preparations for delegate elections and elections themselves coincide with elections in sociopolitical organizations and with preparations for those organizations' congresses. Citizens "had enough of" too many "actions," and communists and other activities were overloaded and pressed for time.

Besides, LC membership and organizations have not been sufficiently active and resolute in political and democratic confrontation with various deformations, occurrences of ideological pluralism, unacceptable views and demands, etc.

Some negative consequences and deformations have also been registered in connection with open lists [containing more candidates than are to be elected]. Almost as a rule, the candidates at the end of the list were not elected, something which disturbed the established structure of candidates. It happened in some cases that delegates with names that do not sound Slovene were not elected or received the least votes.

The shortcomings and imperfections in the election procedure were used by some people as evidence that not only the election system, but the entire political system are undemocratic, and the communists did not oppose with sufficient resolution and arguments such "propagandists" or the demands for a return to political representation.

In the assessment of Dr Ciril Ribicic, the election practice rejected many a priori and negativists approaches which were characteristic for the period and during the nomination procedure.

The approach which negate the possibility of a democratization of the nomination and election processes while the leading role of the LC is preserved have been rejected; these approaches threat the elections as a means of manipulation of the working masses by the leading bureaucratic-statist structure. The same applies to the demoralizing predictions that participation will be meager, that it will be impossible to get the agreement of the candidates proposed for the numerous delegate functions, and that this year's election spring will be boring, uninteresting, and without conflict.

To Joze Smole's remark that some people think that the LC should not publicly fight for the candidates who fulfill the criteria and enjoy the LC confidence, calling this pressure and "interference," chairman Milan Kucan replied that there can be no dilemma here, but the question arises how and in which way the LC should do it. Kucan believes that the key question is whether people have enough opportunity to effectively influence specific cadre solutions; many signs show that they do not, or rather that the higher the level of cadres, the lower the influence, which does not apply to the cadre policy alone but to other questions. A shortage of democracy at the basic levels cannot be made good by democracy at higher levels, where many things should be further democratized, too.

SLOVENE SAWP ON SECURITY, PEACE, ECOLOGY GROUPS

["J.P." report]

[Excerpts] Ljubljana, 10 Jun -- The assessment of the political security situation in the republic, made at a session of the Republican Conference Presidium of the SAWP of Slovenia, ranges between the statement that it is deteriorating despite certain positive indicators (the general crime rate is holding steady, a mild decrease of political crimes, and a reduction of juvenile delinquency) and the statement that the security situation is complicated and that in some sectors it is even aggravating.

It was judged as a particularly positive fact that despite the crisis situation, democratization in society is getting deeper, and one should exert onself even more and with more determination.

This statement and orientation are essential because of the increasingly numerous cases of some delicate problems and questions being resolved outside the system, as it is said; among other things, this is a consequence of the shortcomings in the functioning of the political systems' institutions as well as of the opportunist behavior of the responsible officials and organs in such situations. Almost as a rule, solutions are found quickly to demands made by some groups of workers, and lately even of students, during so-called work stoppages, forced meetings, and boycotts.

As several participants at the session (Miha Ravnik, Andrej Marinc, Zoran Polic, and others) pointed out, it is necessary in all such cases not only to determine and to eliminate the causes and occasions, but also to increase responsibility fully, so as to include cadre changes.

According to Slavko Sorsak, president of the Council for All-People's Defense and Social Self-Protection, the activities of ecological groups express a justified care and concern for the quality of life today and tomorrow, and they constitute one of the new and topical forms of young people's activities.

This is good, but it causes concern that these groups or parts of them sometimes take over the content and methods of similar movements in the West, attempt to transplant them uncritically to our region, and politicises the ecological problems outside the SAWP and sometimes even outside the institutions of the political system. A similar thing is happening with the peace movements which may constitute an element in democratizing our system and expanding the pluralism of interests, but they may do it only under the condition that they respect the democratically adopted norms of political and social activities. In this light one should oppose abuses of democracy and all attempts to offer, under the cloak of peace movements, ideas that cannot be accepted uncritically. However, the leaderships of the sociopolitical organizations must frequently react to such unacceptable occurrences and conduct with delay, and in a blanket and forum-like manner.

PETITIONS SIGNED AGAINST NEW NUCLEAR POWER PLANT

LD191536 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1155 GMT 19 Jun 86

["Yugoslav Public Opposes Nuclear Power Plants" -- TANJUG headline]

[Summary] Belgrade, 19 Jun (TANJUG) -- In the past couple of months the SFRY Presidency, the Yugoslav Assembly, and the Federal Executive Council have received over 30 petitions with several thousand signatures, asking that these bodies prevent the construction of nuclear power plants in Yugoslavia and suggesting that a national referendum should be held on this issue. According to the Commission for Petitions and Complaints of the SFRY Assembly, such petitions were received even before the Chernobyl disaster.

Petitions are mostly sent by young people who write that they have enough problems with unemployment and debts and that they do not want a new Hiroshima. Among older petitioners there are mostly engineers and scientific and research workers.

At a session held today members of the Commission for Petitions and Complaints judged as justified the demand to democratize the discussion on nuclear power plants in the country and not to underestimate anybody's opinion, and to give support to the demand that our country should orientate itself to the maximum toward using available energy resources.

[Text] Baghdad, 21 Jun (TANJUG) -- At today's annual assembly of the joint Yugoslav economic mission in Iraq it was stressed that among the developing countries Iraq was one of the most important economic partners of Yugoslavia.

At the assembly held in Baghdad, our correspondent reports, a decision was passed on the transformation of this mission into a mission of the Yugoslav Chamber of Economy. It was also noted that the volume of economic cooperation had been reduced last year and at the beginning of this one. This was brought about by a reduction in investment projects in Iraq. One of the problems mentioned was Iraq's postponing payment for some projects, but the mixed committee for economic cooperation between the two countries was said to have already adopted [word indistinct] for the resolving of this problem.

CONSULATE GENERAL IN STUTTGART ATTACKED

LD221546 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1359 GMT 22 Jun 86

[Text] Bonn, 22 June (TANJUG) -- A terrorist attack was carried out on the SFRY Consulate General in Stuttgart at about 1:00 an last night [2300 GMT 21 June]. Two Molotov cocktails were thrown into the consulate building.

Owing to the quick and calm reactions of a house-attendant as well as a speedy intervention of the police and firemen, who arrived on the scene in under 5 minutes, the resulting fire was limited and major material damage was prevented.

It is not yet known who committed this malicious act. The police are still looking for the culprits, who obviously should be searched for in the ranks of the anti-Yugoslav terrorist emigres who have recently been making threats against Yugoslav missions and citizens in the FRG.

TURKEY IMPLEMENTS 'HAZARDOUS POLICY' OF COOPERATION

AU191025 Sofia NARODINA ARMIYA in Bulgarian 13 Jun 86 p 4

[Georgi Atansov military-political commentary: "Turkey -- On the Dangerous Path of a Hazardous Game"]

[Excerpts] Common borders with the Soviet Union and Bulgaria, control over the Bosphorus and the Dardanelles, proximity to the oil-rich Persian Gulf areas and to the states involved in the Arab-Israeli conflict and the Iran-Iraq war -- these are all things the United States and NATO consider sufficiently "convincing" arguments for transforming Turkish territory into a "unique, strategic launching platform."

In February 1986 U.S. Defense Secretary Weinberger declared: "Turkey, which has land and sea borders with the USSR and Bulgaria, takes a position of crucial importance along the path of the Soviet Union in the Mediterranean and in the forefront of NATO's southern flank." Acting in the spirit of its neoglobalist policy, threatening Turkey by all means with the myth of the "Soviet threat," U.S. imperialism is striving to impose its adventurous policy on this country and to transform its territory into a "stepping stone" for the implementation of its aggressive plans.

The U.S. military-political leadership openly admits that it is precisely this circumstance that determines the great attention devoted to this particular NATO partner.

Using more than 60 military bases and projects on Turkish territory in the interest of its armed forces and with considerable amounts of nuclear ammunition deployed on the Turkish territory, the Pentagon persistently strives to involve this country in its aggressive plans, including the "star wars" program.

The Pentagon is also trying with ever growing perseverance to achieve an expansion of the functions of its intelligence stations and centers in the areas bordering the Soviet Union. Bulgaria, and Syrian territory.

Although the negotiations of the U.S. emisarries with the Turkish state leaders are taking place in strict secrecy, some things are becoming known, thanks to publications in the foreign press.

Regardless of the obvious danger presented by a submission to the adventurous U.S. policy, the Turkish military-political leadership is inclined to make new concessions to the Pentagon.

Facts show that in the views of certain, individual representatives of the Turkish leadership, a line of further intensifying military-political links with Washington is unmistakably becoming more and more evident. The need to modernize the "nuclear umbrella" surrounding Turkey and to expand the presence of U.S. troops in the country, which allegedly would not only strengthen NATO's southern flank but would be likely to increase the country's security, is pointed out.

We ask: Security against whom? Is it not true that the political document on the principles of good-neighborly relations and friendly cooperation, signed between the USSR and Turkey in 1978, confirmed the two sides' resolve to observe the principle on the mutual agreement not to grant the two countries' territories to anyone who intends to adopt aggressive and subversive actions against third countries?

As for the Turkish leaders, this agreement presuomably represents only a formal document for them. In speaking to journalists in Brussels, in December 1985. Z. Yazuzturk, minister of national defense of Turkey, reportedly declared that "in case of war or in a situation of crisis Turkey will support the U.S. troops and will provide them with the necessary assistance from the rear." In this connection Ankara cannot fail to understand that Washington's idea of threatening third countries with nuclear war from foreign territories may cause great damage to the interests and the security of Turkey.

The United States is trying by all means to assign the role of a Pentagon collaborator to Turkey in implementing its aggressive plans. As a result of all this, Turkey today has the biggest armed forces among all European NATO members and the greatest rate of increase in military expenditures. Turkey takes third place as regards the amount of Washington's military and (after Israel and Egypt). The U.S. aircraft stationed in Turkey and equipped with nuclear warheads have the same "status" as the U.S. "first strike" misssiles deployed in Western Europe.

The involvement of Turkey in the orbit of the large-scale aggressive preparations of the United States and NATO directed against the socialist states and the Middle East countries, involves a serious threat to the cause of peace in this explosive area of the world. The rulers in Ankara should think about the possible consequences of this hazardous policy.

ZHIVKOV, ATANASOV LETTER TO NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

AU231528 Sofia RABOTNICHESKO DELO in Bulgarian 19 Jun 86 pp 1, 2

["Letter From the Chairman of the State Council and the Chairman of the Council and Government" -- read at the closing meeting of the first session of the Ninth National Assembly on 18 June]

[Text] Comrade Chairman: We beg you to read the following letter to the Ninth National Assembly:

Esteemed Comrade National Assembly deputies: We would like, above all, to express our most sincere gratitude to you for the great honor accorded to us by being elected chairman of the State Council and chairman of the Council of Ministers of the People's Republic of Bulgaria. We express our own gratitude and the gratitude of all members of the State Council of Ministers for the great confidence and for the unanimity with which you voted for us.

On our own behalf and on behalf of the members of the State Council and Council of Ministers, we declare that we will continue to be guided by the BCP Program on the construction of a developed socialist society in our country, by the plans of the 13th BCP Congress, and we declare that we will unrelentingly conduct the Leninist general line of our party.

There is no loftier and no more high-minded duty for us than the task of working for the well-being and happiness of the Bulgarian people, for the triumph of the communist ideals.

The State Council and the Council of Ministers will observe the Constitution -- which is the basic law of our country -- and will be guided by the decisions of the supreme organ of power in our country, the National Assembly, which will implement the Bulgarian people's will.

Comrade National Assembly deputies: The 13th BCP Congress, which was a brilliant manifestation of the ideological-political unity and cohesion of our people, rallied around the party policy, mapped out the paths and assigned the tasks that ensure a further construction and perfection of socialist society in our country. The congress worked out the strategy for accelerating the speed of our economic development and for attaining a qualitatively new growth. The implementation of this strategic task demands profound changes for which history has granted us only a short time.

The results of the elections proved that our people support the congress decisions and are ready to work for their practical implementation.

The tasks which we assign to ourselves demand an optimal utilization of all intensive factors. Our work is focused on the struggle to accomplish a scientific-technical revolution, in view of which the drastic enhancement of the role of science for the technological innovation of production will be further expanded. This includes the perfection of the struggle policy in our national economic sector.

In assessing the activity of objective social laws, we shall utilize more fully the economic and social levers for the establishment of conditions guaranteeing lasting incentives for the prompt and constant increase of labor productivity, for high quality and efficiency in all activities, for a world standard and high competitiveness on international markets, for an optimal use of the productive and cadre potential existing in our country, which is tremendous compared to our country's size.

New mutual relations between the state as owner and the workers collective as manager of socialist property will be asserted and the self-management of the organizations will consolidated so that they may truly become producers of goods.

The implementation of our social policy will ensure conditions for the satisfaction of the material, social, and intellectual needs of the people, in confromity with their purchasing power, for the consolidation of the vital strength of the nation, for a more full self-implementation of the human factor as a moving force our all-around progress, for the perfection of social justice on the basis of the principle of distribution according to the quantity and quality of labor.

Socialist democracy will be further developed through the expansion of basic democracy, through an ever increasing drawing together between legislative and executive power. The independent, creative ability of every collective and every individual will be increasingly promoted. Measures will be adopted for the development of the settlement systems and terroritial units, for enhancing the role and significance of the people's councils' and mayors' offices.

Conditions will be established for the reorganization of the approach style, and methods of work; for the organization of a strict order and discipline in all places and in all activities; for an irreconcilable struggle against shortcomings and negative phenomena; for a further consolidation of the socialist way of life.

Comrade National Assembly deputies: Being aware of their responsibility to the people, to the cause of socialism and peace, the State Council and the Council of Ministers of the People's Republic of Bulgaria will pursue their foreign policy, aimed at detente, good-neighborly relations, and cooperation with all states in Balkans, in Europe, and in the world, for the elimination of th danger of thermonuclear disaster.

The policy of fraternal unity of action, of comprehensive cooperaton and drawing closer together with the Soviet Union, continues to be the cornerstone of our country's foreign policy. The decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress and of the 13th BCP Congress open new opportunities for the enhancement of this process to a new qualitative level.

We will expand and enrich our friendship and cooperation with all fraternal, socialist countries. We consider it our national and fraternal, socialist countries. We consider it our national and international duty to continue to contribute to consolidating the defensive power of the Warsaw Pact Organization, to enhancing the role of CEMA.

Our chief goal in relations with the Balkan states will continue to be the preservation of peace, as well as the consolidation, maintenance, and development of cooperation and good-neighborly relations aimed at the transformation of the Balkans into a zone free from nuclear and chemical weapons. We will continue to develop cooperation with the developing countries by devoting particular attention to our relations with countries that follow the path of socialist orientation. We will continue to strive in the future for an extensive and broad political dialogue, for a mutually advantageous economic and cultural cooperation with the developed capitalist states, based on equal rights.

The People's Republic of Bulgaria and the Bulgarian people wholeheartedly support the new Soviet proposals and the appeal of the Warsaw Pact to NATO, to all European countries for reduction of armed forces and conventional weapons in Europe. These initiatives are a manifestation of a new political approach, of political realism, of a sensible alternative to the course of tension, confrontation, and arms race which is conducted by the militarist U.S. circles and is embodied in their policy of neoglobalism.

Our state will continue to contribute to the cohesion of all progressive and peace-loving countries and forces in the world; it will actively participate inthe activities of th United Nations, of UNESCO and of other international organizations, it will contribute to enhancing the role of these organizations in the consolidation of peace and security, in settling regional conflicts, and in solving the global problems that mankind is facing. We are convinced, that under the leadership of the BCP our people and all Communists, United Agrarians, and nonparty people will successfully implement the great tasks which we are assigning to ourselves in building a mature socialist society.

On behalf of the State Council and the Council of Ministers, we declare to the Ninth National Assembly and to the entire people that we will devote all our efforts, knowledge, and experience to the prosperity of our beloved motherland -- the People's Republic of Bulgaria!

Signed: Todor Zhivkov, chairman of the State Council of the People's Republic of Bulgaria

Signed: Georgi Atanasov, chairman of the Council of Ministers of the People's Republic of Bulgaria

BILAK DELIVERS SPEECH AT FOREIGN POLICY SEMINAR

LD232024 Prague Domestic Service in Czech 1330 GMT 23 Jun 86

[Text] A seminar on the implementation of the conclusion of the 17th CPCZ Congress in foreign policy began today at the Federal Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Present at the seminar are Vasil Bilak and Milos Jakes, members of the Presidium and secretaries of the CPCZ Central Committee; Jan Fojtik, candidate member of the Presidium and secretary of the CPCZ Central Committeep Josef Havlin and Jindrich Polednik, secretaries of the CPCZ Central Committee; Jaromir Obzina, federal deputy premier; Michal Stefanak, director of a department of the CPCZ Central Committee; Bohuslav Chnoupek, ministe of foreign affairs; Bohumil Urban, minister of foreign trade; and other officials.

Comrade Vasil Bilak began the seminar with an extensive speech. He dealt mainly with the conclusions of the 17th CPCZ Congress and the congresses of other fraternal parties, above all the 27th CPSU Congress. He stressed that these congresses pointed out the enormous strength of socialism and its potential for tackling the topical issues of the development of our society much more promptly and comprehensively. He directed the work of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the representative bodies, and all those working abroad to consistently implement the tasks stemming from the conclusions of the 17th CPCZ Congress.

Vasil Bilak analyzed the current international situatin and the reasons for heightened tension in the world. In this context he singled out in particular the policy of the most reactionary imperialist circles, especially U.S. imperialism, and its attempts to use the arms race to gain military and strategic superiority over socialism. He also condemned the U.S. policy of neoglobalism, which is whipping up conflicts and raising tension in various parts of the world. This adventuristicd policy of orientation on militarism, aggression, and war, he stated, is meeting growing resistance throughout the world. New forces are forming on the world stage which, regardless of their social and ideological affiliation, are becoming objectively significant allies of world socialism, the communist and working-class movement, and the peoples of the liberated countries, emphasized Vasil Bilak.

Vasil Bilak said that the CSSR's comprehensive participation in the common work of the socialist countries is a vitally important factor. Our aim is to contribute to even greater cohesion and unity among the socialist community and to involve ourselves actively in raising the effectiveness and improving cooperation between the fraternal countries to coordinate their approach in all spheres.

Vasil Bilak emphasized that CSSR foreign policy, in the light of the conclusions of the 17th CPCZ Congress, must contribute even more effectively to producing peaceful conditions and to achieving social progress in the world.

UPCOMING 'PROVOCATIVE' NATO EXERCISES IN UK NOTED

LD212034 Prague Domestic Service in Czech 1630 GMT 21 Jun 86

[Text] In the next few weeks, extensive areas of northern England will become the stage for large NATO maneuvers. Zdenek Vilimek, our permanent London correspondent reports:

This time they are supposed to be exceptionally realistic exercises. The northern English military airports are going to be changed so that they look exactly like airports in the Soviet Union. Similarly, the antiaircraft defenses around the bases are supposed to resemble Soviet defenses as much as possible. The attack bombing units of the U.S., French, Canadian, Belgian, West German, and British air forces will attack these bases in Otterburn, Northumberland, and Spadeadam. THE GUARDIAN wrote, the leadership of the British Air Forces, headed by Vice Marshall John Walker, is trying with all its power to ensure that the conditions are as close as possible to those in real war. That is why the regulations and rules for the speed and altitude of aircraft will be changed from those used in regular exercises. Real bombs without explosive content will be used during the attacks. The electronic defense systems in airports are intended to resemble Soviet systems as much as possible. These provocative military preparations, which clearly show NATO's plans and goals, are intended to last until 8 August.

[CTK report: "On the Development of Nuclear Power Engineering in the CSSR"]

[Text] Prague (CTK) -- Nuclear power engineering is to deliver this year roughly 17 billion kwh, which is close to one-fifth of the total electric energy generation in the CSSR. The fulfillment of that task is made possible by the reliable performance of the 6 blocks operating thus far in Jaslovske Bohunice and Dukovany.

Main attention in the construction of nuclear facilities is now being concentrated on the Dukovany nuclear power plant, whose third block is to be put into operation in the last month of this year, and the last one, the fourth, in July 1987. Also, the construction of the nuclear energy facility in Mochovce, whose first block is to be completed in 1989, is entering the decisive phase. Work also continues on our first nuclear power plant having a 1,000-mw reactor in Temelin, south Bohemia.

This came to light at a press conference on the development of nuclear power engineering in Czechoslovakia, held by Hozef Keller, CSSR deputy minister of fuels and power, and other leading experts, in Prague on Tuesday [10 June]. The activity of the State Supervision of Nuclear Safety attached to the Czechoslovak Commission for Nuclear Safety attached to the Czechslovak Commission for Nuclear Energy, which ensures the safe operation of our nuclear power engineering facilities, was discussed by its Chief Inspector Jiri Beranek, who stressed, in particular, the systematic nature of the supervision and its powers.

MLADA FRONTA ON RAISING IMPORTANCE OF EXPORTS

AU161310 Prague MLADA FRONTA in Czech 11 Jun 86 p 4

[Michal Voracek article: "Raising the Effectiveness of Our Exports" -- uppercase passages published in boldface]

[Excerpts] OF LATE, REALLY GREAT CHANGES HAVE OCCURRED IN THE WORLD ECONOMY. THE STRAIN BETWEEN THE CONSUMPTION OF MINERAL RESOURCES AND THEIR AVAILABILITY HAS BECOME AGGRAVATED. MINERAL, ESPECIALLY ENERGY-RELATED RESOURCES CAN BE OBTAINED ON THE INTERNATIONAL MARKETS ONLY WITH DIFFICULTY. THE PRICES OF RAW MATERIALS ROSE STEEPLY IN THE MID-SEVENTIES, WHICH CHANGED THE PROPORTION BETWEEN PRICES OF RAW MATERIALS AND FINISHED PRODUCTS. A GRADUAL LEVELING OF THE PROPORTION HAS BEGUN. AN EXAMPLE IS THE CURRENT GLOBAL DROP IN THE PRICE OF CRUDE OIL FROM THE USSR AT A PRICE WHICH IS CALCULATED FROM THE AVERAGE OF THE SO-CALLED NET WORLD PRICES OVER THE PAST 5 YEARS. THUS, THE PRICE RISE HIT US LATER, BUT THE PRODUCTS MANUFACTURED FROM CRUDE OIL WHICH WE EXPORT TODAY WE MUST SELL CHEAPLY ON THE WORLD MARKETS OR, AS AT THE MOMENT, SOMETIMES WE DO NOT EVEN SELL THEM.

The mechanism of world economic relations is subject to great pressure. Numerous types of goods, some of which are Czechoslovak export items, had been since the mid-seventies, subject to protectionist measures. The differences in the situation of individual states have become aggravated. The situation of the developing countries is critical. One of the signs of the difficult situation of the majority of the developing countries is the drop in their purchasing power and the difficulties they have in servicing their fiscal commitments. Czechoslovakia, as an exporter to that area, feels it, too.

ONE OF THE EXCEPTIONALLY IMPORTANT FACTS AT THE BEGINNING OF THE EIGHTH 5-YEAR PLAN IS THAT THE OVERALL FOREIGN CURRENCY SITUATION OF OUR STATE IS POSITIVE VIS-A-VIS THE SOCIALIST STATES, AND ROUGHLY BALANCED VIS-A-VIS THE NONSOCIALIST STATES. DESPITE THIS, PROBLEMS IN THAT SPHERE CANNOT BE REGARDED AS RESOLVED SINCE THE QUALITY OF OUR ASSETS VIS-A-VIS THE NONSOCIALIST STATES DIFFERS CONSIDERABLY FROM THE QUALITY OF OUR LIABILITIES. WHEREAS THE DECISIVE PORTION OF OUR ASSETS ARE LONG-TERM CREDITS TO DEVELOPING COUNTRIES, THE CSSR COMMITMENTS ARE MOSTLY MEDIUM- AND SHORT-TERM CREDITS IN FREELY CONVERTIBLE CURRENCIES. THUS, "IN TERMS OF TIME, REPAYMENTS ARE DUE AHEAD OF THE CLAIMS' DUE DATE." HOWEVER, THE MANNER IN WHICH THE MARKED IMPROVEMENT OF THE FOREIGN CURRENCY SITUATION WAS ACHIEVED IN THE SEVENTH 5-YEAR PLAN IS, IN ITS SUBSTANCE, UNREPEATABLE. THUS, THE BASIC OBJECTIVES IN INTERNAL RELATIONS, DETERMINED BY THE 16TH CONGRESS, COULD BE FULFILLED, BUT NOT ALWAYS IN THE MANNER PLANNED.

The effectiveness of the internal economic relations in the CSSR has been markedly decreasing since the seventies. Whereas in the 1971-84 period import prices rose by 176.8 percent, export prices rose by only 84.3 percent. That means that the exchange ratio dropped to 66.6 percent in that period. In 1984, we had to export 1.5 physical units for 1 physical unit of imports. At the same time, in the 1971-84 period the CSSR imported goods at valid prices in those years for 932 billion parity korunas. Had the prices of 1970 remained valid, that volume would have "cost" only 527 billion korunas. Thus the increase in the prices of imports constituted 405 billion korunas. By increasing export prices, we have gained only 294 billion korunas more. The result is a loss of 111 parity korunas, all expenses prepaid at the border of the delivering date. This constitutes, after converting that sum into the average rate of exchange applicable in that period, about 18.5 billion dollars. This price difference bad to be made up by increased "physical" exports, that is, by shifting resources "within" the economy. The new task in internal economic relations is to increase revenues from services, especially from foreign tourism, spas, and licenses. In other words, economic services having to do with foreign countries, in our economy do not thus far have a position that would correspond to their development. For example, the export of services in the CSSR is less that 100 dollars per capita, whereas, for example, in Austria this indicator is about 15 times higher, and the same applies to Belgium or Switzerland.

[Text] Berlin, 23 Jun (ADN) -- The welcome development of relations between their countries, especially since the state visit of Erich Honecker to Japan in 1981, was praised by GDR Foreign Minister Oskar Fischer and the Japanese state secretary for culture, Shumon Miura. During a meeting on Monday they called for its steady development. In this, the further extension of cultural exchanges is of great weight. Oskar Fischer briefed the Japanese politician on the GDR foreign policy and emphasized that it is doing everything in its power to help safeguard peace and to halt the arms race on earth and prevent its extension to space. He explained the constructive proposals for the safeguarding of peace and disarmament submitted jointly by the GDR and its allies at the Budapest meeting.

Shuman Miura praised the successful development of the GDR and her active work for peace and international cooperation.

On the same day Minister of Culture Dr Hans-Joachim Hoffmann, received the guest for an extensive exchange of views. The two sides discussed the development of cultural relations and paid tribute to the positive results in cultural cooperation.

Received by Stoph

[Text] Berlin, 23 Jun (ADN) -- The cultural cooperation between the GDR and Japan is part of the overall development of fruitful, mutually beneficial relations of the two countries. At the same time, growing importance is attached to them for international detente and cooperation between states with differing social systems. This was emphasized by GDR Prime Minister Willi Stoph on Monday during a meeting with Shumon Miura, the Japanese state secretary for culture.

State Secretary Miura linked his explanations concerning the care and promotion of the arts and culture to the observation that the preservation and safegurading of peace has become the common responsibility of all countries. He expressed his conviction that his stay in the GDR and information and knowledge gathered here will serve the further development of the cultural relations between the two countries.

DEFENCE MINISTER KESSLER ASSESSES USSR VISIT

AU120922 East Berlin HORIZONT in German No 6 1986 p 3

[Interview given by Army General Heinz Kessler, SED Central Committee Politburo member and GDR minister of national defense; date and place not given]

[Excerpts] HORIZONT: The recent CPSU and SED Congresses affirmed the comradeship-in-arms between the armies of both countries.

How did your visit [to the USSR from 5 to 8 May] help to develop further these fraternal relations and to deepend cooperation in order to fulfill the task set by the CPSU and the SED to reliably protect socialism and preserve peace?

Heinz Kessler: It may have been a coincidence that our visit to the Soviet Union ended on 8 May, the day of liberation, but it was not coincidence that on the morning of this day all Soviet comrades most cordially congratulated us on our holiday, the escort officers and the waitresses in the guesthouse as well as Marshal of the Soviet Union Kulikov, commander in chief of the Joint Armed Forces, and Comrade Dobrik, first secretary of the Lvov Oblast party committee of the Communist Party of the Ukraine.

Indeed, from the landing at Sheremetyevo to the take-off in Lvov, our visit was marked by the friendly, even cordial relations of the decades of socialist alliance in class and arms between the Soviet Union and the GDR, between the Soviet Army and the National People's Army [NVA]. Particularly during these weeks shortly after the 27th CPSU and the 11th SED Congresses the consultations in the Ministry of Defense and the lively exchange of experiences with the troops, staffs, enterprises, and scientific institutions of the USSR served to deepen our PVPQ and military cooperation, the coordinated development of the fighting strength and combat readiness of the armies of the Warsaw Pact, and the utilization of the recent findings of science and technology for equipping and training the NVA. The visit served the fulfillment of the principled resolutions of our two fraternal parties to make peace even more secure by universally strengthening socialism, to deny imperialism any military superiority, and to preserve the strategic balance.

HORIZONT: During your official friendship visit in the Soviet Union, you were received by the Soviet head of state Andrey Gromyko on the very first day of your visit. What can you tell us about your talks?

Heinz Kessler: The talk took place in an extraordinarily open and cordial atmosphere. The chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet and CPSU Central Committee Politburo member showed himself to be excellently imformed about international developments and also about the 11th SED Congress and the GDR's foreign policy, and he gave a brief but thorough analysis of the foreign political strategy of the United States and the imperialist military blocs, in particular concerning the American theory and practice of "neoglobalism."

Andrey Gromyko stated that we have every reason to express our satisfaction concerning both the relations between the leaderships of our parties and those between Comrades Erich Honecker and Mikhial Gorbachev personally. As is known, both general secretaries met in Berlin for thorough talks during the 11th party congress. Mikhail Gorbachev reported on this in great detail in the CPSU Central Committee Politburo.

I stated that the historic speech of Mikhail Gorbachev in the GDR capital is of particular importance for us and that it has given us important orientations. The peace proposals of the CPSU, the statements by Comrade Gorbachev, and his new disarmament proposals met with a great response from our people. They stimulated many new activities and initiatives in the struggle for peace and to strengthen socialism in the GDR.

The 11th SED Congress adopted a clear and unequivocal position on the questions of the struggle for peace, thoroughly analyzed the policy of NATO, and concluded that all possibilities must be utilized to strengthen peace forces throughout the world. Our party unanimously supports the peace initiative and disarmament proposals of the USSR and has made them its fighting program.

The 11th party congress has set clear tasks for us Communists in the ranks of the GDR Armed Forces: To further improve the work of the NVA with the aim of intensifying political and combat training in order to guarantee higher combat readiness. We will further develop and strengthen the comradeship-in-arms with the fraternal armies of the Warsaw Pact. For many years close comradely cooperation has linked us with the Group of Soviet Forces on the territory of the GDR. Our party and people regard the members of the Group of Soviet Forces on GDR soil as their friends who are fulfilling a responsible work to serve the safeguarding of peace. They regard the Soviet soldiers as their brothers and class comrdes who contribute decisively to ensuring that the GDR working people can successfully build socialism in peace.

The general sense of Andrey Gromyko's answer was: Like you, we are of the opinion that our Armed Forces, the armies of the Warsaw Pact states are a firm bulwark in the struggle for peace in Europe and throughout the world. We want nothing from no one. We do not make any demands on other countries. We do not want to force socialism on anyone. We need only friendship with other peoples and peace. This was particularly demonstrated by the 27th CPSU Congress. It is not one of our habits to change friends. Our closest friends are those who struggle together with us for peace and who oppose those who want to disturb this peace. In conclusion Andrey Gromyko said: "We must never lose sight of the close cooperation between our armies. I ask you, also on behalf of Mikhail Gorbachev, to convey cordial greetings to Erich Honecker. I have met with him very often. Every meeting was very instructive to me."

COMMENTARY ON ROLE OF U.S. ARMAMENT INDUSTRY

AU192020 East Berlin NEUES DEUTSCHLAND in German 14-15 Jun 86 p 10

[Article by Juergen Kuczynski: "The Coalition of Reason"]

[Text] On 11 June, the Warsaw Pact states, "aware of the responsibility to their people and mankind for the fate of peace in Europe and throughout the world" issued an "appeal to the NATO states, to all European countries, to reduce the armed forces and conventional armaments in Europe." The simulatenously published communique of the meeting of the Political Consultative Committee of the Warsaw Pact states, referring to the circumstances under which the appeal was issued, states: "The participants in the meeting expressed their serious concern about the tense situation that has developed in the world."

At the 11th party congress, Comrade Erich Honecker stressed, we regard the preservation of peace as the most important task," and in accordance with that our party and state leadership aims at a "coalition of reason" on a global scale to safeguard peace for the sake of mankind's survival. Above all, a unique combination of technical progress and social regress, that is, the use of nuclear power as a destructive force for war instead of as a productive force for peace, and the resulting possibility of annihilating mankind on the one hand and the struggle against his development on the other hand, have led to a situation which Comrade Mikhail Gorbachev in his address at the 27th CPSU Congress described as follows:

"The real dialectics of the present development lies in linking the competition, the contest of the two systems with the increasing tendency for an interdependence of the states of the world community. Especially in this way -- through the struggle of contrasts, agiainst difficulties, in a, so-to-speak, tentative way -- a world develops which is marked by contradictions but which is coherent regarding interdependencies and marked by integrity in many things."

The objective fact of the "interdependencies," the development of a "world market by integrity in many things," forms the basis of the possibility of a coalition of reason of the two social systems. The catalyst of this development is undoubtedly the possibility of using and the necessity of destroying nuclear power as a destructive force. For this destructive force threatens what the great philosopher Fichte called "The first human right" -- the right to life, throughout the world.

This "real dialectic of the present development" causes many questions, indeed! For it is not only a question of a big movement of the working masses throughout the world. The slogan is not only: Proletarians of All Countries! Not Only: Suppressed People All Over the World: Not Only: Progressive People everywhere, Unite! But can the reason of the monopolies that rule so many states be the same reason as that of the ruling workers class in the countries of socialism?

Maybe it is useful to go back nearly a century in the history of the workers movement to answer the question and several others arising in this context. In 1899 Lenin wrote the draft of a program of the Russian social democrats. In this he used the following statements: "For from the view point of the basic ideas of Marxism, the interests of social developments are above the interests of the proletariat" (WORKS, Volume 4 page 230).

This matter-of-factness is great, and so is the realism of insight and formulation! Proletarian, workers interests are thus to be understood as interests directly and immediately concerning the workers.

Of course, the workers also have a universal interest in creating a progressive society, and after the revolution they are the leading class in its contributino. The fact that they then must also compromise with other classes and strata that are not in line with their specific workers interest has indeed been proven by history. The workers class not only struggles for its workers interests, but also for the interests of all working people, for a new society of all working people. It is the hegemony of the history of modern times.

But if the whole of mankind is threatened, then the coalition of reason should comprise all classes and strata. In his address at the 27th CPSU Congress, Mikhail Gorbachev referred to a statement by President Reagan as follows: "The American President once said that, should our planet be threatened by an invastion of extraterrestrials, the USSR and the United States would quickly find a joint language." Gorbachev then added to Reagan's statement: "But is the nuclear catastrophe not a more real danger than the landing of imaginary extraterrestrials?" How unreal Reagan's way of thinking appears to us, and how really topical the question posed by Gorbachev!

If the whole of mankind is threatened, then the coalition of reason should include all classes and strata. Should ... there is however, one stratum that lives according to the slogan "Well, We Live -- and After Us the Deluge!" Gorbachev said: "Even today the right wing of the monopoly bourgeoisie of the United States regards the fanning of international ensions as a justification for military expenses, global claims, interference in other countries' affairs, and an attack on the interests and rights of the American working people." What Gorbachev says here about the most reactioary part of monopolism in the United States, applies basically to all imperialist countries. Everywhere this most reactionary part of monopolism profits from armament, in particular from the production of nuclear arms. Today the entire direction of the capitalist economy is determined by its interests, as well as such a dangerous political global situation, that is, the danger of a nuclear inferno threatening mankind.

This most reactionary part of monopolism cannot be won over to a coalition of reason. All other strata of capital producing civilian goods -- monopolies, as well as small capitalists -- are interested in and have a place in a coalition of reason with the working people of our world, in a coalition of reason against the arms race and war.

But how can they be won, if they, at least, with a certain justification, have felt safe in a front of interests with the most reactioary part of monopolism for one century. We stated that the most reactionary part of monopolism thinks and works according to the slogan "Well, We Live -- After Us the Deluge!" I think we can and must show the rest of capital, its great mass, from the monopolies to the small capitalists, that even today the deluge is beginning to absorb them. This is most clearly demonstrated in the United States, today the country with the biggest rearmament, by far, in particular in the field of nuclear arms.

Let us again listen to Mikhail Gorbachev: "The last decades of our century are marked by a new flaring up of the contradictions among imperialist states, the development of the relations between the three major centers of modern imperialism -- new forms and directions... the United States, Western Europe, and Japan -- are full of open and hidden contradictions. The economic, financial, and technological superiority over its closest competitors which the United States held till the end of the sixties was put to a hard test. Western Europe and Japan succeeded in forcing back the American senior partner to a certain extent. They also challenge the United States in such a traditional field of American hegemony as the most recent technology."

Yes, that is the way it is. About 100 years ago the United States became the biggest industrial power of the world, and even some time before that, the shortage of industrial workers forced the United States to deal with industrial technology more intensively than the other capitalist countries. It became the hegemony of technology. Today Western Europe has again caught up with it in certain fields, by and large and Japan has overtaken it in certain fields. Only in one field did the United States remain behind for a long time: In that of armament. Here World War I brought a certain and World War II a decisive change. Today the United States is the biggest armament power in the capitalist world. It has unparalleled superiority over all imperialist countries. Precisely this unparalleled superiority in the field of armament has cost it its superiority in the field of civilian industry. In 1985, about three-fourths of all expenses for research and development served armament, which all in all constitutes 10 percent of the economic activity at most, so that only 25 percent of the expenses for research and development serve about 90 percent of the economic activity. Scientific-technological expenses for an armament product are 25 times higher than for a civilian product of the same value. No wonder that Western Europe which, going by gross national products, spends less than half what the United States does on armament -- Japan spends a bit more than one tenth -- has overtaken the United States in its level of civilian industrial production, and Japan has overtaken it several times. No wonder that for some time the United States, contrary to all traditions, has imported more machines than it has exported.

We do not know whether productivity in the American armament industry increased by 5 or 10 percent in 1985. But we know from U.S. official statistics that entire economy productivity rose by only 0.3 percent in 1985. In the era of the scientific-technological revolution! In the FRG it increased by 2.4 percent in the same period, thus, eight times as much.

When one looks at this development, must it not be clear that it is in the interest of capital as a whole, excluding its most reactionary wing, to limit armament? For reasons of profit, interests! For reasons of the competitive interests of any imperialist state! Can one not show, then, that the deluge reaches the knees of American civilian industry, and already wets the feet of Western Europe, at least in relation to Japan! Must such an argument not result in a coalition of reason? I Think they must! At the same time, we must see that by such arguments we subordinate the interests of the socialist countries to the interests of mankind, just as Lenin would have demanded. For with general disarmament, general scientific-technological progress is accelerated in the socialist countries, too, but the competitive struggle in the world technology market will become more difficult for us. Just as one should not have any illusion about the extent of the scientific-technological revolution today, one must not underestimate its rapid progress as a result of disarmament, especially in the United States. Our appeal for a coalition of reason is not only an appeal to create preconditions for the further existence of mankind, but contains -- otherwise it could not have any effects -- specific advantages for those to whom we address the appeal, for instance profit and technology advantages for the civilian monopolies. If, in this way, specific disadvantages may arise for the socialist countries and also for the working people in the capitalistic word, then, as Lenin would put it, the hegemony of progress, the world of socialism, and the international workers class, will put up with them in the interest of mankind, the hegemony of progess, and the guardian of progress, who thus becomes the preventer of absolute regress into the inferno. Thus, the coalition of reason would be the biggest and probably also a truly heroic achievement of socialism and the international workers class in the interest of mankind.

MSZMP CENTRAL COMMITTEE SESSION COMMUNIQUE

["Communique on the 18 June 1986 Session of the MSZMP Central Committee"]

[Text] Budapest, June 19 -- The MSZMP Central Committee met in session on June 18, 1986 with Janos Kadar in the chair. In addition to the Central Committee members also present at the session were: the chairman and secretary of the Central Control Commission; department heads of the Central Committee; first secretaries of country party committees and that of party committees with the rights of a county; secretaries of the Budapest Party Committee; secretaries of the National Council of Trade Unions; members of the Council of Ministers; leaders of central national authorities; and members of the central press.

The Central Committee discussed and approved:

-- A report by Matyas Szuros, secretary of the Central Committee, on topical international and foreign policy issues;

-- A report by Ferenc Havasi, member of the Political Committee and secretary of the Central Committee, on experiences in the development of the national economy in 1986.

I.

The Central Committee heard a report on the visit to Hungary of Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU, on 8-9 June, and the session in Budapest of the Political Consultative Committee of the Warsaw Treaty on 10-11 June.

1. The Central Committee established that Mikhail Gorbachev's friendly visit was an outstanding event in the development of relations between our parties, peoples and countries. In cordial, comradely talks Janos Kadar and Mikhail Gorbachev informed one another on the work aimed at the implementation of the resolutions of the 13th MSZMP and the 27th CPSU Congresses, and exchanged views on current issues of the international situation and the communist and workers movement. The talks reconfirmed once again our firm unity based upon common principles, and reflected our parties' commodity of views on social progress and international relations.

The Central Committee spoke with satisfaction about the trustful relation between our parties, the deepening of Hungarian-Soviet friendship, and fruitful cooperation covering all walks of life. Both parties expressed their intention to further develop cooperation and raise it to a higher level. We continue to exchange and utilize one another's experiences so that we can help in socialist construction.

The Central Committee is convinced that the talks of Janos Kadar and Mikhail Gorbachev have given a further impetus to the dynamic further development of our political, economic and cultural relations, and help promote the establishment of intensive forms of cooperation.

The Central Committee highly appreciates that we are fighting together in the international field for the same goals, for the improvement of relations, for lasting peace, for the safe future of humankind, free from deadly weapons.

2. The Central Committee approved the work of the Hungarian delegation that had taken part in the session of the Warsaw Treaty Political Consultative Committee. The common positions and proposals formulated in the session are complying with the interests of all peoples including the Hungarian people.

The Hungarian People's Republic, with the other members of the Warsaw Treaty, continues to make resolute efforts to continue the East-West dialogue, stabilize European and general nuclear test ban, the prevention of the militarization of outer space, and the abolition of weapons of mass destruction. It emphasizes that the recent Budapest Appeal of the Warsaw Treaty members to NATO and all European countries, calling for a coordinated cut in European armed forces and conventional armaments is a significant initiative which, if implemented, would considerably strengthen peace and security on our continent.

The Hungarian people expect the competent people of the NATO to consider the proposals of the Warsaw Treaty Political Consultative Committee in a responsible and genuine way, and give a constructive answer to the initiatives.

II.

The Central Committee reviewed the state of the national economy, evaluated the experiences gained so far in the implementation of the 1986 plan, and discussed further tasks that serve to fulfill the plan.

1. The Central Committee stated that fulfilling the economic policy targets for this year poses a more difficult task than previously assumed, and raised greater requirements towards the work of economic management and economic organizations. The economic revival set as target in the seventh 5-Year Plan has not yet begun, and the unfavourable economic processes that characterized last year have, in several respects, continued in the first five months of this year.

The necessary improvement has not yet been attained in strengthening the economic balance. The growth of production does not appropriately cover company investments, the consumption of public bodies and the population. The adjustment of the production structure to demand is slow, efficiency is not improving in the desired degree, labor discipline and the utilization of worktime is inadequate in several areas.

The tendency of world economic conditions to be unfavorable for us. The prices of our major export items -- food, oil derivatives -- have considerably decreased, and the detrimental discrimination applied by the EEC causes considerable losses.

The insufficient performances last year and at the beginning of this year, the shortcomings of our work and the new unfavorable international economic developments make the attainment of our main economic policy target more difficult.

Industrial production in the first 5 months of the year -- in spite of revival in April and May -- has not reached the planned, increasing by only 1.2 percent.

Production of mining, the chemical industry, the food industry and light industry developed similarly to last year's level. It is favourable that production of telecommunication and vacuum technology rose by 14 percent, of precision engineering by 10, household and cosmetic chemical industry by 11, shoe industry by 10, rubber industry by 6, pharmaceutical industry by 4, printing industry by 7 percent. The performance of the construction industry rose by more than 6 percent over the similar period of 1985.

Agricultural goals that create the bases for 1986 have been fulfilled in good quality. The sowing area of cereals and maize somewhat lags behind the planned, that of sunflower surpasses the planned amount by 13 percent. Cereals are mediumly developed, hoed plants are developing well. In animal breeding, the favorable effects of raising the procurement prices and other practicable measures are beginning to be felt. The decrease in the cattle stock has considerably been slowed, the pig stock has increased, the poultry stock is developing according to that envisaged. The production of the food industry is thus gradually reviving.

Construction investments are the same as last year. It is favourable that purchases of machines has increased by 8 percent within the investments. Central investments are developing according to that envisaged. Company investments surpass last year's level by 12 percent.

Wages in the first 5 months of the year surpassed those planned, and rose by 7.2 percent. The volume of retail trade goods turnover rose by 3.5 percent, goods supply -- with the exception of several consumption articles -- is balanced.

The Central Committee approves that the management organs have passed numerous measures in the interest of fulfilling the economic policy targets and the targets of the annual plan. These measures basically serve to develop production pattern, encourage export, and improve the conditions of technical progress. They expand the possibilities of companies in the realization of foreign trade plans, and result in surplus incomes in case of a determined improvement in performance. Other measures are aimed at improving the fulfillment of the budget, increase interests in economic growth, and assist in establishing a closer link between performances and incomes.

As numerous examples indicate, human factors, the standard of management, and attitude, alongside the objective circumstances, are determining in economic work, in the efficiency of the branches, economic organizations and collectives. Success will not be lacking at places where resolute and steady work is realized to enforce our economic policy principles.

3. The Central Committee stressed: The most important task continues to be to establish the conditions for reviving economic growth, by keeping the balance requirements in view, and to fulfil the 1986 National Economic Plan. Attainment of this goal requires a more active, organized and disciplined work from the managing organs, the economic organizations and all workers.

The government organs should follow the economic processes with greater attention, and should take the necessary measure in time. They should assure the desired accord between production and consumption, export and import. They should take further measures to moderate expenditures, in the interest of safeguarding the budget balance.

They should create stricter requirements when settling the financial state of loss-making companies and those with fixed assets losses. They should strengthen the unity of attitude and action in implementation, and should take a stand against looseness and lack of discipline.

The economic organizations should better utilize the resources at their disposal, and should concentrate their activity on increasing economic production. They should devote greater attention to the better exploitation of the worktime. Companies manufacturing well-marketable products should make efforts to increase production also by extending the worktime basis.

The Central Committee stressed that the main economic policy targets which serve the rise of the country, the interests of the people and socialist development, and which were formulated in the resolution of the 13th congress and in the seventh 5-year national economic plan, continue to be valid and can be attained by improving work. The Hungarian people have more than once proven that they are capable of great efforts and outstanding results in the interest of attaining our national goals. This provides a firm basis for realizing our social and economic program formulated at the party congress and set down in the national economic plan.

The Central Committee calls on the party and social organizations, the state and economic organs, to analyze the economic experiences of the first half of the year, and to promote the attainment of the economic policy targets and the fulfillment of the 1986 plan.

MARJAI INTERVIEWED ON RIVER BARRAGE SYSTEM

AU191445 Budapest NEPSZABADSAG in Hungarian 14 Jun 86 p 4

[Interview with Deputy Premier Jozsef Marjai, to Laszlo Sazabo: "Austrian Participation in the Construction of th Bos-Nagymaros Hydropower Station Is Valuable -- All Conditions for Investment Are Met -- Environment Is Priority -- Discussion with Deputy Premier Jozsef Marjai" -- place and date not given]

[Excerpts] [Szabo] You represented Hungary at the signing of the Hungarian-Austrian agreements. Since this agreement concluded all the prepaparatory work and attention can now be turned to construction, I think I can ask you the following: Why is it so important for us to build this power station?

[Marjai] One of the priority issues of our development is the expansion of our energy resources. However, as for the Bos-Nagymaros Barrage System one has to consider that this project will be an investment that is useful in many different ways. Contrary to what is sometimes one sidely stressed, we have to build this hydropower station not merely for the extra energy it will supply. The project will solve the long-standing navigation problem, which is especially urgent in view of the development of the European waterways and the building of the Danube-Rhine Canal. The investment project will also include the comprehensive organization of water management on the Hungarian Upper Danube in the coming decades, including significant improvements in water quality and the modernization of flood protection which cannot be delayed very much longer. All this is accompanied by additional advantages and by the elimination of disadvantages all of which will affect the conditions of life and production on a large scale.

Time-Saving Postponement

[Szabo] Has it ever been suggested that we should stop implementing the plans in this difficult economic situation?

[Marjai] Ever since the need to build the Upper Danube Barrage System arose -- and this happened over 30 years ago -- economic considerations and environment protection have always played an important role. This was so at the time the Hungarian-Czechoslovak agreements entered their final state. No doubt, during this time changes have occurred both as regards economic considerations and views on environmental protection, and circumstances and conditions have changed. These changes took place above all here at home and not in the case of our Czechoslovak partner.

[Marjai] In these circumstances, since we are talking about a jointly owned system to be constructed jointly, as stipulated by the interstate agreement, ant change can be carried out only by mutual understanding and so we examined the various possibilities. The possibility was raised to refrain from carrying out the work of the Hungarian side of the complex. But in this case, the balanced advantages stipulated in the agreement would have inevitably deteriorated and thus the CSSR side would have benefited almost exclusively from the construction of the project and from the remaining advantages. Everyone can agree that this would not have been the rational solution. There was another option, too, to freeze construction for a period of 10 years. We must not forget, however, that at this time our Czechoslovak partners were already hard at work -- according to the agreement -- and were well ahead of us in the construction, in accordance with the pace agreed upon. Reviewing the construction pace of the entire complex, we had to admit that the CSSR saide had already been in such an advanced stage in the construction that it was impossible to realistically expect them to freeze the enormous capital invested and the work for such a long time.

[Szabo] And so what solution did you opt for?

[Marjai] The comradely and friendly negotiations ended with an agreement for a 6-year postponement of the original deadline. This has given us an opportunity to consider two things. On the one hand it allowed us to find a new solution for the economic aspects of the construction, that is, to find a solution that will ease our burdens in this difficult period and will still allow us to fulfill our obligations and maintain, and in certain respects even increase the advantages resulting from the power station. On the other hand, it enabled us once again to thoroughly reexamine all aspects affecting the environment and the country side during the construction. One important result of this work has been the comprehensive Hungarian-Austrian agreements.

[Szabo] When the agreement was made poublic it was mentioned that this agreement will improve the Hungarian export balance in the next 10 years, in what way?

[Marjai] We will have to redeeum within 2 decades from 1996 on whatever is done and invested by the Austrians in Hungary. However, we can effort order for goods, machinery, and material transports up to 30 percent of the total sum on our own constructions, all of which will be paid for by the Austrians in convertible currency and cash immediately. This will make up almost 2 billion schillings during the construction period.

[Szabo] Quite a lot of money...

[Marjai] What is more, the above-mentioned goods and services are not included on the Hungarian export list, and could not be exported for convertible currency or for other monies. Therefore, the advantages resulting from this need not be mentioned further.

[Szabo] What role do the Hungarian-Austrain agreements play in the increased assertion of environmental protection considerations?

[Marjai] I think this agreement will help us in our efforts to protect our environment not only by a defensive approach, but by halting the present lebel of deterioration and by making the environment more beautiful and more propserous. The agreements call for a particular method of construction to protect the environment by making extensive use of Austrian technology and experience. Within the framework of this agreement we can also have various projects done which we have never thought about earlier. We must not forget that the government also used the time available to us during the period of postponement for the preparation of a study on the comprehensive environmental effects. This study examines all possible aspects of a wide range of questions based on very high scientific demands and extraodinary expertise. Quite aside from all such previous projects, but also making a use of them, this study was made by scientists, various exports, institutions, and boards of academic and trade exports. This environmental study, which has examined all new information and checked all old information, a kind of work unprecendented in the world in and is also highly appreciated by foreign experts.

POLISH-ZIMBABWEAN TALKS COVER GLOBAL ISSUES

[Text] PAP -- Canaan Sodindo Banana, president of the Republic of Zimbabwe, paid a visit to Poland on 13-15 June 1986 at the invitation of State Council Chairman Wojciech Jaruzelski.

President C.S. Banana placed a wreath at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier and toured Warsaw. He saw the movie "Warsaw After All" in the Historical Museum, toured Krakow, and visited Auschwitz where he paid homage to the victims of the fascist concentration Camp.

State Council Chairman W. Jaruzelski and President C.S. Banana had talks in an atmosphere of friendship, mutual respect, and understanding. Plenary talks were attended by members of the two delegations.

Poland was represented by Jozef Czyrek, Politburo member and Central Committee secretary; Tadeusz Mlynczak, deputy State Council chairman; Vice Premier Wladysalw Gwiazda; Jerzy Beitkopf, State Council secretary; Jan Majewski, vice minister of foreign affairs; Jozef Zegar, deputy chairman of the Planning Commission; Ryszard Buchowiecki, vice minister of mining and power; and Leszek Kryst, vice minister of health and social wewlfare.

Zimbabwe was represented by Sidney T. Sekeramayi, Zimbabwe African National Union Politburo member and minister of health; Richard C. Hove, minister of mining; Morton Malianga, vice minister of finances, planning, and development; Misheck C. Hove, departmental head of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs; and Clifford M. Sileya, secretary of the president.

The two sides also met to discuss selected issues of mutual cooperation.

The sides were pleased to note the favorable development of their relations based on equality, friendship, and noninterference in internal affairs and expressed their determination to promote their cooperation and to continue the political dialogue on issues of interest to them. They also noted the opportunities for developing economic cooperation and trade for mutual benefit.

They informed each other about the situation in their countries and the plans for socioeconomic development in the next few years. The Zimbabwe delegation praised the achievements of normalization in Poland.

State Council Chairman W. Jaruzelski and President C.S. Banana exchanged views on the most important international and regional issues and were pleased to note the identity or far-reaching converging of their positions on the key issues of the present times. They stressed the need for further Polish-Zimbabwean cooperation in the international arena in order to maintain peace and strengthen international security. They expressed their support for the just struggle of the peoples against colonialism, racism, apartheid, and imperialist domination, for the complete liberation of the oppressed peoples and for decolonization in the south of Africa.

The two sides resolutely condemned the policy of apartheid in South Africa and expressed their complete solidarity with and support for the struggle of the peoples in Namibia and South Africa for freedom and independence, a struggle waged under the leadership of the liberation movements.

The Polish side condemned most resolutely the aggression of the racist regime of South Africa against the sovereignty of Zimbabwe, Botswana, Zambia, Mozambique, and Angola and noted that the imperialist powers and international monopolies share responsibility in this connection. South Africa's aggressive actions constitute state terror and are in conflict with the UN Charter and the principles of coexistence in the world. The Zimbabwean side expressed its gratitude for Poland's solidarity with the Frontline States in the south of Africa, which continue to oppose the policy of apartheid and to demand that the legitimate rights to freedom and independence of the peoples of South Africa and Namibia be honored.

The two sides stressed that the inviolability of borders and respect for the territorial-political facts established as a result of World War II and postwar development are the prerequisites for preserving peace and security in Europe. The Zimbabwean side highly appraised Poland's policy in Europe and its militancy in the CSCE process.

The two sides expressed their deep concern for the continuing tension in political relations and for the worsening economic situation in the world and noted that imperialist efforts to achieve strategic superiority through an escalation of the arms race on earth and through the implementation of the program for space militarization create the greatest danger for all countries and peoples.

The two sides came out in favor of renewed activities to preserve peace, to end the arms race, to terminate local conflicts through peaceful means, to protect mankind against a nuclear catastrophe, and to create conditions for the progressive development of nations.

The Zimbabwean side declared its resolute support for the disarmament initiatives put forward recently by the socialist countries in Budapest.

The Polish and Zimbabwean delegations discussed the Middle East situation and came out in favor of an international conference under the auspices of the United Nations in order to devise a comprehensive solution of the problems of that region and to settle the Palestinian issue in an equitable way on the basis of the Palestinian people's legitimate rights to self-determination, including the establishment of their own state. The sides also declared themselves in favor of immediately ending the war between Iraq and Iran and of settling disputed questions by peaceful means. The two sides condemned the recent U.S. armed aggression against Libya.

The Zambabwean side discussed the situation and policy of the nonaligned countries and the preparations for the seventh conference of the leaders of these countries in Harare at the end of August and the beginning of September. The Polish side highly praised the role of Zimbabwe in Africa and the Nonaligned Movement.

The president of Zimbabwe expressed his delegation's and his own thanks for the hospitality of Poland and invited the chairman of the PPR State Council to pay an official visit to Zimbabwe. The invitation was accepted with pleasure.

PRESIDIUM EVALUATES IMPLEMENTATION OF PRESS LAW

AU191446 Warsaw TRYBUNA LUDU in Polish 17 Jun 86 pp 1, 2

[Excerpts] PAP -- At its 16 June session the Government Presidium discussed the functioning of the press law. The practical functioning of the press law has been welcomed and praised by the people, who are generally aware that the law is not a parochial measure for the benefit of the press, journalists, and publishers, but a measure to promote the interests of citizens.

The press law makes it possible to ensure that citizens find it easier to influence public affairs, implement the principles that public life is open, uncover and criticize negative features, and participate in discussions about issues that are important for everyone.

The Government Presidium noted that contacts between administrative bodies and the press had become a daily practice and that information provided by the state administrative and economic bodies is an important element of the news published by mass media.

Administrative bodies, enterprises, and cooperatives continue to regularly study the critical materials published by the mass media and to use such criticism in order to eliminate neglect and shortcomings and to accelerate the settlement of citizens' business. The leading echelons of ministries, central agencies, and voivodship offices carry out periodical analyses of critical publications in order to make the necessary decisions and proposals. The mass media receive responses to their criticism. Failure to respond to such criticism is becoming increasingly rare, and official bodies and enterprises continue to take the initiative in responding to criticism with increasing frequency. The position of the press spokesmen in ministries and voivodships has consolidated.

A new feature of the Polish legal system is the Press Council, which continues to develop. This council submits proposals in connection with the role of the press in our sociopolitical life. Council members represent journalists, publishers, social and political organizations, state bodies, scientists, and associations.

The Government Presidium stressed that efforts to strengthen the role of the press law in our public life should continue mainly with the help of the consistent implementation of the regulations laid down by this law.

BARYLA ADDRESSES SOCIAL WRONGDOING, SOLUTIONS

[Text] PAP -- Addressing the plenary session of the ZSL Supreme Committee in Warsaw on 17 June, PZPR Central Committee Secretary Jozef Baryla said that the phenomena of social wrongdoing discussed at the plenum are arousing increasingly greater justifiable interest among public opinion. Working people have expressed their concern about this at many meetings prior to the Sejm and people's council elections; today they are doing so during the preparations for the 10th PZPR Congress. Meeting halfway, as it were, the need of society, we observe an urgent need to declare a resolute battle against these disturbing phenomena, J. Baryla said. We are giving this battle a broader treatment -- as a battle for the nation's moral health. The PZPR, ZSL, SD, people with various types of world outlook, and signatories of PRON are taking an active part in the implementation of this initiative.

Referring to the combating of social pathology, J. Baryla pointed out that the chief paths of this combat in the immediate future will be: the consolidation of positive values during the elimination of negative and pathological ones; the creation of legal and social obstacles to the spreading of unfavorable trends; and the establishment of new values and ethical morals firmly embedded in the stream of the political and sociopolitical changes that are meeting the challenge of the 21st century. He stressed that setting in motion various social initiatives and forms of action in this sphere will be an important contribution to the work of healing our public life and making it more honorable and concordant with our common socialist ideals.

SEJM DEPUTIES CRITICIZE MINISTERIAL RESPONSES

[Ryszarda Kazimierska article: "Parliamentary Dissatisfaction"]

[Excerpts] Sejm Deputy Antoni Foks, who represents Walbrzych, is dissatisfied. On behalf of his electorate he asked Finance Minister Stanislaw Nieckarz a question, to which the minister responded in a vague and irrelevant manner that amounted to neither "yes" nor "no."

In effect, neither the deputy nor his electorate were given the necessary information on an issue of interest to them.

The same thing happened to Sejm Deputy Grzegorz Seidler from Lublin, whose question addressed to the Ministry of Communications was answered in a puzzling manner by Kazimierz Czarniecki representing the ministry. Deputy Seidler was never told whether the Polich optical fibers communications technologies will be used on an industrial scale.

The ministers' answers to deputies' questions are often just like that: They avoid the issue, are vague, and at times are too long and complicated. This is why it happens that the marshal of the Sejm has to remind the members of the government how to answer parliamentary questions.

There are also other reasons for the deputies' dissatisfaction. For example, Deputy Zbigniew Bialecki from Torun complained that his viovodship deputies' team had sent a letter last March to the central authorities, but no reply has been reveived to this day, although the law provides for a 14-day deadline.

Let us recall that article 18 of this law states that "in his activities the deputy is entitled to obtain all information and materials on and to examine the performance of state administration, state enterprises, and other units of the socialized economy."

Article 20 states that "in the course of his Sejm duties a deputy is entitled to intervene with state administrative bodies, state enterprises, social organizations, and with the organizational units not run by the state in order to settle a problem on his own behalf and on the behalf of his electorate. He is also entitled to watch the proceedings in settling such problems."

Still another article of the law in question states that the "proposals and observations formulated by the deputy during the session of the Sejm and its commissions should be carefully considered by the appropriate state bodies, institutions, and organizations."

It is certainly worth checking on the implementation of the law on the duties and rights of the Sejm deputies, which has been in force since 21 August 1985. Perhaps then we would know why its provisions are being neglected.

MOKRZYSZCZAK OUTLINES PROPOSED STATUTE CHANGES

[Interview given by Wlodzimierz Mokrzyszczak, PZPR Politburo candidate member, Central Committee secretary, and chairman of the Statute Committee of the Congress Commission: "In Accordance With Principles and Life" -- date, place not given]

[Excerpts] [Pawlowska] What changes does your committee propose for the party statute?

[Mokrzyszczak] It has drawn up some new statutory regulations and has proposed some changes to tighten the definition of old regulations. For example, the statute makes perfectly obvious the worker character of our party, but the 16th Central Committee Plenum, which we justly call the "worker" plenum, produced many concepts and decisions that have to be included in the party statute. That is why our Statute Committee proposes among other things that workers consultative teams, which may include nonparty people, should be set up within party cells. Our committee also takes the view that the achieavements of the 19th plenum, which was devoted to the intelligentsia, should be included in the statute so that not only the intelligentsia's place in the party, but also the relations between the workers class, on the one hand, and its social and class allies -- the peasants and the intelligentsia -- are given statutory definitions. The principles of cadre policy worked out by the Central Committee during the present party term must also be reflected in the statute. All these issues are nothing "new," they simply follow the line of the ninth party congress. Another such issue is the proposal that the role of primary party organizations in the party's structure should be stressed even more clearly.

[Pawlowska] What about the changes suggested by practical experience?

[Mokrzyszczak] All such changes stem without exception from the party's practical experience. Since the ninth party congress important changes have taken place in the functioning of the state. For example, we have set up the Patriotic Movement for National Rebirth, we have elected a new Sejm under new election regualtions, and we have extended the powers of the people's councils. The democratization of the state system -- which has begun, but is still not completed -- calls for the statutory definition of the tasks and duties of party members who are party deputies and councillors in representative bodies as well as in self-government institutions of socialist democracy and in social organizations. Opening itself on a larger scale to the young generation is the programmatic and extremely prtactical task of the party. Of course, this calls for a multitude of various efforts. It would be interesting to find out whether it is useful to shorten the statutory periods of waiting to become a party member, so that, say, a student would be able to become a full party member before completing his studies. Our committee also proposes that the statute should include the requirement that extensive inquiries should be made in their communities about those who aspire to be admitted to the party.

[Pawlowska] What about the disputed question of the length of the term of office of party cells?

[Mokrzyszczak] We propose that the term of office of all party cells be extended to 5 years. This is no "manipulation."

This is a result of experience. Under the present system the party has been busy during the accountability and election campaigns, which, I think, consumed about one-third of the party's strength and time. The party, which before the ninth congress had viewed short terms of office as a protection against the ossification of the authorities, saw the defects of such shortness. But what is most important is that, functioning in line with the principles of democratic centralism, the party has enough other powers to control the activities of its authorities. In the same way our team proposes to reduce the number of the obligatory Central Committee plenary sessions. By the way, during this term of office the Central Committee has held 26 plenums, which is without a precedent. But it was necessary to hold so many plenums because of the "great house-cleaning" in the party and because of the need to deal comprehensively with various problems.

[Interview given by Kazimierz Morawski, chairman of the PZPR Central Auditing Commission, to Izabella Wajszczuk: "A Process of Profound Changes Has Commenced as a Result of the Wishes of the PZPR" -- date and place not given]

[Excerpts] [Wajszczuk] During the talks preceding the Ninth PZPR Congress, the greatest attention during discussions on the problems of internal party life was devoted to internal party democracy. Today, on the eve of the 10th congress, this topic is not causing any particular emotion. Does this mean that matters are already so positive that internal party democracy does not merit social concern?

[Morawski] It is true that the strengthening of internal party democracy is no longer a leading slogan during meetings of primary party organizations and party conferences. I have attended many such meetings and not once did I hear concern about the state of democracy within the party or the postulates concerning its improvement. This is a completely different situation from the one prevalent before the ninth congress. At that time, practically every party discussion involved the seeking of guarantees for democracy within the party. But can one conclude from this that democracy within the party no longer merits concern? It is clear that matters are not that good. Today, however, the chief problem is how to make the best use of this instrument, gain experience, and transform existing statutory regulations into permanent party practice and work style. The aim was different during the campaign preceding the ninth congress. The point then was to work out and introduce in the party statute regulations that encourage a democratization of the party's functioning in the best way. As we know, this action was successful -- the statute has been thoroughly altered and many of its new rules fulfill the function of the guarantees about which so many demands were made.

[Wajszczuk] You said that internal party democracy no longer attracts so much attention. But one member of the Central Auditing Commission has said recently that there is no democratic centralism without internal party democracy. The increasingly effective work of the party also involves a mature awareness of the above principle. Looking back on the last 5 years, what experiences are therefore worth using in order that party work may bring the intended results?

[Morawski] There have been years of difficult and industrious work. I think the work of auditing commissions has served to consolidate the party as an ideological and political community and to make the implementation of party resolutions more stringent; in other words, it has improved the effectiveness of party action. We have also directed a great deal of criticism against ourselves. Everything concerning the effectiveness of party action also applies to us in the Auditing Commission, for we are part of the party.

From our own experience we can say that future controls aimed at improving activity should regard resolutions, conferences, and timetables as mere beginnings of a process meant to achieve a goal, not proof that this goal has been reached. Therefore, these controls should always check the results and circumstances of the work of party bodies and on this basis formulate a firm assessment of their effectiveness.

In the next few years the party will reap the fruits of intensified organizational and ideolgical activity. On the desire of the PZPR, a process of profound changes in all spheres of social life, economy, politics, culture, and social consciousness has been initiated during the intercongress period. In order to properly assess the results of the actions taken and the suitability of the decisions made, it will be necessary to intensify and improve auditing and control mechanisms, which are always important in a Marxist-Leninist party.

WORKERS CLASS INFLUENCES PRECONGRESS DISCUSSION

AU191643 Warsaw RZECZPOSPOLITA in Polish 17 Jun 86 p 3

[Interview with Tadeusz Czechowicz, PZPR Politburo member and Lodz Voivodship PZPR Committee first secretary, by Krystyna Kostrzewa -- date and place not given]

[Excerpts] [Kostrzewa] A characteristic feature of the voivodship is that it has a concentration of an enormous group of the workers class, a group, moreover, with long-established traditions. It would be interesting to know, therefore, whether this fact had an influence on the precongress discussion, on its level and content...

[Czechowicz] Of course it did. The discussion was very lively and involved a great many non-party members as well as party members. One of the strongest currents in the discussion did concern the workers class itself -- its place and role in the state, and in economic, political, and cultural life. To put it in very general terms, workers wish to see unity in theory and practice, they want to see the party program provide a clear and precise definition of what constitutes the party's workers class character and its class policy within the state. Workers increasingly perceive a need to increase their political role and their influence on the state's activities. A conscious section of the workers class sees its advancement in attaining a high level of skill in one's occupation and not in exchanging one's overalls for the garb of a bureaucrat. It is interesting that during the discussion divisions within the workers class itself were pointed out; one of the discussion participants said that today the main division lies in the quality of work.

[Kostrzewa] Do workers feel they are not valued enough? Because their living conditions are not the most confortable....

[Czechowicz] Contrary to what you suggest, comrade, the workers class is not calling for new rights and privileges for itself; egoism is something alien to this class. It does, however, want to enjoy equality of opportunity -- in obtaining an education and in learning a trade, in improving skills, in participating in cultural life, and in having an influence on the state authorities' policies and the running of workplaces. Being the main force that creates national income, the workers class also wants to have a greater say in the distribution of national income. It desires a fuller realization of the principles of socialist social justice, which the PZPR defends, empowered to do so by the workers' class. The party precongress campaign is the best opportunity for raising many matters, for defending needs, and for making suggestions. It is a search for an answer to the question of what Poland is to be like and to the question of how the leading role of the workers class ought to be performed.

[Kostrzewa] Comrade, you have mentioned a new style of party work. With the rejection of pre-August methods of work at the ninth party congress, what does this new style of party work consist of today, how does the party's guiding role express itself in the state and its leading role in society? I am thinking of party work at the viovodship level....

[Czechowicz] In the broadest terms, the party's work consists of inspiring and activating all progressive social forces to undertake joint activities for the good of the state and our regionn, and encouraging cooperation between all these forces. Forces of this kind are: coalition parties; national councils; civic self-government councils; the Patriotic Council for National Rebirth: trade unions; workers' self-management councils; social, youth, vocational, and womens' organizations; and Catholic communities. We do not have to have -- and we do not want -- a monopoly on power; we do not order anyone around. To be able to direct without always forcing oneself to the forefront is a skill. I believe that the party is trong when it galvanizes all progressive forces into action, not when it orders, when it imposes its will, and so on. We are counting on dialogue and understanding. Whether we will succeed in this is another matter, however. Of course, it still will not work out well every time, or succeed completely on every occasion.

[Kostrzewa] During the years 1980 to 1981, in your voivodship, as was the case throughout the country, party ranks shrank, workers turned in their party membership cards.....

[Czechowicz] This process was arrested a long time ago. New people are joining the party. In the first quarter of this year, for example, we admitted 868 persons, most of whom were workers and young people. The decline in public confidence in the party is also being reversed, as well as the indifference toward party actions; this was attested by the precongress idscussion, in which party members as well as non-party members took part. The campaigns that preceded the Sejm and national council elections also provided proof of this. While taking note of these positive changes we do, however, realize that we cannot cease in our activity directed at winning people over to the ideas of the party.

BELOVSKI HOLDS PRE-CONGRESS PRESS CONFERENCE

[Text] Belgrade, 23 Jun (TANJUG) -- Dimce Belovski, secretary of the LCY Central Committee Presidium, and Marko Lolic and Ugljesa Uzelac, executive secretaries of the Presidium, held a press conference for foreign and domestic journalists today in connection with the 13th LCY Congres due to begin on Wednesday in Belgrade.

Belovski made the assessment that the 13th congress was of the greatest importance for making a strong contribution to the unity of the working class and LCY unity as a whole as well as for providing the scope for the further development of socialist self-management. The conditions for this turnabout have been provided by the fact that uniform stands and views had been arrived at on a number of key and crucial issues. True, stressed Belovski, we were hoping, but did not manage to do it, to appear at the congress with some tangible results in our economic development. This is why the burden of high inflation and negative economic trends still persists.

This most important meeting of Yugoslav Communists will be attended by 2,257 delegates and guests and by delegations of about 120 parties and movements from throughout the world. The congress proceedings will be reported on by 1,450 representatives of the domestic information media and about 200 foreign journalists, out of whom 100 will be special reporters. The planned cost of preparation and holding the congress will amount to 500 million dinars.

The congress will work in six commissions.

SERBIAN PRESIDENCY SESSION DISCUSSES KOSOVO

LD232121 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1357 GMT 23 Jun 86

[Text] Belgrade, 23 Jun (TANJUG) -- At its session today -- chaired by Ivan Stambolic -- the Presidency of the SR of Serbia discussed the current problems stemming from the recent events in Kosovo. The Presidency made the assessment that the tasks from the LCY Central Committee platform on Kosovo and other documents had not been implemented resolutely and efficiently enough and that because of bureaucratic indolence by the state organs, and especially judiciary organs and organs of administration and pressure by Albanian nationalists, the Serbs and the Montenegrins have felt increasingly dissatisfied and their emigration continues unabated.

The Presidency of the SR of Serbia has made the judgment that the implementation of the adopted measures and actions stemming from the conclusions of the SFRY Presidency and the LCY Central Committee Presidium on the political and security situation in Kosovo, and the implementation of concrete measures and actions taken by republican organs and other institutions in the republic, will make it possible to resolve the problems of the Serbs and Montenegrins much more efficiently, faster and in a more responsible way within the framework of legal state organs and self-management institutions of our society. The Presidency placed all appropriate institutions and individuals in society under the obligation immediately on the receipt of the reports by commissions and working groups of federal and republican organs which are responsible for establishing the substance of the complaints by the Serbs and Montenegrins from Kosovo, and to carry out their share of the commitments arising out of these reports. All other organizations in the republic must immediately ascertain what their tasks are -- as did by the City Committee of the LC of Belgrade during its last session -- so that the problems in Kosovo can be resolved faster and more efficiently.

The Presidency has made the assessment that concrete and efficient implementation of these measures and actions is the right way to stabilize the frayed intranational relations and to resolve the problems of the Serbs and Montenegrins in Kosovo. This is why the Presidency made it incumbent on all republican organs and other social institutions, together with provincial and federal organs, to carry out without any delay and efficiently it concrete measures and actions agreed on the basis of the conclusions of the SFRY Presidency and the LCY Central Committee Presidium, and to keep it constantly informed. It was also agreed that the public must be constantly informed about the implementation of these measures and actions, and also about any possible opposition to their implementation.

This is the right way responsibly, efficiently, and quickly to resolve the problems which create serious difficulties for the life of the Serbs and Montenegrins in Kosovo and increase their dissatisfaction and emigration. It is vital that these problems to be resolved within the framework of legal state and self-management institutions, which is an essential condition for the political stability of our society.

The Presidency also discussed some other issues pertaining to its jurisdiction and adopted a decision to grant pardon to a number of sentenced people, in connection with 7 July, the Day of Rising in the SR of Serbia.

SERBIAN LC MUNICIPAL PRESIDENTS MEET 23 JUN

LD232119 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1636 GMT 23 Jun 86

["Consultative Meeting with Presidents of the Serbian LC Municipal Committees" -- TANJUG headline]

[Excerpts] Belgrade, 23 Jun (TANJUG) -- We must not permit unproductive sessions of LC forums and organs, which reiterate direction already established and carry on debates already held, to curb the action aimed at changing the situation in the period now before us.

This practical and action, geared approach was expressed at today's consultative meeting with residents of LC municipal committees, organized by the Serbian LC Central Committee on the subject of immediate tasks in implementing the stances of the 10th republican party congress. A particular novelty in the method of work was also the character of this consultative meeting in which presidents of municipal committees from the whole of the republic as well as representatives of intermunicipal LC conferences and of the Belgrade and Novi Sad City LC committees also participated.

In the introductory speech which referred to organizing and training LC organizations for the implementation of congress tasks, Zoran Sokolovic, secretary of the Central Committee Presidium stressed that the party grass roots, working people, and citizens demanded a consistent and efficient action in resolving urgent social problems.

Azem Vlasi, president of the Presidium of the Kosovo LC Provincial Committee, then spoke to the participants of the consultative meeting. He dwelled in particular on the events in the province which occurred in the past few days. We must be aware first of all, he said, that the problems which still exist in Kosovo are of a nature conducive to easily turning everything, when based on these events, into a political exercise and that these problems could be abused as shown by the recent attempts to mobilize the people collectively and incite them to unacceptable behavior.

Certain circles in Kosovo and beyond were engaged in the past period on intensive propaganda with the aim of carrying out once again, now on the very eve of the 13th congress, an action of collective mobilization directed at Belgrade.

The aims of these circles are much more extensive and Kosovo represents for them only the easiest pretext. There was organized propaganda, incitement and pressure to have the people mobilized collectively. In the course of our socio-political activity we had been pointing out that this would be particularly harmful at this point in time when we are fully united and when we enjoy cooperation and activity for mutual benefit also with republican federal organs in the specific resolution of many issues and problems, and that such actions would be detrimental to this course of orientation and resolve.

The organizers' plans to mobilize large masses of people have, regardless of their manifested persistence, failed because a great majority of the people, Valsi stressed, are conscious of what this would have meant and where this would lead. To them it is more acceptable to adhere to the course of concrete and joint resolution of problems rather than to behave in a way which would aim at further destabilizing and worsening the situation. This can only make resolving problems more difficult. What is of exceptional significance is that, in addition to the warnings we have sounded recently, the moment this did happen, we went to talk with the people in order to dissuade them from following these plans. Thus we have actually halted the escalation of this activity through political action, by talking to people.

I am convinced that all this will not exert a negative influence on the direction of our action which consists in our now being engaged in finding out who had organized this action, and why, and how. Our preoccupation must continue to be to resolve the problems and tasks which have been specifically get out and to eliminate the broader causes and circumstances which make for people's disatisfaction.

We shall not succeed in bringing about a change in the attitudes to the LC tasks if we do not leave behind the practice of saying one thing and doing another, Slobodan Milosevic, President of the Serbian LC Central Committee, said. In his closing speech, Milosevic said, among other things, that the democratic spirit, which had developed despite the difficulty of gaining currency in the conditions existing in our country, had nevertheless reached the level at which the practice of forums and individuals saying one thing and doing another, will not be tolerated.

The practice of holding meetings which, in Milosevic's words, yield no results, should be abandoned as soon as possible. The view that people are judged by what they say, how they say it, and how often they make speeches, has been for many years slowly and dangerously acquiring respectability while the question of what they have done has practically never been asked or asked less and less. Therefore, everyone should in his environment face the issue -- how efficiently do we work? Can we free ourselves from the bondage of seeing meetings as the essence of political work, in particular by their frequency and length? To start with, we should at least halve the length of meetings. At their congress, the Serbian Communists agreed what to do and we, therefore, now need working meetings which will have on their agenda the implementation of that which has been agreed on, specific people, specific problems, and responsibility for the results.

We have entered a phase when unity can actually be built only on specific tasks, that is, on their implementation and on which this unity can be demonstrated, above all, on those must important tasks, such as the struggle to eliminate the consequences of the counterrevolution in Kosovo.

We can see that this is difficult, but we can also see that in Kosovo, in the whole of Serbia and in the country too, efforts to achieve unity and work efficiency are becoming specific. We will fight for the LC policy persistently but energetically. This also implies that we will adopt the measures and speed by which irregularities, injustices, and troubles which have befallen honest people in Kosovo, regardless of their nationality, can be eliminated. Because, the unprotected and desperate people in Kosovo will benefit nothing from our orientations and promises if we do not turn them into practice.

Milosevic then went on to remind those present that last week's session of the Presidiums of Serbian LC Central Committee and of the Kosovo LC Provincial Committee adopted a whole series of activities aimed at implementing the measures of the SFRY Presidency and LCY Central Committee Presidium and the stances of the 10th Serbian LC Congress. This refers, above all, to the implementation of the laws and merciless conflict with any lawlessness and arbitrariness. Laws must be carried out and any obstruction in this respect must not be without its consequences. But other specific measures, too, were taken which refer to education, upbringing, information, work of communists in state organs and, economic development. All of us know full well that these are processes which take a long time and that results cannot be achieved overnight. However, the fact that they are processes and that they take a long time should not be the reason for us not embarking upon them with all our strength. The sooner we begin to embark on the process of changing the awareness and relations, the sooner these changes will take place. A number of years marked by hesitation in many respects and wait-and-see have already gone by. Therefore, tardiness and efficient implementation of the policy of the LC represents for us the gravest problem not only in Kosovo but also in implementing the long-term economic stabilization program as well as in many other issues, Milosevic concluded.

KOSOVO PRESIDENCY NOTES HUGE ECONOMIC LOSSES

[Text] Pristina 23 Jun (TANJUG) -- At its session today, the Presidency of the Socialist Autonomous Province of Kosovo drew attention to enormous economic losses in the province and called for radical measures to have them eliminated. Last year alone 138 organizations of associated labor employing over 30,000 workers operated at a loss. These losses amount to 13.2 billion dinars. The biggest loss-making enterprises are in the manufacturing industry, mining and agriculture. The assessment was made that the work collectives do not do any in-depth studies as to the cause of their losses, while some avoid studies deliberately so as to not take their own personal responsibility. Management structures within those collectives continue to be indolent and the improvement programs merely divide the losses among the society as a whole.

MONTENEGRO LC BODY SETS OUT TASKS, GOALS

[S. Vukasinovic report]

[Excerpts] Titograd, 11 June -- At its first working session held today, the Montenegro LC Central Committee (Miljan Radovic was presiding) adopted its 1-year work plan.

The opening words of Savo Sekaric, secretary of the Montenegro LC Central Committee Presidium, are the essence of the discussion and conclusions:

"Our prime objective is to change the state of things with which we are not satisfied by having fewer talks, meetings, and conclusions and by undertaking more concrete actions."

"We must realize that this will be neither easy or simple. Due to the big problems and differences in opinions even the smallest positive steps require long and patient work, exceptional efforts, and sacrifices. This is why it is a special responsibility of the Central Committee to continuously encourage and direct the activities of the basic organization of the LC in communes toward concrete political work among the working people and citizens," said Sekaric.

Talking about current socioeconomic relations in the republic, Sekaric pointed out that they are very complex.

Without Hesitation

According to Sekaric, the obligations of the Central Committee in the forthcoming year are the further building and development of socialist self-management and socioeconomic relations, and of the political system of socialist self-management.

NAGY ON 'POSITIVE ELEMENTS' OF NATO PROPOSALS

LD191635 Budapest MTI in English 1518 GMT 19 Jun 86

[Text] Budapest, June 19 (MTI) -- The government and people of the Hungarian People's Republic are taking an active part in all endeavours aimed at disarmament, Ambassador Janos Nagy, head of the Hungarian delegation, stressed at the Thursday session of the Vienna talks on Mutual Reduction of Forces and Armaments in central Europe. The special status of Hungary in the Vienna talks does not mean that this country is a passive observer as the success of talks and the improvement of East-West relations comply with our national interests and endeavours. The ambassador said that the Vienna talks continued this year in a promising way. The latest proposal of the NATO countries included some positive elements related to the framework of the socialist countries created an opportunity for starting the concrete formulation of the agreement. However, the NATO reaction to the Warsaw Treaty proposal has not justified the hopes as the Western proposals envisaged an ever decreasing cut in armed forces, left the reduction of armament out of consideration, and raised unreal demands for verification. The head of the Hungarian delegation outlined the proposals approved in the recent Budapest session of the Warsaw Treaty Political Consultative Committee stressing that the implementation of the proposals could cut armed forces in Europe by a quarter, a million troops by the early 1990s, and reduction could continue later. The Warsaw Treaty proposes an effective scheme of verification, based upon national technical means and international rules, including on-site control. On the basis of the highly flexible position of the Warsaw Treaty talks could be held on an agreement either in the second phase of the Stockholm conference, or in a new forum with the involvement of the European states, the United States and Canada, or by extending the mandate of the Vienna consultation and extending the range of participants.

POLISH ENVOY URGES 'WILL FOR COMPROMISE'

[By PAP correspondent Tomasz Walat]

[Text] Stockholm, June 20 -- The Stockholm Conference on Confidence Building Measures, Security and Disarmament in Europe entered its concluding stage. Addressing the conference today, Polish representative Ambassador Wlodzimierz Konarski called attention to the fact that there was so little time left, that everyone should display the will for compromise. It is the only way to settle issues of dispute before the debates adjourn on September 19, he said. The NATO states still do not seem inclined to make necessary concessions as regards earlier proposals, demanding one-sided benefits in security. On the other hand, the conviction arises among West European states about the necessity to find a way out of the present impasse.

ALL-OUT EFFORT TO FULFILL PRODUCTION PLANS URGED

[Editorial: "All-Out Effort for Greater Achievements in the Fulfillment and Overfulfillment of Plans"]

[Excerpts] The overall industrial production plan for the 5-month period has been overfulfilled. More coal, electricity, ferro-chrome, ferro-nickel ore, copper wires and cables, engineering industry products, products of the chemical industry, more products of the light and food industry, and so forth, have been produced. The retail trade and services plan has also been overfulfilled, thus better supplying the people with a number of essential products, foodstuffs, and other articles, while the state budget income has been fulfilled according to plan. Greater efforts have been made by the working people in the agricultural sector to supply the market with more vegetables, milk, meat, and eggs.

The overall value of the method of mass actions by our working people was also evident in the construction of tobacco-drying stores, the advancement in the construction of irrigation projects with an extra capacity of thousands of hectares, and so forth; the value of the method of mass actions was also evident in the important action undertaken by the "Steel of the Party" Metallurgical Combine, the engineering industry, and various institutions in the utilization of new brands of domestically produced steels. The mass action of the Tirana working people in raising production efficiency in order to increase incomes over 85 million leks over and above the plan is also of considerable importance. The state of budget income for the 5-month period has been overfulfilled by 35 million leks.

This spirit of mobilization and action must be kept alight and must be raised to even higher levels in the period to come. The possibilities have existed and still exist for even greater achievements if the existing reserves and possibilities had been fully utilized. Struggling against complacency following the overall positive achievements, let us therefore uncover still unused reserves, shortcomings, and the partial failures observed here and there. The issue remains that of fulfilling the plans and the pledges as has been instructed by the recent plenums of the AWP Central Committee, doing this frontally in every unit of the economy, district, and branch, with regard to all economic and financial indicators.

The figures and achievements of the 5-month period show that work is not being carried out with the pace and sense of responsibility suggested by the 13th and 14th AWP Central Committee plenums by all producers, as well as the import-export organs of the Ministry of Foreign Trade. Increased export income therefore requires a more deft method and style on the part of the Ministry of Foreign Trade organs, daily control, as well as greater "pressure" on the producers in order to fufill and overfulfill the tasks.

GEGPRIFTY ENCOURAGES PEOPLE'S NEW MASS ACTION

AU151903 Tirana ZERI I POPULLIT in Albanian 6 Jun 86 p 2

[Article by Llambi Gegprifti, AWP Central Committee Politburo candidate member and chairman of the Executive Committee of Tirana Distict People's Council: "A mass Action of Great Value Born of and Dictated by the Revolutionary Energy of the Masses"]

[Excerpts] The communists and working people of Tirana Disrict have always initiated many mass actions and revolutionary movements which have been adopted and extended by the whole country.

In this way, under the leadership of the party organization, they strive to fulfill the valued directive of the AWP Central Committee and of our glorious and unforgettable leader Comrade Enver Hoxha that Tirana should act as a "laboratory" for the work of the party throughout the country. The Mass actions which have been and will be launched, apart from their other purposes, aim to realize and bring to life this party injunction and demand.

In such an atmosphere of revolution, of ever more militant labor, and energetic work, new and powerful mass action has recently been mounted in Tirana to increase further efficiency in production.

The mass action was launched at the revolutionary moment when the working people of Tirana District, inspired by the decisions of the 13th and 14th Plenums of the AWP Central Committee and by the directives and counsels of Comrade Ramiz Alia, had achieved a high standard of mobilization, enthusiasm and revolutionary zeal in their labor, which expresed itself in the good economic and financial results for the 4-month period, when, for example, the 125 enterprises of the district realized and exceeded their planned targets. However, studies carried out in every production center and in the sections of the executive committee of the district people's council have reached the conclusion that within particular enterprises and sectors there are still failures to fulfill the plan, and major unused reserves and opportunities that must be exploited without fail.

At the 14th Plenum of th AWP Central Committee, Comrade Ramiz Alia stressed that "our achievements and successes testify to unexploited opportunities, and to the important part played by subjective factors, and this gives us the right to demand more from all those who have not completely reached their targets." Bearing this directive in mind, and confidently evaluating the results for the 4-month period, and also considering demands for the intensification of the revolutionary movement to become "standard-bearers in the implementation of the teachings of Comrade Enver Hoxha," the plenum of the AWP district committee, after analyzing the experience gained from this movement, decided that the working people of Tirana district under the leadership of the party organizations and within the framework of this movement should unfurl the flag of a new revolutionary mass action.

The fundamental aim of this mass action is the further increase of economic efficiency in production, with the object of achieving an accumulation of more than 80 million leks and an increase in budget income of 85 million leks above the plan before the end of the year.

So, for example, planned economic gain in industrial production will rise by 1.2 to 1.5 percent, the national income of the district will rise by 3 to 3.5 percent, and the social sector income by 4.6 to 4.9 percent above the plan. Industrial production costs, and the costs of construction, services, and freight transport, will be reduced by 0.4 to 0.5 percent.

Why is this mass action so valuable?

Primarily, the political importance of this mass action lies in its direct contribution to the heroic struggle of the party and our people to confront successfully the severe pressure of the imperialist-revisionist encirclement and blockade. The problem of economic efficiency, which is the immediate task of this mass action, directly concerns the construction and defense of socialism, relying entirely upon our own strengths, without assistance or credit from abroad.

RUDE PROVO DENIES PERSECUTION OF GYPSIES

[Jaruslav Kojzar commentary: "Such Are the Facts"]

[Excerpts] In mid-May, REUTER published a report stressing that "representatives of the Romanies" had called on Pope John Paul II and the Roman Catholic Church to protect the ethnic group of gypsies against poverty, persecution, and hostility. "We need the support of the pope," the chairman of the International Gypsy Council (IGC) reportedly said, because "in Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Spain, and Portugal, the life of the Romanies is characterized by extreme poverty, illiteracy, high mortality among children, and chronic unemployment." In Eastern Europe, discrimination has reportedly "frequently reached the level of state-organized persecution."

This was not the first statement of this kind. At the beginning of January, Rajko Djuric, secretary of the "World Gypsy Organization," told the AFP correspondent in Belgrade about the horrors of gypsy life in Czechoslovakia, including the "forced sterilization of women." On 2 June, a former Czechoslovak historian (!), one who lives in the West today and receives his salary from the CIA, let himself be heard. We allegedly "thwart the gypsies' cultural life" by resettling them from their "traditional" dwellings and "liquidating habitats in which they had lived for centuries," which demonstrates our "inability to deal with specific questions of the autonomy, life, language, and culture of the gypsy populace in a democratic way. We "disperse them" give them apartments, and "force" them to learn how to write, read, and calculate. How appalling! A gypsy living in dirt, in a house slapped together out of mud, in a settlement without any hygiene, at the end of civilization... how colorful.

I do not know how gypsy citizens live in countries in which, according to IGC Chairman Romani Rose, the situation is better. However, as far as the situation in our country is concerned, we strive for their unforced integration into the life of society. They enjoy the same rights as all other Czechoslovak citizens -- the rights to work, to health and social care, to education, and to rest after work.

The care rendered by the state to raise their cultural and living standards is considerable. In some localities the commisions of district national committees dealing specifically with these issues no longer have much work to do. In other localities, we are only at the beginning of the road. This is logical. It has not been easy, on either side, to change the way of thinking inherited from capitalism which doomed the gypsy to live a life at the very margin of society and did not give him the chance for different development. In some places this way of thinking inevitably persists. But we are advancing step by step and neither the gentlemen of the ICG, nor anyone else -- no one who is out to destablize our society, no matter what "arguments" he uses and what name of a group of people he brandishes in this endeavor will prevent this.

HONECKER THANKS DIPLOMATS FOR CONGRATULATIONS

LD201654 East Berlin NEUES DEUTSCHLAND in German 21-22 Jun 86

[Will for Understanding Is the Dictate of the Present - headline]

[Text] Mr Doyen, mesdames, messieurs, ambassadors, charges d'affaires, comrades, and friends, I thank you most cordially for your friendly congratulations on my reelection as chairman of the CDR Council of State and on the election of the other members of the Council of State. You are right in assuming that, in the future as in the past, I will, in every respect, devote my attention to the peaceful development of relations between our states and peoples. This striving expresses the realization that in the nuclear age the thesis of the German military theoretician Clausewitz that war is the continuation of politics by other means is no longer valid. In a nuclear inferno there would be neither victor nor vanquished.

For the GDR, I can say that since its founding it has pursued a foreign policy curse of peaceful coexistence of states with different social systems, for which there is no reasonable alternative. We are guided, as noted at the 11th SED Congress, by the fact that peace is the basis of mankind's future, and we are working with all our strength for that. In this century two world wars have started from German soil. We know the destructive power of modern weapons. Peace is our most important concern.

In the present international situation, which is burdened by tensions and dangers, the question of the fate of mankind is posed with great acuteness. We are also deeply convinced that with the awareness of the dangers, the determination of the forces of reason and responsibility to avert a nuclear inferno and contributing to security and detente is also growing. Such collaboration can bring about a change for the better in international relations. We attach the greatest importance to deeds for peace on earth and in space, to an active policy of peaceful coexistence, and to an intensive political dialogue ad flourishing cooperation of all states.

In our eyes nothing is more urgent than effective steps for arms limitation and disarmament. In the center of Europe especially, on the dividing line between the two social systems and military alliances, the arms arsenals have reached very threatening proportions. It is, therefore, time to reduce the mountains of weapons. The hopes of people throughout the world are linked with accords already reached on arms limitation and disarmament and their conscientious observance, with the Soviet-American meeting at the highest level in Geneva and with the various negotiating forums on questions of arms limitation and disarmament. The socialist states are in favor of an even lower level of strategic military balance. They believe that to seek security at the cost of others or to strive for military superiority in the nuclear age is highly dangerous. Security can only be reciprocal and for all.

And it is this that is the point of departure for the comprehensive and concrete proposals which the USSR and the other Warsaw Pact states have submitted, chiefly thanks to the dynamic policy of Mikhail Gorbachev. This is again shown by the Budapest appeal for the reduction of armed forces and conventional arms in Europe. The socialist states are hoping for a serious reception for their proposals and for a constructive reply that serves world peace and thus the peoples.

With its contribution to security and cooperation in Europe, the GDR is acting in accordance with its peace commitment to do everything possible to ensure that ony peace, and never again war, emanates from German soil. The socialist German state also needs and encourages equal cooperation with the states and peoples of all continents.

The decisions of the 11th SED Congress, the domestic and foreign policy of the GDR and the successes of its national economy prove that our state is always a predictable and reliable partner. Partnership requires the goodwill of all sides. The political will for understanding and cooperation, the will to safeguard human existence and to solve the world problems that worry mankind and the renunciation of confrontation -- these are the present dictates.

Mr Doyen, mesdames, messienrs, ambassadors, charges d'affares, comrades, and friends, as representatives of your states you have the change to contribute to a climate of reason and realism in international relations through your daily work on the expansion of relations. Rest assured that you will always have my support in this constructive endeavor to strengthen peaceful cooperation and mutual understanding.

I ask you to convey my best greetings to your heads of state. I wish you, ladies and gentlemen, comrades and friends, success in your responsible work and your families and colleagues well-being.

FDJ DELEGATION ARRIVES IN BEIJING FOR VISIT

LD191808 East Berlin ADN International Service in German 1146 GMT 19 Jun 86

The delegation was warmly welcomed at the airport by Song Defu, first secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Youth League and alternate member of the CPC Central Committee.

At their initial exchange of views, Eberhard Aurich and Song Defu stressed that the visit by the FDJ delegation opened up a new page in the traditional relations between the youth organizations of the two countries. The cooperation between the GDR and China, which is developing well in many fields, is an effective contribution to the safeguarding of peace. The partners in the talks agreed that the successful progress of socialism in both states primarily requires peaceful external conditions, to which the FDJ and the CYL can make a joint contribution.

This afternoon the delegation visited the Old Imperial Palace in the center of Beijing, and this evening Song Defu gave a dinner for the GDR guests.

Meets With PRC Youth League

LD210912 East Berlin ADN International Service in German 1737 GMT 20 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, 20 Jun (ADN) -- Official talks between the FDJ delegation headed by Eberhard Aurich, first secretary of the FDJ Central Council, and the Central Council of the PRC under the chairmanship of Song Defu, first secretary of the CYL Central Committee, commenced in Beijing on Friday. Eberhard Aurich recalled that Erich Honecker, at the 11th SED Congress, pointed to the pleasing development of relations between the GDR and the PRC in the political, economic, and cultural areas. The FDJ intends to add new successes to this good record with the development of its traditional relations with the CYL. For the GDR and its young people, the first secretary of the FDJ Central Council said, the preservation of peace is the most urgent task of today. The young generation is tackling this with great confidence. The USSR's approach to international issues, its comprehensive program for liberating the world from all nuclear weapons by the year 2000 and for the creation of a system of international security have opened up new circumstances in peace policy.

The first secretary of the FDJ Central Council briefed the CYL delegation about the Warsaw Pact's Budapest appeal. The appeal also proved the constructive urging of socialism toward a radical change in the world toward detente and disarmament. The worldwide forces of a coalition of common sense and realism are increasing.

Song Defu spoke about the CYL's activities within the country's "movement of the four modernizations" (agriculture, industry, national defense and science and technology). This modernization of China requires political-ideological work and help to link the economic revival of the PRC to the strengthening of life's socialist qualities. In order to accomplish this major objective, the first secretary of the CYL Central Committee said, a stable and peaceful world must be guaranteed in the long term. The CYL, which maintains relations with about 400 youth organizations from 104 countries, is determined, with all young people of the world, to make a fitting contribution towards the safeguarding of world peace.

In the morning, Eberhard Aurich, during a lecture before over 580 students of the political university of the Chinese youth of the CYL Central Committee, spoke about the FDJ's experiences in the communist education of the young in the GDR.

[Text] Magdeburg, 21 Jun (ADN) -- Harry Tisch, chairman of the FDGB National Executive, recieved for a talk in Magdeburg on Saturday a DGB delegation headed by Lothat Zimmermann, member of the National Executive. The trade unionists from the Federal Republic of Germany are in the GDR at the invitation of the FDGB on the occasion of the 21st workers' festival.

The 21st workers festival, Harry Tisch underlined, shows once more how in the GDR the people are free to develop all their talents and the commitment with which the workers are creating steadily better preconditions for their own creative performances in the socialist competition movement and for mastering scientific-technological progress. In this way they are manifesting their firm resolve to realize the resolutions of the 11th SED Congress and to support whole-heartedly the policy for the benefit of the people and preservation of peace.

The two sides said that in view of the dangerous worsening of the international situation, it is a priority task of the trade unions to step up thier activities for peace and disarmament. They emphasized the urgency to ban all nuclear tests.

Harry Tisch explained the comprehensive peace program which the leading representatives of the Warsaw Pact member states proposed in Budapest this month. He stressed that the FDGB, together with the trade unions of the socialist countries, actively supports the realization of those measures.

Lothar Zimmermann underlined that the DGB, at its 13th regular national congress in Hamburg, had welcomed and affirmed the Soviet Union's peace proposals. With the strength of its trade unions, the DGB seeks to help promote disarmament, detente and understanding. The two sides noted with satisfaction that bilateral relations between the FDGB and DGB are developing fruitfully.

POLITICAL SOLUTION REQUIRED FOR AFGHANISTAN

AU240808 Budapest MAGYAR HIRLAP in Hungarian 19 Jun 86 p 2

[First in a Series of Articles by Viktor Palfi: "Afghanistan After Ramadan (1) -- By Seeking National Reconciliation" -- Capitalized passages published in italics]

[Fxcerpts] The GOVERNMENT-CONTROLLED area in the country has increased only slightly. These areas are limited to bigger towns and their surroundings as well as important roads and some other regions. The rest are "BLANK SPOTS" on the map, where only occasional military actions can stop counter-revolutionary gangs plundering the area. However, these actions only last as long as the military is present, because as soon as they are ordered elsewhere the COUNTER-REVOLUTIONARIES MANAGE to SNEAK BACK from Pakistan.

Not even the Afghan Government's own army and THE LINITED MILITARY AID provided by the Soviet Union ARE ENOUGH TO SEAL OFF HERMETICALLY THE 2,000 KM LONG PAKISTAN BORDER.

The only possible way is a political solution. The external condition for this is and the interference in Afghan internal affairs. These actions are carried out against Afghanistan by some neighboring countries and the American imperialists in the background. Afghanistan must become an independent and nonaligned country safeguarded by INTERNATIONAL.GUARANTEES. This, of course, depends not only of the Afghan and the Soviet Governments, which adopted THIS OPINION from the beginning, but also on cooperation from the "other side" that HAS REFUSED it so far.

Similarly it is important TO WIPE OUT THE INTERNAL BASIS OF THE COUNTER REVOLUTION. During the first 2 years of the 1978 national democratic revolution the government of that time caused serious political demage, or it may be said that is MADE THE CAUSE OF SOCIALISM COMPROMISE ITSELF. The CORRECTED TURN in the leadership at the end of 1979 has done a lot to eliminate the distortions, but consequences must still be fought against.

Back in that period the counterrevolutionaries lifted the banner of "protecting Islam." However, this was not even true at that time, and IT IS EVEN LESS TRUE today, when the government has already FOUND A COMMON LANGUAGE with Moslem religious leaders. Whether the spirit of national reconciliation WILL STAND OR FALL DEPENDS ON its ability to take root in the country TO INCREASE THE MASS BASIS OF THE REVOLUTION. THERE ARE FAVORABLE CHANGES in this respect and you can read about them in subsequent articles.

COMMUNIQUE ON VISIT BY ISRAEL CP'S VILNER

LD231922 Budapest MTI in English 1725 GMT 23 Jun 86

["Meir Vilner -- Communique" -- MTI headline]

[Text] June 23 (MTI) -- A delegation of the Communist Party of Israel, headed by General Secretary Meir Vilner, paid a visit to Hungary on the invitation of the Central Committee of the Hungarian Socialist Workers' Party.

The secretary of the Israeli fraternal party met Janos Kadar, general secretary of the Hungarian Socialist Workers Party. Meir Vilner held talks with Matyas Szuros and Janos Berecz, secretaries of the Central Committee, and met Imre Pozsgay, general secretary of the Patriotic People's Front, and Tibor Baranyai, general secretary of the Central Council of Hungarian Trade Unions, members of the HSWP Central Committee. The parties briefed each other on the activity of their parties, discussed timely issues of the communist and workers movement, and surveyed current international events and ways for the further development of inter-party relations. The Hungarian party reconfirmed the HSWP's solidarity for the struggle of the Israeli Communists for a just lasting settlement of the Middle East conflict, for the peace of the region and for social progress. The Hungarian Communists uphold the struggle of the Communist Party of Israel against the policy of the Israeli ruling circles and the discrimination and oppression applied towards the Arab population of the country and the occupied territories. The representatives of the two parties expressed concern over the efforts of extremist imperialist circles to upset the military balance of power between the two alliance systems, to narrow relations among states with different social systems, and to restrict the progressive forces of the developing world. They declared support for the proposals of the Soviet Union and the Warsaw Treaty on the reduction of tension, on averting a nuclear war and on disarmament. The representatives of the Hungarian Socialist Workers' Party and the Communist party of Israel pointed out that a lasting peace in the Middle East can only be achieved through the comprehensive and just settlement of the crisis. This calls for the removal of the occupying Israeli troops from the territories taken in 1967, the recognition of the right of the Palestinian Arab people to self-determination and independent statehood, the recognition of the sovereign existence of the states in the region, including Israel, and the international guaranteeing of their security. The representatives of the two parties voiced anxiety over the attack and campaign against the Mediterranean countries launched on the pretext of fighting terrorism. They condemned all kinds of terrorism, stressing the dangers of state terrorism, and denounced the continued Isreali occupation in south Lebanon. The parties expressed their intention to promote by the means at their disposal the expansion of human and cultural relations between the two peoples. The representatives of the two parties noted with satisfaction the favourable development of their relations on the principle of interationalist cohesion. They agreed on the further improvement of cooperation. The talks, which were marked by a cordial comradely atmosphere, once again reflected the identity of views of principle between the two fraternal parties.

'CHANGED TONE' IN REAGAN'S SPEECH WELCOMED

[Krzysztof Wojna commentary]

[Text] Speaking in Glassboro on 19 June President Reagan departed from the usual tone of his anti-Soviet speeches. This time he adopted a positive attitude toward disarmament proposals put forward by the Soviet Union, albeit expressing reservations. It is conceivable, the President said, that there is an atmosphere favorable for concrete discussions. This is not much, but taking into consideration the everyday language used by the U.S. President when talking about East-West relations, it is hard not to notice the changed tone.

Does it mean anything? The fact is, the President decided to make the speech at this particular place, and he could not change it. Glassboro, a town midway between New York and Washington, is a symbol of detente in the history of U.S. -Soviet relations. In 1967 a meeting took place there between President Lyndon Johnson and Soviet Premier Aleksey Kosygin. If Ronald Reagan wished to make another tirade against the policy of the Soviet Union, he probably would have chosen a different local. There are symbols that should not be destroyed because it is hard to predict when they may become useful as points of reference for current political needs.

If we do not know the real intentions of the U.S. President -- though we can guess for the past 6 years of his presidency -- it is worth drawing attention to some circumstances concomitant with the speech. First, it coincided with a vote in the House of Representatives, which, by a majority of 256 votes to 145, demanded that the President not abandon the SALT II treaty, signed in Vienna in 1979 and due to expire on 31 December of this year. The voting in the House of Representatives was generally received as a strong blow because it proved that it is not true that all Americans allegedly support Ronald Reagan's policy. If we consider the House of Representatives as the representatives of the nation, the situation is the opposite.

Voices and opinion from Western capitals also leave no doubt that the U.S allies are not going to support the policy of confrontation in relations with the East. They are for negotiations and compromise. Subsequent NATO sessions give many examples of the U.S. partners' opposition to methods used by the Washington administration in response to Soviet readiness for objective dialogue.

Several days before Reagan's Glassboro speech, Mikhail Gorbachev delivered a report at the CPSU Central Committee Plenum. He spoke about readiness for a meeting with the U.S. President, but on the condition that such a meeting would bring concrete results. Ronald Reagan could not leave the Soviet leader's statement without reply. Hence, it is not certain whether the Glassboro speech was a result of external circumstances, which forced the U.S. President to change the tone, or the effect of more profound thoughts prompting the White House to reduce the distance between the present day and the expectations given to the world during the Geneva meeting of the leaders of the two great powers.

URBAN REVIEWS POLISH-U.S. RELATIONS FOR PRESS

LD242318 Warsaw PAP in English 2130 GMT 24 Jun 86

[Text] [No dateline as received] "No-one claims that the U.S. carries the main blame for what happened and is happening in Poland.

The U.S. is responsible for its policy on Poland, a hostile policy in recent years," Polish Government press spokesman Jerzy Urban told a news conference for foreign journalists here today. He went on:

"One must not place together our different statements and publications of different sense and meaning, and on that basis draw conclusions as to an alleged change of the programmatic line on the U.S., and especially alleged internal divergence within the Polish policy. There is no such divergence.

"The publication of a second volume of the 'white paper' does not signify anti-American actions. There is a broad public interest in Poland in the condition of the Polish-U.S. relations. It is necessary to inform the Polish public that no major changes took place in the U.S policy on Poland in the past two years since the publication of the first white paper covering the years 1980-83.

"We expect, too, that all those facts and documents put together should make also officials in the U.S. realize the need to change the policy on Poland," Urban told the conference.

"Poland's relations with the U.S. are worse than with any other state, which the book shows. The facts and information presented in it show that the blame for the present state of these relations falls on the American side," Urban went on.

"One of the chpaters of the publication describes the steps taken by Poland for the sake of better relations with the U.S. Unfortunately, those initiatives by the Polish side were not met with a constructive approach on the American side.

"The Polish stance remains unchanged, that is, we see the way to improved and normalized relations between Poland and the U.S as still open. But as the white paper says, a necessary pre-requisite for that will be the U.S. abandonment of its hitherto policy on Poland, no signs of which are as yet seen" the government spokesman said.

Additional Topics Covered

[By Stanislaw Filipczak and Piotr Turzanski]

[Text] Warsaw, June 24: President of the American Polonia Congress Alojzy Mazewski's letter to U.S. President Ronald Reagan, Radio Free Europe's allegations about radioactive contamination measurements in Poland, repercussions of the arrest of an American spy in Poland and Lech Walesa's planned visit to Italy are the leading topics of Polish Government spokesman Jerzy Urban's news conference for foreign journalists today.

The American Polonian press, Urban said, writes that the president of the American Polonia Congress, Mr. Alojzy Mazewski, sent a letter to the U.S. President Ronald Reagan, in connection with the Ryszard Kuklinski affair. Mazewski writes that the Polonia Congress and the Polish nation are profoundly shocked by the charges, formulated by representatives of the Polish authorities, that the American Administration was informed about the details of plans for a possible introduction of martial law but did not warn its friends from the leadership of "solidarnosc" in advance.

Alojzy Mazewski's letter also contains his negative opinions on the policies of the Polish authorities, typical of that activists, Urban continued.

In connection with the substance of Mazewski's letter which reflects the obvious anxiety of the American Polonia over the two-faced policy of the U.S. Government on Polish issues, I wish to state what follows: We invite Mr. Alojzy Mazewski to Poland so that he can acquaint himself with the situation in this country, about which he speaks out so frequently, on the spot. We are ready to provide the president of the Congress of American Polonia with an extensive and interesting programme of his stay and broad contacts with state authorities and representatives of social organizations, Urban said.

We propose, among other things, a talk with Interior Minister Czeslaw Kiszczak who would be ready to present the president of the American Polonia Congress with essential details of the former Colonel Kuklinski affair, Urban continued.

We think that the American Polonia Congress president's stay in Poland would help the American Polonia to acquire sound knowledge about modern Poland and would help Americans of Polish descent to better understand the events of 1981 and better evaluate the policy of the American Government towards Poland, said the spokesman.

Minister Urban also informed the journalists about ther charges levelled against Kuklinski during his trial and that the death sentence passed on Kuklinski became final and valid. Urban also said that the Council of State, to which the said case was advanced, did not grant clemency.

In connection with reports presented by Radio Free Europe on the measurements of radioactive contamination allegedly conducted in Cracow by research workers of the city's polytechnic late in April and early in May of this year Minister Urban, using concrete data, proved the absurdity of those reports and their nonscientific character.

"This is a successive example of Radio 'Free Europe' exploiting the Chernobyl tragedy to fan confusion, and a successive attempt to undermine the credibility of official data," the spokesman said.

Journalists present at today's conference devoted particular attention to the case of Bogdan Charyton, a U.S. spy arrested in Poland of late, and his ties with the 2nd political secretary of the United States' Embassy, Stephen Donald Mull, and the illegal underground opposition in Poland.

Minister Urban declared that he would not present any detailed information on the subject as the investigation was still under way. He rejected the suggestion presented in one of the questions to [passage indistinct] was allegedly linked in some way to the oncoming 10th PUWP Congress.

In a reference to Lech Walesa's application for passport to visit Italy Minister Urban said that it would be examined under normal procedure. He added, though, that persons testifying in ongoing investigations (which is the case with Lech Walesa) had to remain at the jurisdiction's disposal and this fact, undoubtedly, had an impact on the decisions of the passport organs as to whether grant or not grant a passport to a person.

"If Mr. Walesa applied for a passport believing that he would get it under a different procedure than every other citizen he showed here a nonrealistic evaluation of his position," Urban said.

"The UPI and REUTERS have reported that Lech Walesa had already inquired what his status would be if he resolved not to return to Poland," the spokesman added.

A group of experts for setting up the agricultural foundation and Deputy Finance Minister Stanislaw Budzynski held a meeting on June 19 at the Finance Ministry, Minister Urban declared. The meeting dealt with questions of taxation of the planned agricultural foundation. It was disclosed that the foundation will be exempt from the income tax in the first three years of its economic activity, provided that 50 percent of its income is spent on investments in Poland. "The announcement of this exemption means a far reaching financial preference vis-a-vis the agricultural foundation," Urban stressed.

Reviewing the effect of the Chernobyl accident on the situation in Polish tourist business Jerzy Urban said that between May and June of this year Polish travel agencies have recorded cancellations of a number of trips by tourists from capitalist states (all in all 35 thousand persons) which led to losses for Polish tourist business of 5 million U.S. dollars.

The government spokesman also said that official ceremonies commemorating Poznan events of June 1956 were envisaged to take place.

WARSAW RESIDENT ARRESTED, CHARGED WITH SPYING

AU231001 Warsaw TRYBUNA LUDU in Polish 21-22 June 86 p 2

[PAP: "A Spy for NATO Special Services Has Been Arrested"]

[Text] The counterintelligence service of the Ministry of Internal Affairs has detained 44-year-old Bogdan Charyton, a physiotherapist from Warsaw. He is accused of espionage activity for the benefit of the U.S. special services.

He commenced his intelligence cooperation in 1981, while staying abroad. He has admitted that during meetings with intelligence representatives he passed on a lot of important information on sociopolitical life in Poland and Poland's defense, even biographical data on selected persons.

After his return to Poland, B. Charyton met with Stephen Donald Mull, second secretary of political affairs at the U.S. Embassy in Warsaw, who has been revealed as a career employee of U.S. intelligence known for his "undiplomatic" interests and lively contacts with antistate opposition circles in Poland. The investigations have revealed that Charyton contacted 27-year-old Jacek Leskow, a mathematician from Wroclaw and formerly an energetic activist in the illegal "Students Solidarity Committee" and collaborator with the former Workers Defense Committee (KOR). Apart from various illegal publications, documents connected with S.D. Mull were found in the apartment of J. Leskow, who had applied to emigrate to the United States and was already promised a visa.

The investigations have also revealed that the U.S. diplomat used to be a guest of Father Henryk Jankowski, parish priest at the Church of Saint Brygida in Gdansk, and that he had met Bronislaw Gieremek, adviser to the former Solidarity organization.

The investigations office of the Ministry of Internal Affairs is conducting intensive investigations into B. Charyton's case. The Supreme Military Prosecutor's office, which is supervising the investigations, permitted the disclosure of personal details.

Activities Detailed

LD202015 Warsaw Television Service in Polish 1730 GMT 20 Jun 86

[Text] Counterintelligence officers and officers from the investigating office of the Ministry of Internal Affairs [MSW] have arrested Bogdan Charyton, a 44-year-old Warsaw resident. He is accused of spying for the U.S. special services.

[Begin recording; caption reads "Videotape provided by the MSW investigating office"] [Unidentified reporter] He was recruited for intelligence work by employees of services that operate under the cover of Canada's secret police.

[Charyton] During my stay in Canada, I had four meetings with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police service -- that is, with the secret police. I gave them a variety of information in answer to their questions.

[Reporter] That information concerned the sociopolitical situation and defense of our state. Bogdan Charyton's U.S. chiefs were also interested in the biographical details of some people employed in the country's authoritative and administrative bodies. They were collected by a career U.S. intelligence employee who is officially acting as the second secretary for political affairs at the U.S. Embassy in Warsaw.

[Charyton] I recognize this gentleman on this identification chart; he is Steve Mull.

[Reporter] Who is he?

[Charyton] He is an employee of the U.S. Embassy in Warsaw. I met him twice. The third meeting did not take place. The first meeting took place in an MPIK [A cafe at the International Press and Book Club]

[Reporter] In a club.

[Charyton] In an MPIK club at Zawisza Square. The next meeting took place in the Aleje Ujazdowskie [Warsaw street where many embassies and government offices are located] area at the Spatif [Association of Polish Stage and Film Actors] club.

[Reporter] Mr Mull's intelligence interests were very extensive. He expressed them particularly when contacting opponents of People's Poland, for example Jacek Leskow, 27, a Wroclaw mathematician and an activist in underground anti-state structures. Some time ago, he was a close collaborator in KOR. He was a member of the Independent Union of Students in 1980-81. He did not draw any conclusions from his own experience or history.

Results of a recent search of his apartment provide evidence of the manifestations of Leskow's current activity. Apart from various illegal publications printed by a publishing house of the so-called underground structures, documents were also discovered that are connected with Mull. It is also worth pointing out the fact the Jacek Leskow has been promised a U.S. visa. It is also known that he is seeking to emigrate to the United States. This is what Bogdan Charyton said during an interrogation about Steven Mull's interests.

[Charyton] He is interested in Poland, sir -- the whole underground movement; resistance, sir. These underground activities. During this meeting in the Spatif, sir, he told me about -- he had meetings with Walesa, Geremck, that professor; with Father Jankowski.

He also told me that he has lots of Polish friends. That means he has lots of Polish friends in Warsaw and, well, he also has contacts with them.

[Reporter] Bogdan Charyton's testimony is confirmed by photographs of Mull with Father Henryk Jankowski, parish priest of St Brygida in Gdansk, and with assistant professor Bronislaw Geremek, a former Solidarity adviser. He contacted Geremek quite often. As an aside, a question comes to mind. Did the meetings with the U.S. diplomat, trips together, have a certain incidental character? Were they planned from the start, and were they associated with Steve Mull's real activity in Poland? The answer to these questions is germane if only because of Geremek's planned trip to France, which Radio Free Europe devotes so much time to in its programs. So, Bogdan Charyton's detention simultaneously sheds light on several matters, allowing, by the way, the revelation of the real face of yet another U.S. diplomat whose mission in Poland had little to do with diplomacy. [end recording]

[Announcer] In the Bogdan Charyton case, the Ministry of Internal Affairs' investigations office is conducting an intensive investigation under the supervision of the Main Army Prosecutor's Office, which has assented to the use of videotape and the revelation of the personal details of the suspect.

Walesa Called for Evidence

AU241253 Paris AFP in English 1247 GMT 24 Jun 86

[Text] Warsaw, June 24 (AFP) -- Nobel peace prizewinner Lech Walesa was called in by Gdansk police Tuesday [24 June] kas a witness in an unspecified case, his wife Danuta told AFP.

The Solidarity leader's confessor, Father Henryk Jankowski, was questioned by Gdansk police Monday [23 June] over his links with an American diplomat in Warsaw, and was accused by Polish authorities of writing to a Polish spy working for the United States.

Mr. Walesa's summons to the police station coincides with an attack on him by Polish Deputy Interior Minister Wladyslaw Pozoga, who in Tuesday's edition of the government newspaper RZECZPOSPOLITA for the first time accused him implicitly of having links with the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency (CIA).

General Pozoga attacked the underground remnants of Solidarity calling them "a convenient cover for Western spy centers", especially those run by the CIA. He said underground Solidarity leaders and those who had fled to the West were financed byk the CIA to "destabilize" Poland, and that Mr. Walesa had the right to inspect the distribution of such funds.

Gen. Pozoga said there had been "incessant disagreements between Mr. Walesa and Zbigniew Bujak (the recently arrested underground Solidarity leader) on one hand and Solidarity's Brussels representative Jerzy Milewski on the other hand over the amount needed to finance (the union's) illegal activities in Poland."

The general also accused the underground union of planning "terrorist" actions and said Polish police had in the last 10 months arrested seven spies working for West Germany and the United States, without giving details.

[Paris AFP in English at 1754 GMT on 24 Jun adds: "Two other pro-Solidarity figures, meanwhile, faced police questioning here Tuesday for their connection with Mr. Bujak. They were Jack Kuron, a founder member of the KOR Committee for Workers' Self-Defense, and an adviser to Mr. Walesa, Professor Bronislaw Geremek. Solidarity's former national spokesman, Janusz Onyszkiewicz and another Walesa advisor, journalist Tadeusz Mazowiecki, have been called for interrogation on Wednesday, and Mr. Walesa faces further questioning on Thursday."]

Walesa Makes Statement

AU241528 Paris AFP in English 1515 GMT 24 Jun 86

[Excerpts] Warsaw, June 24 (AFP) -- Nobel Peace prizewinner Lech Walesa was questioned for three hours about his links with the recently-arrested underground chief of Solidarity, Zbigniew Bujak, and U.S. diplomat Stephen Mull, accused by the Polish authorities of spying, Mr Walesa told AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE afterward. Mr Walesa, who was questioned as a witness in an unspecified case, will be required to report to Gdansk police again on Friday [27 June]. One of Mr Walesa's advisors, Professor Bronislaw Geremek, was meanwhile interrogated Tuesday by police in Warsaw for the 12th time since Mr Bujak was arrested in Warsaw on May 31.

In a statement, Mr Walesa said he had "refused to reply" to all the police questions. He also attacked the "rigging of shady affairs" that he said was aimed at discrediting Solidarity officials.

Mr Mull, second secretary at the U.S. Embassy here, is accused of being the "contact" of a Polish "spy," Bogdan Charyton, whose arrest was announced last Friday [20 June]. In his statement, Mr Walesa described Mr Mull as a "friend" and said he himself would "continue to meet diplomats from different countries in the aim of serving Poland." Mr Walesa said in his statement that he still wants to take up Italian Foreign Minister Giulio Andreotti's invitation to go to Rome on July 2 for a peace congress.

"I want," he said, "to represent my country worthily down there by joining my voice to those of European politicians and the Secretary-General of the United Nations (Javier Perez de Cuellar.)"

But government spokesman Jerzy Urban hinted Tuesday at his weekly press conference that Mr Walesa would not be able to obtain a passport in time. Mr Walesa's presence in Poland was needed, Mr Urban said, for "current investigations," and in any case Mr Walesa had filed his passport application "too late."

BARYLA ADDRESSES SOCIAL ILLS AT SEJM SESSION

AU241024 Warsaw TRYBUNA LUDU in Polish 19 Jun 86 p 4

["Abridged version" of speech by PZPR Central Committee secretary and Sejm deputy Jozef Baryla at the 18 June Sejm session in Warsaw: "We will Establish New Moral Values and Patterns"]

[Text] Speaking on behalf of the PZPR Deputies Club, Deputy Jozef Baryla said the following, among other things:

The PZPR, initiator of an increased struggle for clean social relations and the rule of law, is actively cooperating with its allies in the ZSL and SD, as well as with Catholic and lay Christian associations and people with various views on the world.

At the same time I wish to stress my appreciation of the important role played by PRON in this work.

Today we can say that we already have behind us the first stage of what one may call ideological-conceptual and organizational activity. Today's Sejm session is opening, as it were, a second stage by assessing the degree to which the laws have been implemented. This stage should be marked by effectiveness, in other words, the aim to achieve concrete expected results and clear indicators.

Hence one may generally say that our present activity will be aimed at the following:

First, perpetuating positive values in the minds of society and eliminating negative and pathological phenomena;

Second, creating an effective social and legal barrier against the corrupting effect of pathological -- chiefly criminal -- phenomena causing great social harm; a universal conviction should be created wherby every violation of the law and every crime will carry inevitable penal consequences;

Third, the creation of new moral values and pattern firmly embedded in the stream of political and socioeconomic changes that are meeting the challenge of the 21st century.

Can we prove equal to these tasks? Of course we can! After all, we possess broad social support and the appropriate legislative and legal weapons. However, the problem is not merely to have laws that are perfect in theory, but also to apply them properly. As we know and as some earlier speakers have said, discipline in implementing the law is not always our strong point.

We are working on territory which we have reconnoitered; we have an increasingly better knowledge of how far we should apply social remedies, in other words, educational and rehabilitational work, and when we should resort to increased administrative-penal and economic pressure. In both cases there is a basic motive: to act consistently until visible results are achieved.

However, there are spheres where more time is needed in order to achieve lasting results. These include the breaking of various encrusted habits and achieving a socially desired state of awarness. Work in these spheres consists of the following:

-- efforts to achieve a high ethos of work, in other words a stubborn struggle against shoddy production and waste, mediocrity, bad organization, and low work discipline;

-- increasing personal sensitivity toward human affairs and rejecting soullessness, protectionism, favoritism, and corruption, as well as other types of ills;

-- caring for clean Polish customs and habits. We must combat everything that gives us a bad name in Poland and outside of it, and exposes us to moral and material losses. This also involves a concern for the Polish countryside and care for the environment and nature.

These affairs create a broad scope for institutional and social activity. In particular, there are new tasks to be faced by social -- and especially by youth -- organizations. We are also counting on the family, the educational influence of schools and workplaces, the mass media, and the cultural sphere.

Above all, it is necessary to consistently "expel liquor" from workplaces and clean city and village streets of loitering drunks. We support social initiatives in this sphere. In a situation where almost every category of crime is dominated by the effect of liquor and losses to the national economy caused by liquor consumption are enormous, one must conclude that our reserves of leniency are exhausted.

We also view the problem of drug addiction in full focus. We will step up appropriate action. This year Z2 billion have been allocated out of the state budget for this purpose.

The coming years also involve the elimination of social parasitism. The material sanctions against this will be increased and educational efforts will be strengthened with the aid of suitably organized work for the sake of the national economy. The first results of this are already visible.

Parasitism and alcoholism are related to hooliganism and vandalism.

This is what citizen Wladyslav Tumkiewicz from Warsaw wrote to the Central Committee: "...A lack of concern for public property; the destruction of sports facilities, railroad coaches, cars, buses, telephone booths, and staircases....I view all this with pain. Casual punishment of destroyers of public property does not help much. Only compelling perpetrators to fully repair the damange can bring a significant improvement."

While on the subject of letters, it is worth adding that working people point out in their letters that arrogance, soulessness, and a failure to respect the individual are reappearing in various bodies of state and economic adminstration. This is also pathology! We will firmly combat it. This involves, among other things, greater demands on the leadership cadres. As the citizen deputies know, the political basis for this is provided by the PZPR Politiburo resolution on party and state cadres policy adopted following the 25th Central Committee Plenum. In our opinion, periodic reviews of leadership cadres should also take into account their ability to shape proper interpersonal relations, ease conflict situations, and effectively oppose social pathology.

Activity aimed at perpetuating civic attitudes will also be developed. The point is to create respect toward the state and fellow citizens and honesty in the performance of one's constitutional duties, and to eliminate the bad image of Poles created by some of our pseudotourists abroad.

The house in which we all live must be calm, safe, and morally healthy. The following principle must prevail: "Nothing that is evil can be tolerated; nothing that harms the nation can remain unpunished."

Regarding efforts to strengthen the rule of law, purify social relations, and improve the nation's moral health as a long-term and irreversible process, I will permit myself to present a few proposals on behalf of the PZPR Deputies Club:

-- As the citizen deputies know, we possess a program and timetable of work in combating pathology covering the next 5 years. We suggest the principle whereby these documents should be assessed by the Sejm every year.

We suggest a similar procedure, perhaps at the same time, concerning the package of laws governing the struggle against social and economic pathology. The end result of this assessment would be supplementary conclusions and tasks for the following year.

-- The intellectual movement may play a significant role in effectively implementing socialist ethical norms and combating pathological phenomena. We observe a clear revival in this sphere, especially in the press and on radio and television. But we expect greater initiative from opinion-forming circles. We are counting on culture playing a broader role. No doubt Polish science can also supply valuable support.

-- Society's participation in the work of law enforcement bodies should also be expanded. This means raising the status of people's lawyers social jurisdiction, legal superintendents, and so on.

-- I also suggest greater cooperation along the lines of "family-school-workplace" because there are still unused possibilities here.

The problem of overcoming social anomalies and ills, of vital importance if the country is to develop, must constantly remain in our field of vision. As always, it is people who determine everything. We believe that combating pathology is an important part of the line of accord and struggle because it unites people in the face of danger, animates people who are indifferent or embroiled in internal conflict, restores hopes to those who are lost, and establishes a healthy countenance of interpersonal relations.

SEJM RESOLUTION ON ELIMINATING SOCIAL ILLS

["Abridged version" of Sejm resolution on combating social ills]

[Text] PAP -- The socialist system in People's Poland creates favorable conditions for shaping and strengthening society's moral health. The Sejm considers it necessary to undertake more resolute actions aimed at preventing all manifestations of social pathology and in the struggle against delinquency. Society is particularly troubled by the persistence of such deviant forms of behavior as drunkenness, social parasitism, drug abuse, and criminality, as well as dishonest attitudes toward work, waste, and poor management. The loosening of family bonds, and the insufficient influence of the home and the school on the upbringing of children contribute to the demoralization of a section of the younger generation.

The ongoing and tangible normalization of life in the country creates favorable conditions for limiting pathological phenomena and consolidating positive moral norms in relations between people. This goal is served by the laws passed by the Sejm out of profound concern for effectively combating the threats to social life. The following laws serve this goal in particular: the law on the treatment of those who shirk work, the law on conduct in cases involving minors, the law on combating speculation, the law on education in sobriety and the combating of alcoholism, the law on prevention of drug abuse, and the law on special criminal liability. An assessment of the implementation of these laws by Sejm organs indicates that these laws create appropriate conditions for preventing social ills and delinquency. Unfortunately, not all these laws are being consistently applied by the organs and institutions responsible for enforcing them. This is particularly true with respect to the law on education in sobriety and the combating of alcoholism, and the law on the treatment of those who shirk work.

The Sejm states that the actions hitherto undertaken concerning the creation of an appropriate attitude toward work have had a positive effect on the organization of work, work discipline, and the quality of work. However, there are still instances of waste, poor management, and the inefficient use of work time; phenomena that result in immeasurable economic and moral losses. Public indignation is especially great when people capable of performing work shirk work, and when income is derived from illegal and undetermining sources.

A tangible improvement is lacking in the reduction of drunkenness and alcoholism, this fundamental social danger, and drug abuse continues to threaten the health of young people. The persistence of phenomena such as the appropriation and destruction of public property, bribery, speculation, and tax and currency offences gives rise to justified public indignation.

The public is beginning to view the degradation of the natural environment and the resulting high social costs as a social ill.

Actions aimed at accelerating the struggle against social ills and delinquency are meeting with public support. The Sejm judges as positive the actions undertaken by the government to this end so far. However, the results obtained are insufficient. This makes it necessary to undertake resolute and more effective steps to secure the full and consistent implementation of the regulations contained in law. The Sejm approves the courses of action contained in the government program on the prevention and combating of social ills and delinquency over the years 1986-90. During the course of implementing the program and during legislative work, the government should take into account the suggestions and views expressed by citizens in the course of the Sejm election campaign and the opinions of Sejm commissions and voivodship teams of deputies. The Sejm advises that the government should present an annual report on the implementation of the program.

A brisk improvement in the situation cannot be affected by the work of the law protection organs alone. Intensified efforts on the part of the state authorities and law protection organs should be accompanied by social disapproval of social ills and violations of the law, along with the development of various forms of participation by citizens in the consolidation of law and order and social discipline. It is the duty of every social and vocational organization, every state institution, and every social milieu to be responsible for the observance of recognized ethical norms, for educational activities, and for combating social ills that lead to demoralization, deprivation, and delinquency. Passive expectation that social problems should be solved solely by the efforts of state organs ought to be replaced by active civic attitudes.

The Sejm appeals to all citizens, to all Poles for whom the future of their homeland is dear, to participate actively in the struggle against all manifestations of social ills in their own interest, in the interest of Polish families -- the young generation -- and in the interest of the entire nation.

SZALAJDA ASSESSES ECONOMIC GROWTH POTENTIAL

AU241151 Warsaw ZYCIE WARSZAWY in Polish 21-22 Jun 86 pp 1, 3

[Interview with Zbigniew Szalajda, deputy chairman of the PPR Council of Ministers, by Henryk Chadynski and Zdislaw Morawski -- date and place not given]

[Excerpts] [Chadynski, Morawski] One frequently hears it said that the rate at which industrial output has been growing in Poland during recent years is still too low, that the pace of economic development is below potential. Do you, as deputy premier with responsibility for the economy, share this point of view?

[Szalajda] Let us begin by explaning what is meant by the "rate is below potential" and by considering the factors that determine growth in industrial output and economic development. Potential consists of more than an existing stock of machines -- machines that are often not the most modern and have been well used -- or reserves of appropriately qualified cadres. To make full use of these factors that determine growth in output it is necessary to provide an appropriate supply of raw materials and the continuous flow of production techniques.

Both these matters are connected to a great extent with the country's ability to import; and this, as we know, is very limited.

Bearing this in mind and assessing current industrial production results, there are no grounds for describing these results as being at variance with actual potential. In analysing the tempo of economic development during recent years it is important to consider what we take as our reference point. Conditioning factors have arisen as a result of certain processes taking place in the world over which we have no control; these factors have been shaping the situation in which our country has found itself for a number of years. We must assess our potential in light of the conditions that arise in this new situation. So the years 1980-81 should not be taken as our reference point.

Viewing the matter realistically, we can formulate appropriate suggestions or critically assess achievements without succumbing to needless and unproductive frustration.

[Chadynski, Morawski] To what extent do you share the critical views of the state of the economy expressed during precongress discussion?

[Szalajda] Unfortunately, there are still many phenomena occurring in the economy that provoke justified criticism. Certain economic mechanisms continue to be weak, in particular those that ought to regulate market equilibrium and the inflation rate. We have not succeeded so far in making the resources allocated to an enterprise for pay dependent on results, or in making employees' levels of pay dependent on results, or in making employees' levels of pay dependent on an enterprise's financial position and productivity levels. Most enterprises are engaged in a daily struggle with serious supply problems. Our economy is still not innovative enough as a result of both a limited flow of new solutions from scientific research centers and the insufficient interest displayed in these matters by economic units. Poor-quality products are a frequent phenomenon.

However, I do not regard total criticism of the state of our economy as justified. As I have already said, we have gone a long way, in a positive sense, from the critical level of the 1980-81 period. Significant increases in output and national income, the attainment of equilibrium in many sectors of the market, enterprises adjusting to limitations on imports, a surplus trade balance with freely convertible currencies [as published] countries — these are some of the unequivocally positive features of the current state of our economy.

[Chadynski, Morawski] Why has declaring badly run enterprises bankrupt not become a natural ally of the process of restructuring the economy? Why do we frequently try to reinvigorate poorly run enterprises artifically?

[Szalajda] I admit that we are displaying weakness and ineffectiveness in this area. But contrary to what is generally thought, this is a very complicated and difficult matter. It is not always a case of protecting certain badly run enterprises but of preserving production of certain articles that are indispensable for the functioning of the economy as well as for the market, articles that cannot be replaced by imported items on account of our payments position.

[Chadynski, Morawski] You were recently in the FRG, Austria, and Italy. Do these visit's herald the expansion of our cooperation with these countries, what benefits will these visits bring our economy?

[Szalajda] I must draw attention to one fundamental factor determining the development of our economic potential. In many cases, cooperation with the highly developed countries of the West can be of benefit to us in this area.

We also conducted talks on the possibility of firms in the FRC, Austria, and Italy participating in the expansion of cooperation through the development of interplant cooperation and specialization. We also talked about importing new equipment and technology.

WOZNIAK VIEWS CONGRESS THESES ON ECONOMY

[Interview given by Marian Wozniak, PZPR Politburo member and Central Committee secretary, to Krzysztof Krauss and Marek Szymanski: "Conditions for Accelerating Progress" -- date and place not given]

[Excerpts] [Krauss, Szymanski] The discussion on the congress theses has been focused mainly on intensifying our economic and social development, changes in the economic structure, and the mechanism of economic reform...

[Wozniak] This is true, but there have been three ways in which our proposals have been commented on. First, some people think the congress theses and program are too limited in scope. Second, some think the congress theses are realistic. Third, some take the view that the theses are realistic, but that it will require enormous efforts to implement them. I think that the third way is the most convincing.

The discussion has clearly shown that our people expect positive changes in their daily lives. Our theses state that much can really be changed, but that we must make real efforts to this end.

[Krauss, Szymanski] What about conflicting views on the economic reform? After all, almost everyone wants more independence, just evaluations of efforts, and just rewards for efforts...

[Wozniak] This is true. The economic reform means that our conditions will become better, but that we must think independently, make independent decisions in all sectors of the economy, and assume responsibility for them. The most important thing in this connection is that we work more productively and effectively. It goes without saying that the reform also means that we must continue to increase our economic commitments and that enterprises and the people must be able to cope with them. The difficulty is that this is the task for the effective, average, and poor performers. The later must improve their performance. There are many other examples of such attitudes...

[Krauss, Szymanski] What about the economic errors committed by the state and its administration?

[Wozniak] I would like to be properly understood and will discuss this issue at length. Many economic customs and types of social behavior continue to hinder the effective performance of the economy. Quite a few enterprises apply double standards of behavior. On the one hand, managers devise correct general tasks which they think should be urgently accomplished. But when these tasks have to be accomplished by their own enterprises they assume absolutely different positions at times.

Parochialism and parochial interests still exert a great influence on the conduct of many enterprises. We all know that fiscal-economic mechanisms, the systems of management, and organizational structures are expected to ensure that public interests go hand in hand with the interests of enterprises. However, no fiscal-economic mechanism can function by itself. It must always be activated by people.

This goes without saying and means that advantage will be taken of the present fiscal-economic mechanism in order to promote parachial interests.

Let me therefore state clearly that the three S's -- self-management, self-dependence, and self-financing -- should be reinforced by a fourth element: The intervention of the state, which is able to modify the performance of the economy in such a way that the enterprises' interests do not damage the interests of the people.

I take the view that we should not be afraid of the state's intervention in our socioeconomic life, but what we must do is defend ourselves against erroneous administrative decisions. We should be sensitive to the criticism leveled at the performance of the center of power and make the necessary changes in this regard. This can be done by the Sejm and the social bodies sharing in the running of the state. The party has already assumed a clear position on this issue.

[Krauss, Szymanski] This means that what we call the social factor can be instrumental in this and that the primary role belongs to the party and its basic organizations...

[Wozniak] I have already said that economic mechanisms are not and cannot be perfect devices and cannot act by themselves. That is why the attitude and conduct of people, and especially of the party, are so important. In enterprises the party should promote progress, speed up production, defend social interests, and influence people's attitudes toward issues such as the motivational system of wages and rewards for honest work, not bonuses for absenteeism. The party in enterprises should back up the managing cadre in all the measures to promote the interests of the state and the people.

The purpose of the congress theses is to create the necessary fabric for the formulation of the 10th party congress resolution. This is their role. I am fully convinced that, having been enriched by the congress discussion, the congress theses have fully met the hopes expected of them.

["P.M.P."-signed report: "A New Voice of Polish Catholicism; The Reasons for the Publication of ZNAKI CZASU in Vienna"]

[Excerpt] Vienna -- It is not by chance that the new Polish periodical ZNAKI CZASU (SIGNS OF THE TIMES) has come into being in neutral Austria. It is meant to serve as the voice of Polish Catholicism in the West, free from censorship and restraints but with the moral and material backing of the primate, Cardinal Jozef Glemp. "As Catholics, we are not Marxists nor advocates of collectivism but we accept the existence of the current Polish state and do not wish to inflict harm on it," says editor-in-chief Andrzej Micewski, who has settled down in Vienna for 3 years for the time being. He refers to the role of the church as the one social force that, since the disbandment of Solidarity, has taken care to prevent the tensions within public opinion from resulting in bloodshed, in a national tragedy.

ZEMLJARIC ADDRESSES SFRY ASSEMBLY 23 JUN

[Text] Belgrade, 23 Jun (TANJUG) -- Proceeding from the completely unfavorable developments in the distribution of revenue and income, especially from the growth of personal income unrelated to labor productivity, the Federal Executive Council (FEC) proposes to adopt a law that will impose a temporary ban on the use of a portion of social resources for personal income, for the joint expenditure of the workers, and for certain types of business expenditures this year.

It is not the objective of the law to introduce an administrative regulation of relations in the allocation of revenue and in the distribution of resources for personal income, and especially not to freeze it. This, among other things, was said by Janez Zemljaric, the vice president of the FEC, in his report to the delegates of both chambers of the Yugoslav Assembly on the current economic situation and on the measures for the attainment of the development objectives for this year.

The basic objective, he added, is to bring down the growth of personal income this year to the level envisaged by the resolution and to ensure the implementation of the agreed policy in this area. According to the draft of this law, net personal income can be allocated on the basis of the attained results of work and business activity and also on the basis of the agreed proportions between the income per worker and of accumulation in relation to the average use of resources. In order to maintain work motivation, it will be possible for the organizations of associated labor, which earn the revenue which is higher in relation to the work that had been invested and resources that had been used, and which in allocating net income attain a rate of accumulation that is higher in relation to the average use of resources compared with what is average for the economy of a republic or a province, to earn a higher gross personal income per worker compared with what is average for the economy in a republic, a province, or the country as a whole.

Before he presented to the delegates these and other measures proposed by the Federal Executive Council, Zemljaric said that the present economic situation was marked by an accelerated and uncontrolled rise in both prices and inflation. High inflation destroys the economic kmotivation of workers and economic entities, hinders exports and lends momentum to monopolist behavior and speculation. Through the measures of retail price increases, inflation reached 84 percent at the end of May. All exports, including those concerned with convertible currency, are also falling; as a direct consequence of this, imports, too, are decreasing. Between the beginning of the year and middle of June, according to the statistics, total commodity exports were even as much as 4 percent lower than in the same period last year, while the planned increase was 9 percent. Exports to the convertible currency area dropped by 2 percent, instead of increasing according to plan by 11.5 percent. At the same time, commodity imports also fell by 0.5 percent; imports of reproduction material fell by 4 percent. Zemljaric recalled that this year about $1 billion of principal and interest more than last year will fall due. All these aspects influence, in addition to slow affirmation and adaptation of the economy to new systemic solutions in this sphere, an increase in the trade deficit, endanger the implementation of the planned surplus in the current balance of payments and begin to cause serious disruptions in supplying the industrial production sector and in continuing to maintain the present positive rates of its growth.

Consumer demand and consumption are growing faster and exceeding the established frameworks and real material possibilities. Nominal increase of all aspects of consumption has substantially accelerated while the real increase, too, is considerably above the planned one. Personal incomes and allocations for general and joint consumption, as well as for joint consumption in organizations of associated labor, have more than doubled.

Disruptions in the country's entire financial system are also gaining momentum. The practice of acquiring and distributing the income above and beyond the real results of work and production and without regard for regular commodity and monetary trends is spreading. Thus, for instance, the negative difference between the income acquired and allocated in the first quarter of last year amounted to 102.5 billion dinars; in the same period this year it reached the figure of 254 billion. At the same time, losses not made good are increasing and the practice of making them a burden on the whole of society is spreading; new fictitious accounts and unsubstantiated credits are being created; the channels of money substitutes are widening; the practice of not meeting financial obligations as well as lack of financial discipline is growing.

Bearing in mind such economic trends, their increasingly unfavorable tendencies, and the exacerbation of the social situation, the FEC's assessment is that to continue such economic trends could lead the country into an even graver socioeconomic and social and political crisis, seriously endanger the implementation of the entire development strategy in the current medium-term plan period as well as the implementation of the normalization program of Yugoslavia's foreign economic position, Zemljaric went on to stress.

In cooperation with a number of scientific workers and economists from organizations of associated labor, the FEC has prepared and proposed to the SFRY Assembly to adopt by urgent procedure, that is, by guillotine, several laws and other measures whose consistent implementation will put an end to, halt, and reverse the negative tendencies in economic trends. A number of measures have been passed within the FEC jurisdiction, while others will be adopted by other relevant federal organizations.

Janez Zemljaric informed the delegates that, in the FEC's view, the proposed measures will, nevertheless, lead to the realization of all the resolution's objectives since the shortfalls in the period since January have been so substantial that it would be almost impossible to rectify the situation, particularly in the sphere of foreign economic relations and in curbing inflation. However, he added, by implementing the proposed measures, we would not have to reduce the number of goals and tasks as set by the resolution.

Although some of the proposed measures that we have been forced to take could be described as administrative, the FEC's basic stand is that only economic measures and market criteria could produce long-term results. Have not voluntarism and the refusal to acknowledge the role of economic criteria and regulations taught us enough lessons?

Although under the SFRY Constitution the federation has the power, under certain circumstances, to pass necessary measures directly, the FEC has decided that, in the spirit of our system and by recognizing the rights and responsibilities of the republics and autonomous provinces, as many measures as possible should be passed by the republics and provinces themselves. If, however, they fail to draft and adopt on uniform basis and within the envisaged deadlines the necessary measures within their purview, these measures would have no substantial effect and the situation would become even more complex.

In that case the FEC will propose that the SFRY Assembly pass the measures designed to ensure that proposed anti-inflationary measures are implemented throughout the country comprehensively and consistently, Zemljaric stressed.

We have decided, he went on, that the measures and activities be prepared and implemented in three groups and stages which will altogether constitute a unique program of coordinated and consistent measures and of coordinated and comprehensive activity. These will enable us to emerge from the crisis and to implement the long-term program of economic stabilization more efficiently.

The first group of measures, to be passed today and over the next few days, is designed to halt and redirect the unfavorable economic trends. They are expected to stimulate production growth, in particular export-oriented production, to increase foreign currency inflow, to curb and subsequently reduce inflation, to decelerate the rise in all forms of consumption and to exert influence on the market in order to curb prices and protect the living standard of the population.

The second group of measures, whose implementation is to commence in July this year, comprises those measures which could not be prepared by today and which are designed to secure continuity in the implementation of the measures and activities passed today.

The third group of measures are of long-term character and are to take effect after the negative trends have been halted and redirected. They result from the long-term program of economic stabilization, will be of systemic and material character and will be incorporated in the terms of economic activity for 1987 and years to come.

Zemljaric went on to list the most important changes. These relate to the ways of stimulating production, enhancing the system of incentives to export, accelerating the influx of foreign currency into the country and, in addition, improving the country's balance of payment. There is to be a significant increase in the number of measures designed to stimulate production and export of industrial and agricultural products and export of transportation services. There will be an increase in the amount of import duty paid back when goods are exported again for several groups of products. The appropriate adjustment in the dinar exchange rate to the ratio between the domestic and foreign prices is to be carried out.

Dinar credits will be secured for the manufacturing and export of industrial and agricultural products.

Those organizations of associated labor which are capable of increasing their export-oriented production in a short space of time will be allowed to borrow abroad above the envisaged plan for 1986 in order to finance the import of necessary equipment.

By introducing more favorable import terms, customs duties and other import taxes, through advance payments and by increasing socially recognized reproduction needs and also through other forms of more favorable treatment and by allowing imports which will help to increase exports, we shall stimulate a faster spending of the foreign commodity credits available on export-oriented production.

Commercial banks will be allowed directly to use a share of the foreign currency earnings (about five per cent of the prescribed minimum) for financing the import of spare parts and for small adjustment in current accounts.

The material basis and, in particular, the working capital of the export-oriented production will be improved by exempting the stimulative funds from taxes and contributions to incomes and personal incomes. By implications, these funds cannot be redistributed between the productive sector and society.

In July we will propose solutions for accelerating the withdrawal of credit facilities granted by international financial organizations and their use for financing the import of equipment, raw materials and semi-manufactures for export-oriented production. We will reexamine and propose systematic solutions that will stimulate joint investment by foreign partners into our country and that will encourage our workers temporarily employed abroad to invest their foreign currency into specific small-business programs in the country.

To achieve the increase in foreign exchange earnings, it was proposed to considerably increase the network of duty-free shops, as well as shops for purchasing certain goods for foreign exchange to Yugoslav and foreign persons. A suggestion was also introduced to sell certain kinds of Yugoslav produced goods to foreign legal bodies, which will be exempt from a turnover tax.

Concrete measures that will improve the economic position of agricultural production were either adopted or proposed. The system of crediting agricultural production was changed. The funds from the primary source for this purpose will be used for funding the production cycle for 60 days after the cycle ends. After this, these funds will be withdrawn and allocated for the use of those involved in reproduction and final consumption and for market reserves of agricultural products. The transitory solutions for this year include the funding of producers for reserves intended for reproduction, as well as for that part of reserves which may not be taken by trade organization and organizations responsible for commodity reserves, that is, that part which will not be exported.

The conditions for funding agricultural production will be considerably more favorable. The growth of agriculture will be also stimulated via the second harvest and tax and credit concessions.

Limitations for exporting agricultural products in cases when there is no agreement between producers and buyers on the production of products are being abolished.

It has been proposed to form market reserves of five basic agricultural products (wheat, corn, edible oil, sugar and certain kinds of meat) at the level of the federation, republics, autonomous provinces, cities and municipalities. They should become one of the most important economic instruments of balancing out supply and demand of agricultural and food products and stabilizing the market and prices.

It has also been proposed to continue to pursue the moderate restrictive monetary-credit policy. At the present level of inflation, it is proposed to adapt and increase the money supply up to 60 percent, and the total dinar investments by banks to 52 percent. In the months to come these percentages will be gradually curtailed in line with the expected reduction in inflation.

At the same time, the FEC will propose to the SFRY Assembly, or adopt within the framework of its own jurisdiction, measures which will pinpoint, uncompromisingly close, and gradually eliminate all irregular sources and channels of money and its substitutes.

The proposal for internal banks being able to guarantee promissory notes only within the framework of the credit guarantee potential of business banks, with the exception of promisory notes on the basis of investments, as well as for organizations of associated labor being able to give guarantees to other beneficiaries of social resources only on condition that in the previous 6 months they had no unpaid obligations, is also along this line.

The policy of realistic interest rates will be continued until the end of 1986 through having the bank rate of the National Bank of Yugoslavia determined on the basis of the actual 3-month increase in manufacture's prices of industrial products and the expected increase of these prices in the next 4 months, and raised by one percentage point. After the 3 months, interest rates will be adapted to the rise in prices.

Differentiated, more favorable interest rates for preparing products for exports and for exporting them and even more favorable ones for agricultural production, including the production of fertilizers, will be established. The FEC also proposes to progressively decrease part of interest rates for certain agricultural produce.

It is proposed to place a limit on the highest interest rates on the use of bank resources for investments in certain priorities (exports, agriculture, market reserves) to the level of interest rates applied for these kinds of investments when money from the state money issue is used. Banks' interest rates on term deposits of citizens and the economy of 12 months will be coordinated at the level of the National Bank of Yugoslavia's bank rate while other interest rates will be determined by banks through self-managing agreements.

This method of determining the interest rates will remain in force until the end of the year. Other possible methods of applying the policy of real interest rates will also be studied in that period and a more lasting solution which would be introduced as early as 1987 proposed.

On the basis of the studied entire financial situation of the economy and the banks, special measures for financial consolidation -- in the more narrow sense -- of economic subjects and banks, are being prepared. They will be implemented in the second half of the year in order that as from 1 January 1987 a more efficient system of putting the organizations of associated labor on a sound basis and liquidating losses could be introduced. Substantial changes are also planned for the accounting system. The June package of measures proposes an urgent change of the law on the accounting system in order to eliminate the double cost burden of organizations of associated labor on the basis of interest rates, differences in the exchange rate, and re-valorization of the reserves. The implementation of financial discipline in the country will be substantially enhanced. Economic mechanisms will be proposed which will prevent the tolerance of unpaid debts, enhance the selectivity in the monetary-credit policy, define the minimum credit ability of economic subjects and banks, and thus define their ability to meet their debts.

In the shortest possible time the Federal Executive Council will put forward an additional proposal for determining that part of foreign credits created by flotations in foreign exchange rates in organizations of associated labor which would provide a basis for them to adopt a legal decision for their partial coverage in the interest of everybody in July this year.

As part of the measures for the financial consolidation, in July this year a proposal will also be advanced for the measures improving dinar liquidity, and practical solutions of some specific material problems in Montenegro and Macedonia and in the Socialist Autonomous Province of Kosovo, as well as for an agreement on special measures for stimulating the speediest possible development of the Socialist Autonomous Province of Kosovo.

The development and preparation of the more effective set of instruments and more modern tax system and our orientations of the appropriate tax policy represent one of the most complex and essential tasks which in Yugoslavia, that is, in all the republics and autonomous provinces, must be finished in the forthcoming months and which must be built into the policy of socioeconomic development for 1987.

The Federal Executive Council proposes that a special law should be introduced to temporarily ban the use of social funds for investments in construction projects which are used for non-economic and non-productive activities.

In 1987 new non-productive and non-economic investments cannot be started. For completion of already started projects, the users of social funds can this year use the funds to the amount used for these purposes in the republics and autonomous provinces in nominal amounts in 1984, increased by the rate of inflation calculated by retail prices in 1985.

The Federal Executive Council also proposes the adoption of the suggestion put forward to the assemblies of the socialist republics and autonomous provinces to ensure with laws that all incomes of sociopolitical communities and all self-managing communities of interest, which are realized in the period by 30 June 1986, and above the level of the resolution envisaged growth, should be set aside and directed toward the development of the export economy. Also, in the second half of the year, the republics and autonomous provinces should not be able to have social funds at their disposal which would be earmarked from the economy above the level set out in the framework of the resolution. In accordance with the established surplus, the rates of contribution and tax of the income of the organizations of associated labor and workers' personal income should be decreased. This suggestion also sets into motion the action that within the period of 3 months in all sociopolitical and self-managing communities of interest, a necessary revision should be carried out and rights decreased to the level which will be possible to cover financially within the scope of the resolution established possibilities for the growth of joint and general expenditure and that by the end of the year a rationalization of the existing network of institutions of general and joint expenditure should be carried out.

The suggestion is made to all sociopolitical communities that in 1986 they should not increase their budgets and that the necessary changes should be carried out within the framework of the budgets adopted at the end of last or the beginning of this year. It is also proposed that the assemblies of all sociopolitical and self-managing communities of interest this year do not introduce any new rights for the users of joint and general expenditure and prevent burdening the economy with new obligations.

Banks, other financial organizations, and insurance companies have been called upon to to reduce the amount of compensations and of premiums for their services.

Speaking about personal incomes, Zemljaric stressed that all beneficiaries of social resources who have been paying higher net personal incomes than laid down by the law must by the end of the year coordinate their policies with the criteria laid down in the proposed law.

A proposal will be made to the assemblies of the republics and provinces to pass laws that, through a uniform method will determine and appropriate that part of the income of organizations of associated labor which has been acquired through inflationary price rises. This measure will also have a preventive effect. Organizations will know beforehand the frameworks of price increases which they have to repsect in order not to become subject to the law calling for the appropriation of a part of their income.

Amendments and supplements to the law preventing monopolist behavior and disloyal competition on the Yugoslav market will be passed in July. They will define more clearly the economic criteria to identify monopolist behavior and make more efficient anti-monopolist activities possible.

Reducing the number of middle-men reduces the possibility of raising prices in the buying and selling of goods.

A special program of interventionary imports of consumer goods, which will eliminate monopolist behavior by individual Yugoslav manufacturers and ensure better supply of the market is also being prepared.

Organizations of associated labor in the sphere of power production and some branches of transportation will, in the future, set the prices of their products and services in line with the adopted joint elements laid down in the SFRY social plan for 1986-90. This will lead to a gradual elimination of disparities in the power industry and production of coal and natural gas. Prices in railway transportation are already formed in this way.

The protective prices of basic agricultural produce for 1986 established so far have been adjusted by about 34 percent. The aim of this change is to prevent the position of agriculture in the primary distribution from worsening and to ensure long-term conditions for a stable agricultural production. Agreement has been reached by relevant republican and provincial organs on the contract for an organized purchase of wheat of the 1986 harvest. According to this contract, the purchasing price will be 70 dinars per kilogram.

Speaking about the need for greater direct control over prices, Zemljaric stressed that organizations of associated labor will be able to continue to form independently the prices where the decrease in rises can be influenced more efficiently through other measures of the economic policy, where there is competition on the Yugoslav market and the possibility of interventionary imports, and where the trends do not depart significantly from the economic policy laid down for 1986. These products represent about 37 percent of the value of industrial production. Of the prices in the sphere of power production transportation which will be formed on the basis of the joint elements, 45 percent of the value of the industrial production realized are within the system of independent price formation.

Prices of approximately 42.2 percent of the value of industrial production will be in the system of giving preliminary notice. In this system, organizations of associated labor and other organizations must inform the Federal Institute for Prices of the planned increases in prices of their products and services within a period of 120 days before the new prices begin to be applied.

Approximately 6.3 percent of the value of industrial production will be in the system of preliminary agreement by the Federal Institute for Prices for price changes.

Prices which increased exceptionally this year, that is, considerasbly beyond the orientational parameters of the Federal Institute for prices, although by their economic position and in view of the situation on the market and the trends of the import-export prices they have mostly no justification for this, fall within the system of these temporary measures.

Prices of about 6.8 percent of the value of industrial production will be determined on the basis of the prescribed method of price formation. This refers above all to prices of basic food products. In order to alleviate the price increases and eliminate disparities in this sphere and thus also, unfortunately, the increase in citizens' cost of living, the FEC proposes that municipalities, republics and autonomous provinces compensate part of the difference in prices for wheat flour of the 850 type and bread made from this flour, edible oil, lard, certain types of fresh meat and milk.

The prices of crude oil and natural gas will be determined by FEC until the joint elements are adopted (total 7.4 percent of the value of industrial products).

The FEC also passed the decision on reversing the prices referring to some 4 percent of the value of the industrial production, to the level at which they were on 1 March 1986. At the same time, they become subject to the obligation to give preliminary notice to the Federal Institute for Prices in the period of 120 days. These prices increased the most this year, with least economic justification. With their rises serious disruptions have been created on the market, and it would therefore be unjustified not to apply and carry out this legislative measure.

Measures of direct price control, although only temporary, will not be painless for the economy, Zemljaric stressed. But the prices in the past few months were such as to make these measures necessary in order to create conditions in which the economic laws would operate more efficiently and enable the sound section of the economy to enjoy more normal conditions of the economic acitivity and more realistic assessment of results, in order that there be greater incentives for exports and reduce further onslaughts on the population's standard of living. The more efficiently these measures are implemented, the more quickly will conditions be created to abolish them and establish normal market conditions for the economy and thus regulate also this sphere of reproduction.

The economy is estimated to be disencumbered in the second half of this year by nearly a thousand billion dinars on the basis of reducing investments in the non-production and non-economic sphere, lowering the costs of interest rates, reducing the general and joint consumption to frameworks laid down by the resolution, curtailing contractual and other obligations, coordinating personal incomes, decreasing joint consumption in organizations of associated labor, cutting oil prices, customs duties and on the basis of other aspects, except for the effect of a lower price increase. At the same time, for this venture to succeed, it will be necessary to ensure in the first phase fresh resources for export incentives, covering the differnces in exchange rates, and progressively reducing interest rates, as well as incentives for graded seed and plant pesticides and formation of market reserves, Jane Zemljaric told the delegates of both chambers of the SFRY Assembly.

SLOVENE YOUTH REJECT ACCUSATIONS OF ISOLATIONISM

[Text] Ljubljana, 23 Jun (TANJUG) -- In a working agreement on the debates and conclusions of the recent 12th Yugoslav Socialist Youth Federation Congress, which was convened today by the Republican Conference of the Slovene Socialist Youth Federation, the assessments (both made at the congress itself and published in a section of the information media) that members of the congress delegation of Slovene youth wanted to divert the attention of delegates to marginal questions, were categorically rejected as arbitrary.

In the preparations for the republican and federal youth congress, Robert Cerne, the president of the Republican Conference of the Slovene Socialist Youth Federation stressed that Slovene youth had managed to expose all the fundamental questions of our sociopolitical and economic development, not in an abstract way but in detail according to individual economic segments. We believe, Cerne said, that Slovene youth have never before been so actively involved in the republican and federal congress preparations and debates. Perhaps, Cerne went on, we were not sufficiently clear in defining some stances concerning which it was impossible to establish a normal and cultural dialogue at the congress. If we now analyse the course of the congress and individual congress discussions, we cannot help but coming to the conclusion that at the congress the idea was expressed to too great an extent that solutions and ways out of the current social and economic crisis should be sought in old and antiguated interventions. All the subjective forces of our society need action unity in the earch for new and fresh solutions and not uniformity and ineffective monolithism.

In no way is Slovene youth the exponent of tendencies toward the isolation of the youth organization within republican frameworks and borders. We likewise reject the insinuation that at the congress we expressed the stances of the Slovene youth team of officials, as was imputed to us, in the discussion. In fact, anyone can obtain and read through the decisions of the Slovene youth congress. We are certainly not the supporters of the uncritical adoption "of Western ideas", the champions of separatism and the dynamiters of the federal congress with marginal questions, Robert Cerne stressed in his address which was unanimously supported by all those present. The federal congress again demonstrated that Yugoslav youth were not correctly informed about some of our proposals, ideas, and impulses because otherwise it doubtless would not have happened that assertions would even be heard at the congress that Slovene youth favors the abolition of the Yugoslav's People's Army, or rather, the setting up of republican armies.

It should be taken and accepted as reality, Robert Cerne concluded, that the discussions at the congress were a reflection of the current situation in our youth organization and in society as a whole. The factual situation should finally be accepted that we do not all think the same and that it is not a bad thing if things are like this. I believe that it has become clear to everybody that the youth organization should discuss everything, literally all the open questions of this society and that in discussing them they should make decisions and be allowed to conduct an open dialogue within their own sphere of organization as well. We cannot go on behaving as if all these questions and problems do not exist.

BORBA ON DEBATES ON NUCLEAR POWER PLANTS

[Darko Gorsek commentary: "Nuclear Nucleus"]

[Excerpts] The orientation for or against nuclear power plants has almost turned into its opposite. The topic has been banalized to such an extent by the opponents' one-side repetition of their arguments and the supporters' persistent evasions, that the first right move was actually the reaction of the SAWPY Federal Conference which organized a public debate about nuclear power plants within the strategy of developing energetics.

Almost 2 months have passed after this debate, dramatic months because of the Chernobyl radioactive cloud, ad nothing qualitatively new has been said, but the questions of our nuclear orientation have been increasingly turning into a nucleus of broad discontent with some past and also with possible future mistakes. The SFRY Presidency has adopted the standpoint that we cannot make decisions about the construction of nuclear power plants until we adopt a long-term program for the development of energetics and until an agreement on the joint development of the electric power generation industry is reached. The basic thing in both cases is above all to exercise care regarding the utilization of our own natural sources and to establish a complete program of saving all kinds of energy.

The time for debates is still to come, because there is at least 1 year left until the decision, 1 year after the beginning of international bids on 3 July, during which conditions and orientations will be examined. Further exchanges of views and arguments, like this one, are therefore welcome. After all, Branko Mikulic did not say anything differet when he addressed journalists recently, nor could one discern a qualitatively different tone uttered from congress rostrums.

If there is anything good in all this, itd is the assertion that this country must finally have a united energetic system, and that decisions about the utilization of electric power potentials cannot be made on the level of republican and provincial electric power generation industries only, and especially not by "interested investors." "The nucleus" -- the population's desire to know what is being planned and done on its behalf and therefore to its benefit or detriment -- should in any case be cherished, furthered, and taken into consideration with arguments and reasons in order to arrive at the best solutions in a democratic manner, and not only in the field of energetics.

LONGTIME PARTY MEMBER, CUCI, DIES OF CANCER

AU231658 Tirana ZERI I POPPULIT in Albanian 19 Jun 86 p 1

["Death of Comrade Gafur Cuci, AWP Central Committee Member -- Obituary"]

[Text] On 17 June 1986, Comrade Gafur Cuci, member of the AWP Central Committee, died after a serious illness (cancer).

Gafur was born on 24 January 1922 in the town of Gjirokaster. Under the influence of the progressive ideas of the time -- from a very young age, indeed from his schooldays-- he joined a communist group early in life. Like all young people, and the whole nation, he responded with hatred to the fascist occupation and soon became an active fighter in the War of National Liberation organized and led by our glorious party with Comrade Enver Hoxha at its head. Early in 1942 he was accepted as a member of the communist youth organization and in May 1943, following the call of the party, he joined the partisan ranks in the band of Rreze e Korces, later, in larger units, he was entrusted responsibility of a deputy commissar of a band, battalion, and brigade, and finally commissar of a division. With weapons in his hands as a partisan, and also in the political sphere, he fought until the complete liberation of the fatherland was achieved.

In recognition of his merits and revolutionary qualities, he was accepted as a member of the Albanian Communist Party (now the Party of Labor) in June 1943, and he maintained his membership with honor until the end of his life.

After, the liberation of the nation Gafur worked in responsible posts, in the ranks of the army and in sectors of the economy, becoming a deputy minister in the Ministry of Industry. Later he was entrusted with important duties in the apparatus of the AWP Central Committee.

In all the tasks entrusted to him, he served the cause of socialism with his entire strength, he was distinguished as an able organizer and manager and a devoted communist. For his work and loyalty to the party, he was elected a member of the AWP Central Committee at the 7th AWP Congress.

For his contribution before and after the War of National Liberation, the Presidium of the People's Assembly decorated Gafur Cuci with various medals and orders.

With the premature death of our Comrade Gafur Cuci, the party has lost a devoted member, a friend, and an unforgettable comrade-in-arms. His family has lost the person dearest to them.

ZIMBABWEAN-BULGARIAN COMMUNIQUE PUBLISHED

AU250902 Sofia RABOTNICHESKO DELO in Bulgarian 22 Jun 86 pp 1, 2

["Joint Communique on the Official visit to Bulgaria of Canaan Banana, President of the Republic of Zimbabwe"]

[Text] On the invitation of Todor Zhivkov, chairman of the State Council of the People's Republic of Bulgaria [PRB] Canaan Banana, president of the Republic of Zimbabwe, paid an offical visit to the PRB from 19 to 21 June 1986.

Canaan Banana laid a wreath at the Georgi Dimitrov Mausoleum and paid his respects at Georgi Dimitrov's tomb. The president of the Republic of Zimbabwe visited denotable sights in Sofia and Plovdiv.

Talks took place between Todor Zhivkov and Canaan Banana; they were held in a friendly atmosphere.

The chairman of the PRB State Council briefed the president of the Republic of Zimbabwe on the PRB's all-around success in building the developed socialist society and on the main tasks of the country's socioeconomic development, outlined by the 13th BCP Congress. Canaan Banana gave a briefing on the efforts being made by the people and government of the Republic of Zimbabwe for the progressive development of society along the road of socialism, as defined by the Second Zimbabwe African People's Union -- Patriotic Front Congress.

[Text] Prague June 25 (CTK) -- Czechoslovakia received with sympathy the anti-monarchic revolution in Iran, Czechoslovak Foreign Minister Bohuslav Chnoupek said this evening and appreciated Iran's anti-imperialist positions in the United Nations and the Non-Aligned Movement.

Speaking at a dinner he was giving for his Iranian colleague, 'Ali Akbar Velayati, he noted that the policy of imperialist and militarised forces, especially in the USA, has now taken the form of neoglobalism, as the recent aggression against Libya and threats against Iran and Syria have shown.

Together with our allies we are convinced that our aim to ensure peaceful coexistence of states having different social systems is realistic. Therefore we give much energy to building the foundations of a comprehensive system of international security, the Czechoslovak minister said.

He voiced the conviction that the possibilities exist to achieve political solutions in areas of conflicts and tension. This fully applies also to the Middle East crisis. Czechoslovakia regards an international conference attended by all sides concerned, including the Palestine Liberation Organization, the Soviet Union and the USA as such a solution. It supports all efforts which would lead to a halt of the actions of war between Iran and Iraq and install a just and honourable peace, Bohuslav Chnoupek said.

STROUGAL DELIVERS GOVERNMENT STATEMENT

[Text] Prague June 24 (CTK) -- The Czechoslovak Government program focuses attention above all on speeding up the country's socioeconomic development, Czechoslovak Premier Lubomir Strougal said here today.

Delivering a government statement at the joint meeting of the House of the People and House of Nations, the premier said the immediate task is to complete and approve the draft 8th Five-Year Plan for 1986-90, which will be submitted to the Federal Assembly in the second half of this year. He recalled the need to ensure the planned economic growth with the existing level of fuel, energy and material resources. He stressed the necessity of modernizing and re-structuring the production base, and speeding up scientific and technological progress, involving above all a long-term comprehensive program of electronization of the economy, development of the nuclear power industry, the food industry, boosting development of [words indistinct] rational use of natural resoursces and housing policy.

Speaking about indispensable structural changes in the economy, Lubomir Strougal said that in 1986-90 Czechoslovakia intends to further reduce the share of energy- and investment-intensive kinds of production -- coal industry, metallurgy and production of building materials, while boosting selected branches of the engineering industry, particularly electrical engineering; special branches of the chemical and pharmaceutical industries.

Structural changes in the fuel and energy complex will involve promoting the nuclear power industry. In 1990 nuclear power plants will account for 30 percent of the total electricity output, and for 50 percent in the year 2000. Referring to the latest accidents in nuclear power plants in some countries and to the experiences from Chernobyl, the premier stressed that "the government strictly and consistenitly follows all questions related to the safety of our nuclear power plants." He said he was convinced that the international community of states which develop the nuclear power industry will accept with understanding the Soviet proposals for an international exchange of experiences and information and for mutual aid in accidents. Czechoslovakia also supports the proposal for convening a conference to deal with these issues. "After a careful analysis of international experiences, we intend, in close cooperation with the USSR, to carry out measures aimed at increasing the quality of construction, the qualification of the personnel and the safe running of nuclear power plants," Premier Strougal said.

Dealing with improvement in the system of planning and management, Lubomir Strougal said that economic organizations wil have a wider scope for rational management as well as greater responsibility.

Socialist enterprise will be stimulated, the system of management will be simplified and modern forms of enterprise management will be given the green light. Criteria applied in the economically most advanced countries of the world must be applied also in the Czechoslovak economy, he said.

Speaking of social policy, the Czechoslovak premier said that the directives of the 17th Communist Party Congress to be implemented in the 8th Five-Year Plan period envisage a more rapid growth of wages through an increased rate of growth of the national income and labour productivity. He noted that proposals will be submitted for differentiated increases in old age pensions and such calculations of their amounts which would put a greater stress on merits at work. The Czechoslovak Federal Assembly will gradually submit proposals for increasing the living standard of young couples and families with several children. The extent of these and other social measures will depend on the results of the fulfillment of tasks of the 8th Five-Year Plan, Lubomir Strougal stressed and added that at least 480,000 flats will be constructed within this period and that measures will be taken to improve the living environment.

The Czechoslovak premier further said that the government plans a number of steps in the legislative sphere, the most important of which will be the preparations of a new constitution of the Czechoslovak Socialist Repubic, as laid down by the 17th Czechoslovak Communist Party Congress. The principles of peace policy from the fundamental and inseparable part of the general line of the Czechoslovak Communist Party and this line also determines the basic aim of the foreign policy of the Czechoslovak state, the Czechoslovak premier went on to say.

In this connection he stressed the extreme importance of the initiatives of the Soviet Union and the other socialist countries, including the appeal to members of NATO and all European countries made at the recent Budapest session of the Warsaw Treaty Political Consultative Committee.

"We are of the opinion that there exist realistic prerequisites and possibilities for attaining the necessary changes for the better in European and world affairs," Lubomir Strougal said and added that "it must be quite clear that, at the same time, we shall neglect nothing that could weaken our own defence capability."

Czechoslovakia wishes to continue its policy of good neighbourhood and cooperation with all states of the capitalist world, the Czechoslovak premier said and expressed the conviction that the possibilities of developing relations with these states are far from being exhausted. "However, this does not mean that we shall remain inactive in face of the acts of presssure, discrimination in trade, attempts to revise frontiers or seek revenge. Our concept is based on mutual respect, the principle of non-interference and inviolability of state sovereignty. We shall respect these principles also in bilateral cooperation at current and future European conferences."

The Czechoslovak premier further stressed that Czechoslovakia wants to maintain close relations with the developing countries which have set on the path of independent development. "Our sympathies and solidarity are traditionally on the side of countries with socialist orientation, on the side of actions fighting for their national liberation, against neocolonialism and racism, against the imperialist aggression, for the strengthening of political and economic independence, for social progress. Within our possibilties, we shall grant them further political, moral and material assistance," Czechoslovak Premier Lubomir Strougal said.

[Text] Stockholm, 25 Jun (ADN) -- After the meeting between Erich Honecker and Ingvar Carlsson, official talks between the two statesmen began at the Rosenbad Palace. Prime Minister Ingvar Carlsson first very warmly welcomed his guest to Sweden once again. He expressed his pleasure with the productive talks that the two statesmen embarked on 3 months ago. It is important to discuss international problems, as well as bilateral issues, he said. Ingvar Carlsson expressed the conviction that such a dialogue would further improve relations between the two countries.

The Swedish head of government assessed relations between Sweden and the GDR as extremely good in wide-ranging areas; the task is now to further expand them. Ingvar Carlsson added that today new areas of cooperation -- energy and environmental issues -- that are worth discussing are gaining importance. ANTI-NUCLEAR PROTESTS CRITICIZE GOVERNMENT POLICY

AU260950 Vienna KURIER in German 26 Jun 86 p 5

[Wolfgang Broer report]

[Text] The GDR head of state, Erich Honecker, is the first East block leader to consider abandoning nuclear power in his country possible.

Honecker, who has been in Sweden since Wednesday [25 June], "personally does not consider nuclear power to be the ultimate choice." In his country a vehement discussion about the consequences of Chernobyl has started.

Even before the head of state had revealed his doubts in public, 5,000 GDR citizens demanded a referendum on the further use of nuclear energy in a petition to the People's Chamber. They added harsh criticism: "In the socialist countries, particularly in the GDR, the real dangers of operating reactors were underestimated and played down by the media in an unprecedented way and withheld from public discussion."

These words reflect the very wide scope of the increased awareness in the GDR of environmental problems, so far, however, outside state and party, which are only reluctantly and slowly noting the ecological dangers. The citizens' petition mainly criticizes the fact that the GDR's economic policy is entirely directed at "extensive growth also in energy consumption" and at "exploitive use of resources."

The pioneer in the discussion about envirnonmental problems in the GDR is not the state "Society for Nature and the Environment" but mainly the Evangelical Church, the intelligentsia and the artists. As early as 1974, the Saxon Regional church founded a working group for environmental questions. The church also established in Wittenberg its own independent center for environmental research -- a unique institution in the East bloc -- which regularly publishes data about the environment. Very often they do not suit the government's purpose because they disturb the official window-dressing.

From the legal point of view the authorities has the ways and means to act against this with their "law for guaranteeing the classification of environmental data." But, apart from individual reprisals, the GDR authorities have not yet acted on a wide scale against the environmental intiatives of Christians. "This form of limited conflict between citizens' interests and state power is tolerated," assumes the "Socialist Eastern Europe Committee" in the FRG.

For the first time the GDR 5-year plan (1986-90) contains a chapter about environmental protection, but the chapter about energy policy is far more concrete: The percentage of electricity produced with nuclear power is to increase from 10 to 15 percent, the Greifswald nuclear power plant is to be expanded from 4 to 8 units, and the first 1,000-megawatt reactor in Stendal is to be put into operation in 1990.

Erich Honecker had other figures in mind: Only 3 percent of the GDR's energy demand is covered by nuclear power. For capitalist countries with a nuclear energy share of 40-60 percent it is "of course more difficult" to withdraw from nuclear power, he aid.

HONECKER SPEAKS AT AGRICULTURAL FAIR 21 JUN

AU260837 East Berlin NEUES DEUTSCHLAND in German 23 Jun 86 p 3

[Excerpt] Following an old tradition at the visit to the Agra 86 [agricultural fair] in Markkleeberg, after his tour of the exhibition on Saturday [21 June] Honecker again met with cooperative peasants, agricultural scientists, and local politicals.

Erich Honecker stated that he is deeply impressed by the tour of the agricultural exhibition. He said: In the past years we have confirmed that in our workers' and peasants' state, the peasants are gaining more and more importance due to their active participation in the political life of the GDR, and also due to their outstanding achievements.

One's workplace is a battleground for peace. The stronger socialism is, the safer peace is. We stated this at the 11th party congress. The party congress delegates visiting Agra 86 have agreed that the party congress adopted good resolution.

Erich Honecker then said that safeguarding peace was the question of all questions. All one's strength must be used to prevent a nuclear inferno. Mankind must survive. The far-reaching proposals of the Political Consultative Committee of the Warsaw Pact states also serve this aim. The resolutions of Budapest, Erich Honecker stated, are fully in line with the resolutions of our party congress.

I want to thank you cordially on behalf of the Central Committee of our party, the State Council, and the Council of Ministers for the great achievements of agriculture is developing in implementing the resolutions of our 11th party congress, Erich Honecker stated in conclusion. We are determined to implement them jointly. Long live our peasants and the scientists who work with them!

POZOGO ADDRESSES WESTERN INTERFERENCE

LD241036 Warsaw PAP in English 0645 GMT 24 Jun 86

[Text] Warsaw, June 23: Following is an abridged text of PAP's interview with Interior Vice-Minister Gen. Wladyslaw Pozoga.

Q: In an interview for POLITYKA weekly recently, Interior Minister Gen. Czeslaw Kiszczak unveiled various covert aspects of destructive anti-Polish activity by Western intelligence services in the year 1980-81. Could we go back to that topic?

A: Certainly. After so many years, one can speak more openly about some things, especially that in the meantime a number of Western statesmen have disclosed the secrets of such activities after leaving the political scene. For instance, Zbigniew Brzezinski, under Carter the head of the U.S. National Security Council which co-ordinates the work of America's entire intelligence and military complex and subversion apparatus, has disclosed that as early as 1978 he had worked out a plan of destablizing the internal situation in Poland.

Although only a very close circle of insiders had been given access to that document, we had fairly early known its key assumptions. They essentially boiled down to employing certain measures, at the disposal of the U.S. apparatus of power, with a view to bring on an evolution of the internal situation in Poland along a line that would fit long-range U.S. interests.

Another secret CIA document of that time elaborated the details of the strategy, among other things postulating to "keep up U.S. and international pressure on human rights and pluralism to encourage anti-regime activity by opposition groups. [No closing quotation mark received] The plan, the tactics was carried in effect with great consistence by means of such instruments as KSS/KOR [Social Self-Defense Committee/Committee for Workers' Defense], Movement for the Defense of Human and Civil Rights (Ropcio), Confederation for Independent Poland (KPN), Polish Independence Alliance, Young Poland Movement (RMP) and other such groups.

The basic objective was to "pluck out" Poland from the socialist block by leading to complete economic breakdown and chaos, and even deliberately allowing a situation in which human blood, Polish blood, could have been spilt.

(Interior Minister) Gen. Czeslaw Kiszczak has shed light on that (in his interview for POLITYKA) when he spoke of the CIA's withdrawal from Poland of Agent Kuklinski who had known for Polish Plans for the event of a martial law necessity, and when he elaborated on U.S. Administration's having kept silent on the fact of having such an agent and acquired the Polilsh plans.

U.S. disloyalty to its allies in the upper ranks of "Solidarity" had resulted in the first place from Washington's belief that introduction of martial law would not have gone smoothly and that clashes and spilling of blood were inevitable.

Q: But Brzezinski's plan failed, after all.

A: The authorities showed sufficient efficiency and society enough maturity. But this is not to say that those strategic concepts have been given up in the U.S., as the American policy on Poland countries to cherish hope that support for sowers of unrest can lead to fresh conflicts in Poland, and perhaps even something more serious.

Powers centres in NATO and especially in the U.S. continue to consider as a very important part of their policies on Poland the trend to destabilize the country's internal situation, moment conflicts, weaken the economy, and make life harder for the Poles.

That is faciliated by sanctions, fuelling up of the arms spiral, or extending secrecy over even those technologies which could serve the people. This segment of actions includes also attempts to instigate sabotage or even terrorist actions in most diverse forms as well as efforts aimed to hamper economic cooperation between the socialist states.

The economic policies are accompanied by a host of propaganda efforts aiming at indoctrination and ideological subversion.

This current of activities includes a sort of "patronage" and super-valuation of every one who is inclined to work for global U.S. interests here in Poland.

Increased intelligence operation and ideological subversion has to do in the first place with stepped up spy activity, a potential recruitment base for which are the half-a-million or so Poles who have stayed overdue in the West. Nearly half of them have gone through refugee camps. In exchange for Western stay permits, hostile intelligence services forced them to disclose information on Poland's defense, economy and policy.

They have been doing so alo to newcoming refugees and those willing to extend their stay in the West. In the years 1981-86, Polish counterintelligence has exposed more than 70 thousand instances of questionings of intelligence-gathering nature.

We know that those who have returned home after a so-called extended stay in the West includes ones who have been recruited by adversary intelligence services. Many of these people have voluntarily confessed before Polish authorities their ties with Western intelligence agencies, under a 1984 amnesty.

In recent time, more and more Poles returning from the West have told us of recruitment attempts they were subjected to. We try to reciprocate their confidence Those who have not turned themselves in are agents with particularly strong links with the adversary and those who believed in assertions of their supposed undetectability. These tend to be often disappointed.

The past ten months brought arrests of a series of foreign spies, including seven -- in the U.S. and FRG service -- of particular value to our adversaries. Some of them had broad access to information, others were so placed that could offer valuable information for foreign intelligence in the future. They had all been trained for intelligence work and equipped with advanced means of communication.

Here are some examples of relations between the self-styled conspirators and Western intelligence services.

Until recently, Poland had hosted English language lecturer at the Wroclaw Polytechnic G. Sobczyk who we found had maintained contacts with lower Silesia opposition activists, at an order from a hostile intelligence force. Sobczyk had prepared analyses of influence and possibilities of operation of the internal opponent in Poland, and had provided the intelligence with detailed information on underground activities.

David Ost, in Poland on a Fullbright Programme, provided the intelligence unit at the U.S. Embassy in Poland with anaylses of the underground, collected and passed tendencious propaganda materiasl to Radio Free Europe, and took an abortive attempt to smuggle into Poland printing equipment for illegal structures.

Q: You mentioned instigation to sabotage and terrorist actions...

A: Yes. We have been noting attempts to supply the underground with all sorts of terrorist equipment, such as explosives, detonators, firearms, paralyzing gas, bulletproof vests, or portable electroshock devices that knock the victim out of action. We have recently intercepted a shipment of firearms made to look as pens and radios which, among other things, could be tuned in to some of the communication channels used by the armed forces and the interior ministry.

To whom and to what goals is that supposed to serve? Especially since we know that this kind of equipment is being stored in the West so that it can be easily shipped into Poland if a conducive situation arises. We know who sponsors that hideous game. Western intelligence services have been relying in it on such people as:

Andrzej Wirga -- founder of "Hilfskomitee Solidarnosc" at Mogunz. Instigator of terrorist acts, who enjoys surprising tolerance and even protection by FRG special services.

Piotr Jeglinski -- a CIA agent who founded subversive publishing house "Spotkania Libertas" at CIA order and money.

Rafal Gan-Ganowicz -- Jeglinski's right hand man, a former Foreign Legion soldier, recruitment officer for adventurers into CIA teams in Afghanistan.

Marian Kalta -- prior to leaving Poland, twice penalized for theft and arms trade. Former member of pro-Solidarity committee at Lund, Sweden, later removed for quarrels and malversations.

Also recently, we have intercepted a large number of a "Manual of Subversion Agent -- Resistance Movement", shipped from the West and very much like the CIA manual for Nicaraguan Contras.

The position of intelligence services in the West is being restored rapidly after 1981. Special emphasis in their activities is placed on developing first of all undercover operations. The agency's annual budget for this purpose now exceeds 500 million U.S. dollars. A special committee, dubbed "The 208 Committee" after the room number in the Old Executive Office Building where the group used to meet, has been recently set up within the Reagan administration to supervise the swelling bunch of secret operations.

Q: What kind of role is played by the Radio Free Europe in these activities?

A: It was and continues to be the leading subversive radio station under a close supervision of U.S. special services. It has recently undergone organizational changes and had its personnel regrouped. Its new director, Grzegorz Wierzynski, 47, until recently a special assistant of the U.S. Undersecretary of State for National Security Richard Perle, was appointed a month ago.

The position of the Polish section chief, Z. Najder, is not really very strong in the new personnel configurations, despite his unquestionable merits for the U.S. intelligence. He is going to have J. Kalabinski as his new deputy, which has been, so far quite successfully opposed by the Radio Free Europe's old guard.

Another favoured candidate for this slowly position in the radio was, until recently, Janusz Onyszkiewicz and attempts had been made to bring him to the West.

The Polish section of the Radio Free Europe under the management of Z. Najder became a regular part of the system of direct cooperation with the post-solidarity structures in the West.

Najder himself is a confidential aide to the "Solidarnosc" coordinating bureau chief in Brussels, J. Milewski. How select is this company, is testified to by the fact that other aides of Milewski who calls himself the representative of Polish trade unionists are, apart from Najder who was sentenced to death in Poland for spying, other traitors with death sentences: Z. Rurarz and R. Spasowski.

And so, people of this sort are today working out programmes for the "salvation" of this country, prompting and advising the underground on how to pester the authorities.

Behind all this is money. Quite big money at that. This is why Western-based activists of post-Solidarity structures and the native underground alike are seeing every symptom of stabilization and normalization in Poland as a double defeat.

Animosities between Bujak, Walesa, and Milewski are known as rooted, among other things, in the very fact of financing of the underground by the West. This is why Walesa, although sorry after Bujak's arrest, said that in fact nothing had happened. Milewski did not conceal his satisfaction because he had one challenger less, which he had long sought using various methods. As a matter of fact, the only person in this circle to react in a dramatic manner was Irena Lasota-Zabludowska, a longtime anti-state worker in and outside Poland. No wonder: She relayed literally hundreds of thousands of dollars every year as support for the hiding Bujak and his collaborators. Now she will lose her position and the stream of cash from the American will dry up too.

Vidoje Zarkovic, president of the LCY Central Committee Presidium, opens the congress saying: Comrades, I am opening the 13th LCY Congress. Applause is heard in the hall. A choir sings the "Internationale," which is followed by more applause.

Zarkovic says: "Comrades, I greet all the delegates and guests of the 13th LCY Congress, as well as the representatives of the communist, socialist, and other workers parties, and of the national liberation and progressive movements that attend our congress." After more applause, Zarkovic proposes a working presidium of 62 members, including Vladimir Babovic, Dimce Belovksi, Jure Bilic, Mihail Bobnar, Jordan Dimovski, Stane Dolanc, Dusan Dragosavac, Veselin Djuranovic, Radisa Gacic, Majda Gaspari, Kiro Hadzivasilev, Vinko Hafner, Sinan Hasani, Svetlana Ilic, Spasoje Jelic, Georgije Jovicic, Lazar Kolisevski, Milan Kucan, Jakov Lazaroski, Nikola Ljubicic, Dragoslav Markovic, Petar Matic, Cvijetin Mijatovic, Branko Mikulic, Slobodan Milosevic, Lazar Mojsov, Mira Novak, Marko Orlandic, Milka Planinc, Hamdija Pozderac, Milijan Radovic, Milanko Renovica, Mitja Ribicic, Ivan Stambolic, Nikola Stojanovic, Stanko Stojcevic, Djordje Stojsic, Mika Spiljak, Ali Sukrija, Milan Uzelac, Dobrivoje Vidic, Radovan Vlajkovic, Azem Vlasi, Josip Vrhovec, Budimir Vukasinovic, and Vidoje Zarkovic. Dimce Belovski then takes the chair, expresses thanks for election, and says: "Comrades, between the 12th and the 13th congresses, the LCY lost 23,689 members and members of the leaderships of the LC, including several distinguished giants of our revolutionary movement who were members of the highest leaderships of the Communist Party of Yugoslavia or the LCY, in earlier times." He mentions Vladimir Bakaric, Djordja Kostic, Bogoljub Nedeljkovic, Nikola Raznjatovic, Nevena Bubanj-Dolasevic, and Vujo Lukic, and calls for a minute's silence.

Belovski proposes that delegations lay flowers at Tito's tomb and place wreaths at the tombs of the people's heroes on Kalemegdan and the Belgrade Liberators' Cemetery. A delegation of the LC of Slovenia will lay flowers at Edvard Kardelj's tomb in Ljubljana on behalf of the congress. The delegations are elected unanimously.

He also greets "the heads of the diplomatic mission accredited in Belgrade who are attending our congress. [applause]"

At 0836 GMT, Belovski proposes to the congress that it adopt the rules of procedures as amended at the LCY Central Committee session on 24 June at the proposal of the LCY Presidium. Belovski proposes the formal amendment, explaining it as follows: "To put it simply, the point at stake is that the elections for LCY organs require a two-thirds majority, and not a simple majority." The Rules of Procedure as amended are adopted without discussion and with no dissenting vote. Belovski notes that the congress members with a vote are the delegates elected at the communal and other respective LC conferences, at the republican congress, the provincial conferences, and the Yugoslav People's Army LC Conference, and the members of the LCY Central Committee, of the LCY Commission for Statute Problems, and of the Control Commission. The last three cannot vote on the reports of the bodies to which they belong.

Belovski proposes, and the congress adopts the following agenda:

"1. Election of the working bodies of the congress;

"2. Verification of the credentials of the delegates;

"3. Report on the work done between the 12th and the 13th LCY Congresses by the following organs: the LCY Central Committee; the LCY Commission for Statute Questions; and the LCY Control Commission;

"4. Report "The LCY in the Struggle for the Further Development of Socialist, Self-Managing, and National Yugoslavia;

"5. Election of election commissions, and of their presidia and their presidents;

"6. Discussion in the commissons of the reports of the LCY organs, on the main report, and on the draft documents of the 13th LCY Congress;

"7. Adoption of the resolutions of the 13th LCY Congress, and of the amendments to the LCY Statute;

"8. Election of the LCY Organs: the LCY Central Committee, the LCY Commission for Statute Questions, and the LCY Control Commisson."

Under the first point of the agenda, Belovski proposes a commission for drafting the proposed resolutions of the 13th LCY Congress; a commission for drafting the amendments to the LCY Statute; a commission for verifying the credentials of the delegates; a commission for the election of the LCY organs; a commission for proposals and petitions; a commission for editing and publishing the documents and decisions of the 13th congress; and a secretariat of the congress. The members and presidents of the commisson are all elected without discussion and without a vote against the proposals circulated in advance to the congress members.

The second point of the agenda is postponed until later, and Belovski proposes under the third point that reports of the LCY organs, which have been printed and distributed, that they be taken as read and that the discusson be held in commissions. This is adopted unanimously, and Belovski proposes a break of 30 minutes.

When the session and the relay resume at 0934 GMT, Belovski asks Tito Petkovski to report on behalf of the Commission for the Verification of the Delegates' Credentials, under the second point of the agenda. Petkovski reports that the credentials have been checked and found to comply with the LCY Statute and the LCY Central Committee decision on the election of candidates. He notes that all in all, there are 1,737 delegates at the congress, of which 676 delegates are from direct production. Of these, there are 501 workers and experts from direct production, 32 individual agricultural producers; and there are 323 women. The report of the commission is adopted without discussion and without a dissenting vote.

Statutory Commission Meets

["LCY Statutory Changes -- Greater Effectiveness and Unity" - TANJUG headline]

[Text] Belgrade, June 25 (TANJUG) -- The League of Communists of Yugoslavia (LCY) is a united organization which acts on the basis of the interests of the working class, the national equality of the Yugoslav nations and nationalities, self-management socialist relations, and the common values of the Yugoslav socialist revolution. It is proceeding from this that the draft amendments to the LCY Statute submitted to the 13th LCY Congress in Belgrade have been drawn up.

In a broad and democratic discussion preceeding the congress, Yugoslav Communists took a firm stand that the LCY Statute, itself partly responsible for the crisis in society and in relations within the LCY, as chairman of the congress Commission for Statutory Questions Budimir Vukasinovic said opening the commission's work today, be amended to help change the existing situation.

In the discussion, Yugoslav Communists strongly upheld self-management and democratic decision-making, and called for the elimination of statist and techno-bureaucratic behaviour, opportunism and verbalism, as Vukasinovic said.

The draft statutory amendments devote special importance to the principle of democratic centralism, whose inadequate realization has significantly diminished the effectiveness of the LCY action, as Vukasinovic pointed out. The principle of democratic centralism is elaborated in as many as twelve of the statute articles.

The proposed amendments to the LCY Statute do not place in question the existence of the League of Communists organizations in the republics and provinces, nor their autonomy, but they do underscore the responsibility of these organizations for the unity of the LCY.

The LCY Statute, as proposed, is to undergo also other changes. If the draft amendments are adopted, it is to have 35 articles more than up to now, but, nevertheless, a text one-fifth shorter. The draft statutory amendments do not affect the key principles, but only propose that that which has not been affirmed in practice be changed.

With the proposed stronger role of the LCY Central Committee, which is in the future to be empowered to convene special congresses if programmatic and principled commitments of the LCY are violated, the role of the LCY Central Committee Presidency will be reduced to a role of a strictly political-executive organ.

The deleting of certain formulations in the existing statute, which have provided a support for the federalization of the LCY and disruptions of the LCY's unity, and have helped the strengthening of bureaucratic centralism and directives, cannot be understood as a revision, but, on the contrary, as a means of insuring greater effectiveness, as Vukasinovic said.

The draft statutory amendments propose cadre policy solutions conducive to the socializtion of the League of Communists and the strengthening of its class features. The proposed changes are to help avoid spontaneity, lack of responsibility, and decision-making in informal groups or by individuals.

The narrowing down of the prerogatives of the republican and provincial Leagues of Communists is reflected in the proposed changes regarding the election of the LCY Central Committere and its Presidency. So far, the LCY Congress only verified the LCY Central Committee members elected by the republican and provincial congresses, but is in the future itself to elect by secret ballot the Central Committee from among candidates whose number must be larger than that of the members to be elected.

Apart from the Central Committee, the LCY Congress is in future to elect also the LCY Statutory and Auditing Commissions, and, from among its own members, the Presidency.

Stojanovic Address

LD251237 Belgrade TANJUG in English 1030 GMT 25 Jun 86

[Text] Belgrade, June 25 (TANJUG) -- Carrying into effect the basic selfmanagement and constitutional right of workers to decide on the income they generate, is one of the most important tasks facing the Yugoslav Communists -- stated member of the Presidency of the League of Communists of Yugoslavia Central Commitee Nikola Stajanovic today, addressing the opening session of the congress commission on the development of selfmanagement socio-economic relations.

In order that the workers may decide independently on matters of work and development while bearing financial responsibility for their decisions, they must be free from outside non-economic pressures, said Stojanovic. He noted in this context that it was essential to strengthen the reproduction and accumulation capacities of the organizations of associated labour.

Stojanovic went on to say that the most serious effects of economic crisis in Yugoslavia had been alleviated: The country's external debt had been lowered during the past two years and was being serviced regularly.

Export and the strengthening of economic cooperation with the world must become a question of vital importance to the selfmanagers, said Stojanovic. He urged a wider and more efficacious application of modern achievements in science and technology, without which "there can be no successful integration into the international division of labour, expansion of exports, or way out of the crisis."

In his introductory remarks Stojanovic criticized the League of Communists because many of its organizations and organs engage in affairs outside their jurisdiction. Thus they link up with state organs and lose the ability of political action. Without altering essentially the content and method of its work, he said, the League of Communists has stepped up its "idling" and opened the door to a strengthening of statist, bureaucratic and other non-selfmanagement relations in decision-making.

Vidic Address

LD251254 Belgrade TANJUG in English 1124 GMT 25 Jun 86

[Quotation marks as received]

[Text] Belgrade, June 25 (TANJUG) -- Talks between the superpowers can be expected to lead to detente and a more accelerated solution to the gravest international crises "only if they are not conducted on a bipolaric line and to the detriment of third countries," said LCY Central Committee Presidency member Dobrivoje Vidic at the 13 LCY Congress which opened in Belgrade today.

"Peace in divided spheres of influence can be neither lasting nor stable", stressed Vidic speaking at a session of the LCY Commission for International Cooperation and Yugoslav Foreign Policy.

He assessed the failure to solve the vital problems of the developing world on the basis of possible international agreements as one of the chief sources of danger to world peace.

Vidic set out that Yugoslavia, as a non-aligned country, decisively calls for all measures leading to the creation of a New international Economic Order and stressed that it was no longer possible to postpone the dialogue between the developed and the developing countries.

The non-aligned countries must approach the movement's eighth summit in Harare, Vidic said, with a programme of measures aimed at strengthening joint economic cooperation and mobilizing all their internal potentials for the accelerated and comprehensive development of the developing countries.

Yugoslavia is permanently committed to the policy of non-alignment, Vidic set out. "With its independent and non-bloc character and approach to contemporary, international problems, the Movement of Non-Alignment points not only to the danger of the prolongation of bloc confrontations and the very existence of the blocs but to practical means to overcome them and leading in the long run to their disbandment.

Vidic emphasized that the movement's successful actions will continue to be of major importance to the preservation and promotion of the authentic principles of non-alignment, the strengthening of action unity, the surmounting of internal discords and conflicts and the consolidation of solidarity in the pursuit of vital goals.

He said Yugoslavia in the Movement of Non-Alignment and in the United Nations will continue to be active in the fight for world peace and security, in which the demand for general and total disarmament represents a fundamental element.

Vidic said Yugoslavia was continuing the successful development of relations with the Soviet Union, the U.S., China and the developed European countries. "Undoubtedly the existence of a political dialogue and the successful development of economic relations with these countries is of joint benefit, regardless of major differences of approach to many problems concerning international relations at times," he pointed out.

Vidic also set out that the LCY and Yugoslavia would continue to urge the consistent, comprehensive promotion of good-neighbour relations. The reciprocal willingness, he stated was not encountered in some cases.

The political campaign waged against Yugoslavia in Greece by irresponsible politicians and the press, is viewed in Yugoslavia as "a gross attack on its constitutional order and on the entire community," said Vidic. The campaign negates the existence of one of the Yugoslav nations -- the Macedonian and the Macedonian national minority in neighbouring countries, "and goes so far as to openly interfere in internal relations." This cannot but represent a major obstacle to the development of the friendly and comprehensive relations which we sincerely wish to maintain with the Greek nation and Government," Vidic stated.

He said Bulgaria too continued to deny the existence of the Macedonian nation, both in Yugoslavia and in Bulgaria where it was a minority, and to mainfest territorial pretensions. "This continues to pose a very serious problem to the development and further promotion of good-neighbour relations", he pointed out.

Albania, Vidic said, openly displays territorial pretensions, interferes in the Yugoslav nations' internal affairs in the grossest possible manner and openly lends support to the counter-revolutionary aims of Albanian separatists in Yugoslavia. Such a policy and the actions of Tirana place a heavy burden on Yugoslav-Albanian relations and threaten also to jeopardize the levels reached in existing spheres of cooperation, Vidic said.

Turning to the fact that in recent times, reactionary elements and circles abroad have stepped up political propaganda and other pressures on Yugoslavia, Vidic said that Yugoslavia expects that such activities originating in countries with which Yugoslavia maintains friendly relations be checked and prevented.

Vidic assessed that the international process of socialism has reaffirmed its vitality and represents an alternative to everything today which must be surmounted in the interest of the survival and further development of mankind.

The League of Communists of Yugoslavia regards the international workers' movement as one of the fundamental factors in overall contemporary international relations.

To this end, Vidic said, the LCY strives to preserve and in practice to further expand and develop the democratic achievements in the workers' and other progressive movements throughout the world.

The achievements were expressed to the fullest extent, Vidic assessed, in the Belgrade (1956) and the Moscow (1957) Delcarations (The renewal of state and party relations between Yugoslavia and the Soviet Union after the break with Stalin in 1948) and in the Final Document of the Berlin Conference of Communist and Workers' Parties of Europe (1976). They have also been expressed in meetings between progressive parties and the Mediterranean Movement and in other forms of multilateral cooperation pursued by certain organizations and parties in the international workers' movement, based on joint respect and equality.

"Differences in the social position of certain workers and other progressive parties and movements and in their political orientation should not present an obstacle to constructive international cooperation in the struggle fight for peace, security and social progress", Vidic said.

"Equality-based cooperation between forces of a socialist and progressive orientation, and between the socialist countries, must in no way imply a demand for bloc adherence", he stressed.

In its international cooperation, the League of Communists of Yugoslavia calls for an open, principled and well-argumented and tolerant dialogue on all vital issues and tasks faced by the modern world, Vidic said. In doing so, the LCY takes as its point of departure the right of every party to independently define its policy in accordance with the conditions in which it operates, he underlined.

Commissions Hold Sessions

LD251501 Belgrade TANJUG in English 1325 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Text] Belgrade, June 25 (TANJUG) -- The 13th League of Communists of Yugoslavia (LCY) Congress, which opened in Belgrade this morning, has resumed work in six commissions.

In the opening statement in the Commission for the Development of the Political System, LCY Presidency member Bosko Krunic characterized a stepped-up development of socialist self-management as a condition for the country to overcome the current crisis.

In the Commission for Socio-Economic Relations, LCY Presidency member Nikola Stojanovic said the most serious consequences of the economic crisis had been eased, specifying that Yugoslavia was regularly meeting the payments on its foreign debt which, as he noted, had been reduced in the past two years. If workers are autonomously to take decisions related to their own work and the country's development, it is indispensable to free work organizations of non-economic burdens, as Stojanovic said.

Opening the work of the Commission for Education, Science and Culture, LCY Presidency member Miljan Radovic underscored that it was not enough for the highest party forums to define a clear ideological platform of a socialist self-management transformation in education, science and culture, but the League of Communists had to wage a battle for the platform's implementation in the daily social practice.

In the Commission for All-People's Defense and Social Self-Protection it was underscored that the country's defense capability had been strengthened in the past four years, despite the unfavourable socio-economic conditions.

Recalling that Yugoslavia was geographically located in a region where the superpower and bloc interests intersect, and that the focus of confrontation in Europe was being shifted to the continent's south-east and the Mediterranean, LCY Central Committee member Franc Popit said Yugoslavia, which must in the long-term count with some neighbouring countries' territorial claims, continued to be guided in the modernization of its Armed Forces by the need for them not lag behind the armed forces of the neighbouring countries.

In a broad and democratic discussion preceeding the congress, Yugoslav Communists firmly called for changes in the LCY Statute which, as president of the LCY Statutory Commission Budimir Vukasinovic said in the Congress Commission for Statutory Questions, has partly been responsible for the crisis in Yugoslav society and in relations in the LCY.

Under proposed changes in the LCY Statute, the LCY Central Committee is in future to be able to take to task the republican and provincial party leaderships in cases of major departures from the adopted LCY policy. The LCY Central Committee is also to be empowered to convene special party congresses or conferences.

In the introductory statement in the Congress Commission for the Ideological-Political, Organizational, Action and Cadre Capacitation of the LCY, LCY Presidency member Hamdija Pozderac characterized democratic centralism as the most adequate organizational basis for the ideological and action unity of the LCY. Democratic centralism, as he specified, pressuposes not only a democratic dialogue and confrontation of views, but also the acceptance and consistent implementation of the decisions adopted by the majority.

Mamula Address

["Mamula: Blocks are a Major Threat to Peace" -- TANJUG headline]

[Text] Belgrade, 26 June (TANJUG) -- Military Blocks [spelling as received] and their military power have become a major source of crisis and a threat to world peace -- said Admiral Branko Mamula, federal secretary for defense speaking today in Belgrade at the 13th Congress of the League of Yugoslav Communists.

Admiral Mamula said that crisis in world affairs has become a permanent state of affairs. He assesed that the world crisis expresses itself in three ways-as a structural crisis of capitalism, as a crisis of socialism or rather different models of socialism due to different development of socialism as a world process and the crisis faced by developing countries.

Speaking of Yugoslavia's security Mamula said that the most disturbing factor is stockpiling of a new generation of weapons in Europe especially in the south of the continent. The Middle East crisis and the situation in the Mediterranean can under certain conditions threaten other regions including the Balkans Mamula said.

Mamula pointed out that Yugoslavia will continue and build her defenses based on massive armed forces as an answer to potentially technically superior aggressor. Yugoslav Armed Forces are stable and have not had any problems within which would be a problem to the society -- Mamula said and added that the development of the Armed Forces will continue. In accordance with the capacities of Yugoslav economy.

ZARKOVIC ASSESSES LCY INTERCONGRESS ACTIVITY

AU251550 Belgrade BORA in Serbo-Croatian 20 Jun 86 p 2

[Interview with Vidoje Zarkovic, president of the LCY Central Committee Presidium, by Milan Topolovacki, editor of Belgrade Television, on 16 May and carried by Yugoslav Radio and Television in the "Between the Two Congresses" program "Last Night" -- Uppercase Passages published in boldface in boxed-in format within the text of the interview]

[Text] [Topolovacki] Comrade President. Tito literally said on several occasions that without the LCY there would also be no Yugoslavia. What can you tell us about the current significance of this Tito's idea?

[Zarkovic] By placing themselves at the head of the armed struggle of our peoples 45 years ago and initiating the socialist revolution, the Yugoslav Communists assumed responsibility for the fate of our country, Zarkovic said. Everything that has happened since then and is happening now in our land has been most directly connected with the leading role of the Communist Party of Yugoslavia and the LCY.

To a great extent the Communists must be credited with the achievements accomplished in the revolution and postwar construction, with the reconstruction and buildup of Yugoslavia on the basis of socialist self-management and complete national equality, and with the great transformations in the material and social development of our country. But, in the same way, the Communists also bear a great part of the responsibility for everything that has not been accomplished but could have been accomplished, and for mistakes, slowdowns, and deformities in our development.

This responsibilty of the LCY has also been consolidated by the SFRY Constitution. As you know, the Constitution includes a provision stating that the LCY is the force whose duty it is to move all political activities with the aim of defending the achievements of the revolution and of its further development. Tito frequently called attention to this responsibility of the LCY because he knew that the way our community would develop and the course our revolution would follow depended on the way the LC fulfilled this responsibility. The relevance of this idea of Tito's and of this provision of the SFRY Constitution is all the greater today because our society is passing through an economic crisis as well as other crises, and because we are encountering stagnation and deformities in the development of socialist self-management and, I dare say, a certain devaluation of some values that have emerged from our revolution.

Belated Signals

These problems in our society as well as the weaknesses and shortcomings in the work of the LCY and its responsibility for the growing crisis situation are very openly and very critically and self-critically discussed in the LCY. All this has been discussed especially openly, critically, and self-critically after the 13th session of the LCY Central Committee and the general party debate initiated by the session.

Our present difficulties have only partly resulted from objective circumstances and causes. To a greatest extent they are a consequence of subjective shortcomings, including the shortcomings in the work of the LCY and in the fulfillment of its leading ideological-political role in accordance with the aforementioned provision of the SFRY Constitution. The LC was late or, to put it better, it acted with a certain delay in facing and elucidating the trends that paved the way to the economic crisis and the crisis situation in our society. I think that we were late and insufficiently decisive in our reaction to increased voluntarism in the economic sphere and the unrealistic growth of investments in the mid-seventies, to the great disproportions between production and consumption which existed in our society for a long time, to the easy going approach which led to incurring new foreign debts, to the slow adaptation to changes in world market, and so forth.

I also believe that the LC was rather late -- if I may put it this way -- in sounding the alarm signal for more resolute resistance against certain tendencies that distorted the essence of development of socioeconomic relations, the essence that has been established in the foundation of the SFRY Constitution and in the decisions of the 10th and 11th LCY Congresses.

As I have said, the LCY has self-critically discussed all this during the period between the 12th and the 13th congresses. During that period it has accomplished quite a great deal as the vanguard in the struggle against the economic crisis and the crisis situation in society, especially after the 13th session of the LCY Central Committee and the general party debate.

First and foremost, the LC has more completely elucidated the causes that have brought us to this situation and it has elucidated them very objectively and comprehensively and by engaging the largest circle of scientific and public workers in this task. Furthermore, it has indicated the directions for a way out of these difficulties. It has also done a great deal in promoting overall social activities to reduce these difficulties, to prevent them from assuming even larger dimensions, and to enable us to begin gradually to overcome them.

Three Most Important Tasks

It is expected that the 13th LCY Congress will even more thoroughly elucidate all this and point out even more concretely the direction of our activities need to take to enable us to overcome the economic crisis and the crisis situation in our society more quickly. I think that the 13th congress will make a great contribution to strengthening society's awareness of the fact that we cannot solve these difficult problems facing us in any other way but by increasing our efforts, by improving our work, and by coming to grips with them more boldly. This is not the first time in the history of the LCY and our society that they face difficulties and that they are overcoming these difficulties by boldly coming to grips with them.

The most important thing is to define even more concretely the main directions of activity of the LCY as the leading ideological-political force to make it possible for us to overcome these difficulties more quickly. In preparing the draft documents of the 13th congress the Central Committee has directed special attention toward three tasks.

One of these tasks is to promote and accelerate the development of socialist self-managment, because it is only on this basis that we can overcome the economic crisis and the crisis situation in other spheres. The second task is to accelerate the activities aimed at strengthening the unity of our community and of the LCY. For it is only from strengthening unity and not from divisions that we can draw the strength to overcome these difficulties more quickly. And the third task is to more quickly abandon extensive economic operations because the possibilities for further dynamic and stable development on the basis of extensive economic operations have been exhausted, and to understand that there can be no dynamic development without more intensive ecoomic operations, that is, without better and more qualitative work, higher product quality, expansion of markets, more rapid application of scientific-technological achievements, and so forth.

[Topolovacki] Does it not seem to you that the piling-up of many conclusions and documents, long meetings of party forums, and inefficiency in the fulfillment of set tasks in fact represent an expression of political pragmatism? In your opinion, what must the LCY change in its work methods to be able to act more effectively?

[Zarkovic] Everything that you hve listed certainly attests to the existence of strong pragmatism in the political activity of LCY organizations. However, despite all this, we must not forget that meetings and conclusions are necessary in the political work of the LC and other sociopolitical organizations. It goes without saying that we must strive to make these meetings and conclusions shorter and ensure that they will promote to a greater extent the organization and development of the LC's practical activities, that is, that they will not become a goal unto themselves.

For, how will the LC otherwise be able to democratically elucidate current contradictions in the society and unify the ideological-political positions on the questions imposed by life if it does not hold discussions at its meetings and does not adopt the relevant conclusions?

The Weakest Point -- Action Unity

Following the general party debate prompted by the 13th session of the LCY Central Committee, party members explicitly demanded of their leadership to discuss the numerous open questions in relation to which ideological-political differences existed in the society and in the LCY and to adopt views on them. They demanded that the problem of relations in the SR of Serbia and the LC of Serbia be discussed, that the fulfillment of the constitutional concept of the Yuguslav Federation be critically analyzed, that the functioning of our political system be criticially analyzed, that the problems of social policy and employment in our society be examined, that the LCY should contribute to overcoming the ideological differences that existed in relation to the reform of the economic system in accordance with the Long-Term Economic Stabilization Program. In other words, that the reform of the planning and the foreign exchange systems and the reform of the system of stimulating the underdeveloped republics and the Province of Kosovo, and that the LCY should examine the social structure and the methods of activity of the LC organization and review the ideological-political problems of the medium-term plan, and so forth. Accordingly the Central Committee had to include these questions in its agenda and adopt views on them. If we also add to this the tasks which the Central Committee had in preparations for the 13th LCY Congress, then it becomes understandable that it had to hold several sessions.

However, a great shortcoming in the LCY's work is its insufficient activeness in carrying out views, in implementing its conclusions. For conclusions are worth only as much as they are implemented in practice. If conclusions are not carried out, if they are not implemented, then the entire effort invested in preparing them and in preparing the ideological-political views has been in vain. And among us the weakest point is really the action unity of the LCY in the sense that there is a lack of unified action in implementing the policy that has been agreed upon. Unfortunately, this is not a weakness of the LC alone; shortcomings of this type also manifest themselves in the society as a whole because many of our normative acts, legal and self-managing acts as well as laws, are insufficiently implemented.

I think that in the coming period the LCY leaderships, too, will have to strengthen their executive function. They cannot behave as though their only task were to adopt views and conclusions but fail to concern themselves enough with the fate of these views and conclusions. Accordingly, they will have to more effectively organize themselves and adapt their work methods to a greater extent to this requirement.

As I have already said, one of the reasons why the LC has been ineffective in the implementation of its views also lies in the fact that the principle of democratic centralism has been weakened and that therefore individual organizations and individual communists behave as though the views adopted by their forums meant nothing to them. They behave as though it were not necessary for them to implement them.

In the coming period, the LC will have to proceed more from the fact that it can strengthen its now shaken reputation as the vanguard only as much as it will contribute to changing the situation and as much as to which it will develop practical actions and not to the extent to which it will describe the situation.

Therefore, the LC must more quickly abandon the work methods that are characterized by descriptions of the situation and by issuing statements. It must act to develop as much as possible the revolutionary actions of the working people, revolutionary actions aimed at changing the situation and at advancing and further developing our revolution.

All this is naturally connected with the question of responsibility of the LC as a whole and of its leadership in particular. For, failures to implement adopted policies indicate a lack of responsibility that must be intensified in the coming period.

[Topolovacki] Would you kindly comment on this with an example?

[Zarkovic] Well, the most conspicuous example is provided by the Long-Term Economic Stabilization Program. We engaged the widest circle of the most able experts, scientific workers, and economic officials to prepare that program. All political leaderships of the country adopted the program. However, the program is being inconsistently and only halfway implemented. Partial interests are very strong in this connection and there is a tendency to only implement that part of the program which corresponds to these partial interests and not to joint interests. It is not abnormal that in a democratic society such as ours that partial interests manifest themselves. After all, this is what we have wanted to achieve through our delegate system, but to achieve, naturally, to the extent that these interests are in accord with socialism and self-management. However, our weakness is that we do not struggle enough for a more rapid synthesis of these interests, that we do not struggle enough to overcome these partial interests, and that we do not struggle enough to make the organs whose duty it is to implement the adopted policy to more efficiently fulfill their tasks.

[Topolovacki] As you have said yourself, polycentric statism is the reality that weakens the unity of the LCY and of society. What then must the LCY do in the coming period to prevent or at least diminish the effect of this statism?

[Zarkovic] It is a fact that in recent years bureaucratic statism in a polycentric form has been strengthened and this means that it has been strengthened at the levels of all our sociopolitical communities from communes through republics and provinces to the federation.

As far as the attitude of polycentric statism toward socialist self-management is concerned, this attitude is the same as that of the centralist statism. Both the polycentric and centralist statisms strive to drive back socialist self-management and to take into their own hands those social tasks which should be performed by the working people organized as self-managers in associated labor. But, at the same time, the polycentric statisms do not only clash with the socialist self-management but also among themselves, thereby contributing a great deal to weakening the unity of the country and the LCY.

It goes without saying that polycentric statism and its negative conequences cannot be overcome by returning to statist centralism. I think that our unity would not be strengthened at all this way. It would be just as weak as it is under conditions of polycentrism. After all, we have had the historical experience of statist centralism and we know to what troubles it led.

Therefore we can only overcome the polycentric as well as any other statisms by struggling to more consistently implement the position of workers and working people in associated labor according to the Constitution and to more consistently implement those constutitional provisions which provide for the workers organized as self-managers in associated labor to take into their own hands the affairs of expanded and general social reproduction and to push technocracy and bureaucracy, either centralist or polycentric, out of the way.

It goes without saying that we must act in several concrete areeas to achieve this and to develop socialist self-management. We have striven in the resolutions for the 13th LCY Congress to more concretely define the tasks of Communists in this respect. For this reason I will only briefly list some of these tasks.

The Delegate System is Formalized

It is necessary for us, first and foremost, to strengthen self-management in the basic organizations of associated labor. In the coming period the LC will resolutely strive to ensure that the basic organizations of associated labor continue to develop as the forms of fulfillment of direct self-managing rights of the working people in them and as the cells of development of self-management along the entire chain of work and creative activity in our society. It will strive to ensure that the basic organizations become the starting foundations of our society's integration on the basis of self-management to a greater extent than they are now. In other words, the LC will resist all those tendencies which try to diminish the role and importance of the basic organizations of associated labor as the basic cells of self-management, but, at the same time, it will also resist all dogmas and prejudices about the omnipotence of associated labor in its cellular forms, striving to ensure that the basic organizations will only be cells within a system of freely integrated associated labor. To be able to achieve this, we will have to struggle more resolutely than we have done until now against all group ownership tendencies within the organizations of associated labor. We will also have to more resolutely struggle against the anarchic tendencies to separate self-managing rights from self-managing obligations and responsibilities. We will have to develop the basic organizations to a greater extent as the peculiar commodity producers, ensuring thereby that the working people in them will be responsible both for the decisions made by them and for the way they manage social resources to a greater extent than is the case now.

Furthermore, I think that we will have to devote much greater attention to the development of the delegate system. We will have to do this all the more becaue the great opportunities provided by the delegate system for involving broad -- let me say, million-strong -- masses of the working people in decisionmaking on all social affairs have not been exhausted by far.

Conditions Have Been Created for Overcoming the Crisis

[Topolovacki] The country's economic as well as political crisis represents the main characteristic of the period between the 12th and the 13th LCY Congresses. In your opinion, what should characterize the period between the next two congresses?

[Zarkovic] Gradually emerging from the economic crisis and the crisis situation in other spheres of life in which our country now finds itself and opening up the long-term prospects for dynamic development under stable conditions should be, that is, I think it will be, the main characteristic of the period between the next two congresses. All the necessary conditions have been achieved for this characterization of that period. On the one hand, the LCY has elucidated the causes of our economic crisis and other difficulties and pointed out the directions of activities to overcome these difficulties and emerge from this situation. On the other hand, the society has become aware that we can only emerge from these difficulties by strengthening our unity and not by divisions and by developing self-management and not statism. It has further become aware that it is impossible to emerge from these difficulties without increased and even greater efforts, without even greater self-denials, without even better and more qualitative work, and without even greater reliance on our own forces. The awareness has also matured in the society that the Long-Term Economic Stabilization Program can only be carried out if we continue to reorganize ourselves more quickly, if we implement the program as a whole, and if we more consistently consider our common interests and coordinate the partial interests on the basis of common interests. The 13th LCY Congress that is before us now will even further deepen our appraisals of the causes of the crisis and broaden our realization of the directions of activities aimed at overcoming this crisis. And I think that the 13th congress will stimulate the Communists and all subjective factors of the system to more quickly act to overcome these serious difficulties which our society faces today.

We can be confident that the period between the next two congresses will be marked as a period in which the crisis has been successfully overcome because our working people are firmly linked to the LCY's strategic orientations concerning the development of socialist self-management and the complete equality of our peoples and nationalities and because they are firmly resolved to allow no one to turn us from these strategic orientations. But, for their part, they will also do everything in their power to ensure that we will more quickly eliminate from the system and from practice everything that hinders our advance to fulfilling these our general goals and, most certainly, everything that moves us further away from them.

OUR WEAKNESS ENCOURAGES ADVERSARIES

In the coming period the LC must be more aggressive and more resolute in its ideological-political activity and it must be so in two directions. On the one hand, it must act more quickly to expose all contradictions encountered by our society from the revolutionary Marxist positions. And on the other hand, it must more resolutely oppose those ideological and political tendencies and currents in our society which, acting from the counterrevolutionary positions of the bourgeois right or from the positions of administratiave socialism, want to turn back the wheels of history and turn our development away from the course of socialist self-management. These forces have been strengthened under the conditions of our crisis and I think that in the coming period the LC should more resolutely struggle against them. But the LC will make the biggest contribution if it more successfully solves our social problems. For, the strength of our adversaries does not derive either from their numbers or from the force of their ideas but, first and foremost, from our weaknesses.

THE WORKERS CLASS NEEDS ITS EFFECTIVE STATE

We will have to do much more to explain certain unclear elements concerning the role of the state in our system. On the one hand, we must resist any spontaneous expansion of the state's authority in managing the affairs of social reproduction. On the other hand, we must more resolutely demand that the state much more effectively perform those of its functions which have been placed under its authority. We oppose statism, but we do not oppose the role of the state in our system as an instrument in the hands of workers and working people organized on the basis of self-management.... The extent to which the state ineffectively fulfills this role that it has is best evidenced by the extent to which certain rights of the working people and citizens before the organs of authority are not fulfilled, by the extent to which the court practice is slow, by the extent to which organs fail to perform their function of protecting social property, and so forth.... But let me not go on too long with this; we will have to discuss all these problems in much greater details at the 13th LCY Congress.

WHAT MUST BE CHANGED

You have asked me what the LC should change within itself to be able to more successfully accomplish these tasks.

I THINK THAT, FIRST AND FOREMOST, IT MUST BE TO A GREATER EXTENT AN ORGANIZATION OF THE WORKERS CLASS AND THE WORKING PEOPLE BOTH IN ITS COMPOSITION AND IN ITS METHOD OF WORK AND MUST EXPRESS THEIR INTERESTS AND THEIR VIEWS. FOR, THE WORKERS CLASS AND THE WORKING PEOPLE REPRESENT THE SOCIAL CATEGORY THAT HAS THE HIGHEST INTEREST IN SOCIALIST SELF-MANAGEMENT, THE UNITY OF THE YUGOSLAV COMMUNITY, AND MORE QUALITATIVE ECONOMIC OPERATIONS.

Furthermore I think that the LC must democratize its internal relations to a greater extent to make it possible for the energy of the million-strong LC membership body to even more strongly manifest itself. Its work cannot be reduced to the activities of forums, nor can it well determine its policy this way. And this policy most certainly cannot be successfully implemented without the revolutionary action and broadest initiative of members. And if members are to be able to be more active in implementing the policy, they must also be more active in forming it.

THE LC MUST ALSO STRENGTHEN ITS UNITY ON THE BASIS OF THE PRINCIPLE OF DEMOCRATIC CENTRALISM. RECENTLY THIS PRINCIPLE HAS BEGUN TO BE VIOLATED AND THIS SITUATION HAS SERIOUSLY WEAKENED THE LC'S ACTION CAPABILITY.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON VISIT BY IRAN'S VELAYATI

Meets Strougal

HAVLIN ADDRESSES PRAGUE UNIVERSITIES MEETING

LD261932 Prague Domestic Service in Czech 1330 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Text] Josef Havlin, secretary of the CPCZ Central Committee, addressed today a statewide aktiv of party and state officials of Prague universities. He stressed that universities are, through their structure, concentrations of top scientists and pedagogues, representatives of many scientific branches and entire schools, predestined for presenting to top party and state organs topics and recommendations which would push forward the frontiers of knowledge and point to completely new paths and possibilities of problem solving which are being brought about by the times. The problems of further development of our society within the framework of the development of the entire socialist community, including the problems of university education, are so new that their solution precludes the use of present methods by rigid thought processes. One has to take into account relatively fast changes of the economic and social climate. Stemming from this is the need for deepening and improving the quality of prognostic activity. Universities cannot be merely institutions for handing over facts and information, Josef Havlin said. One must progress more and more from teaching facts to teaching difficult and demanding tasks, which cope with a growing quantity of more and more complex scientific-research data. In concluding his address, Josef Havlin expressed the conviction that the deliberations of the statewide aktiv have united opinions and policies in safeguarding the tasks at universities. Participants in the aktiv have sent a letter to the CPCZ Central Committee.

[Text] Stockholm, 26 Jun (ADN) -- In the presence of Erich Honecker and Ingvar Carlsson and other representatives of the two states, important agreements between the GDR and Sweden were signed in Stockholm today, after the successful conclusion of the official talks.

The foreign trade ministers of the two countries, Gerhard Beil and Mats Hellstroem, signed a program on the development of trade and economic relations. The main directions contained in it for the expansion of economic, industrial, and technical cooperation take into account the new quality and the increased dimensions of economic relations between the two countries and are intended to further increase their long-term nature and stability. They also stress the firm intention to continue the proven forms of cooperation between the GDR foreign trade enterprises and combines and Swedish firms in the realization of important projects in both countries and in third markets and to provide the necessarey government support.

The foreign ministers of the GDR and Sweden, Oskard Fischer and Sten Anderson, also signed three other agreements:

-- An agreement on the avoidance of double taxation in the sphere of taxation of income and capital comprehensively regulates the tax treatment of mutual economic and scientific-technical activities of the GDR and Sweden. This creates stable trade policy conditions in this area that meet the interests of the two states and thus contributes to the further deepening of cooperation between the two states;

-- An agreement on judicial assistance in criminal cases regulates cooperation between the responsible bodies of the GDR and Sweden in the rendering of judicial assistance by making available judicial documents, meeting requests for the taking of evidence, and the taking over by each state of the prosecution of its own citizens who have committed a criminal act in the other country that is party to the agreement.

An agreement on dispensing with the certification of documents means that in the future no addition legalization is necessary by the responsible bodies of the country in which they are presented. This will make the use of documents by the citizens of both treaty states much easier.

Honecker Meets With Carlsson

LD262046 East Berlin ADN International Service in German 1537 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Text] Stockholm, 26 Jun (ADN) -- Erich Honecker, general secretary of the SED Central Committee and chairman of the GDR State Council, and Ingvar Carlsson, prime minister of Sweden, continued their discussions on Thursday. The talks centered on the exchange of views on international questions that began yesterday.

The two sides expressed their concern about the aggravated international situation. They described the reduction of worldwide tensions, a halt to the arms race on earth and the prevention of it spreading to space as the most decisive tasks of the present.

Erich Honecker underlined the GDR's determination to make the greatest possible contribution to the stabilization of world peace. The future destiny of the entire civilization is at stake today. Mankind must not come to an end in a nuclear inferno. A new, responsible approach to questions on which war or peace depend is required. The GDR therefore gives its full support to the Soviet Union's peace program of January this year. It offers mankind the opportunity to enter the year 2000 without nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction.

In his statements, Erich Honecker referred to the appeal by the Warsaw Pact states of 11 June 86 on the reduction of armed forces and conventional arms in Europe. With this appeal, addressed to the NATO members and all European countries, the socialist states have underlined and stated more precisely their comprehensive disarmament program.

It covers all weapons types, whether nuclear, chemical, or conventional, and includes all the necessary control measures, both national measures and international procedures, right down to on-site inspection. Erich Honecker described this program as a new, immediately negotiable basis for effective disarmament steps.

In the talks, the conviction was expressed that it is possible to bring about a change for the better in international relations if every state makes an active contribution, and if all those interested in peace and peaceful coexistence unite forces.

Erich Honecker and Ingvar Carlsson in particular spoke in favor of a halt to all nuclear tests, which would be an important step on the path of overcoming the nuclear arms race.

Erich Honecker paid tribute to the Swedish efforts for an effective reduction in military confrontation, as expressed, among other things, in the proposal for a zone free of theater nuclear weapons in central Europe and in the active commitment within the framework of the 6-state initiative. He spoke about the intensive efforts of the GDR to set in motion negotiations on the creation of a corridor free of theater nuclear weapons along the dividing line between the Warsaw Pact and NATO. In this the GDR is acting in the spirit of Olof Palme.

In their exchange of views on nuclear and chemical weapon-free zones, the partners in the talks said that they regard their activities aimed at the creation of such areas as a specific contribution in the international struggle to preserve peace.

The partners in the talks expressed the hope that all contentious international questions will be solved by peaceful means. The both stressed that the GDR and Sweden would in the future not let up in their efforts to promote the expansion of peaceful relations between the peoples and states and at the same time to contribute to reducing confrontation in international relations.

Both sides favored of the Stockholm Conference on Security and Confidence-Building Measures in Europe reaching positive results.

Erich Honecker and Ingvar Carlsson expressed the conviction at the end of their talks, which were conducted in a friendly atmosphere, that the positive results of their discussions would contribute towards a further deepening of the friendly relations between the GDR and Sweden, which would also have positive effects internationally.

Erich Honecker invited Ingvar Carlsson to make an official visit to the GDR, which was accepted (?with thanks) by the Swedish prime minister.

Honecker Meets Party Chairman

LD262138 East Berlin ADN International Service in German 1637 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Text] Stockholm, 26 Jun (ADN) -- Erich Honecker, general secretary of the SED Central Committee, had a talk on Thursday in his residence in Stockholm with Rolf Hagel, chairman of the Workers' Party (Communists), about topical questions relating to the joint struggle for the preservation of peace and cooperation between the two parties.

Erich Honecker spoke about the successful realization of the decisions of the 11th SED Congress. He stressed that the elections on 8 June constituted a unanimous decision by the citizens of the GDR in favor of the continuation of the path of political stability, economic dynamism, and the securing of peace.

Rolf Hagel, who headed the delegation of the Workers' Party (Communists) to the 11th SED Congress, expressed his high regard for the impressive development of the GDR as a stable factor of peace and socialism in the heart of Europe. Through their imaginative and constructive policy, the socialist states are making a decisive contribution to curbing the most aggressive circles of imperialism and to securing peace.

Erich Honecker and Rolf Hagel agreed in affirming that, in view of the dangerous world situation, brought about as a result of the continued arms escalation and confrontation policy of the Reagan administration and its closest allies, the prevention of the nuclear self-destruction of mankind and the securing of peaceful relations between the states has become a decisive precondition for further social progress in the world.

The partners in the talks agreed that the far-reaching, concrete, and realistic proposals made by the Soviet Union and the Warsaw Pact to liberate the world from nuclear weapons and other means of mass destruction by the year 2000, and for a significant reduction in conventional armed forces and armaments in Europe, are in complete agreement with the vital interests of the people. The peoples hope that the United States and NATO will take advantage of this opportunity, so that the decisive change comprised in a reduction in military confrontation and in disarmament can take place in honest negotiations. The world does not need any so-called strategic defense initiatives, but real strategic peace iniatives.

Erich Honecker paid tribute to the active support of the Workers' Party (Communists) for peace, for friendly Swedish relations with the GDR, the Soviet Union and other socialist states, and for its solidarity with the national and social liberation movements.

He recalled the living traditions of the common struggle of the German and Swedish Communists against fascism and war and wished the Swedish comrades the best of success in the realization of their goals.

The partners in the talks affirmed that the relations between the two parties are developing well in the spirit of the proven principles of the communist movement.

Present at the talk were: Alf Loevenborg, deputy chairman of the Workers Party (Communists); John Takman, member of the Politburo of the Workers Party (Communists) Central Committee; Manfred Schmidt, GDR ambassador in Sweden, and Heinz Lehmann, deputy head of the International Relations Department of the SED Central Committee.

Honecker, Carlsson View Talks

LD262349 East Berlin Voice of GDR Domestic Service in German 1605 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Excerpts] Late this afternoon the official talks between Prime Minister Ingvar Carlsson and Erich Honecker, general secretary of the SED Central Committee and GDR State Council chairman in Stockholm concluded.

Following the official talks, several agreements were signed in the presence of Erich Honecker and Ingvar Carlsson and other personalities from the two countries, agreements to promote the further development of our relations with the Kingdom of Sweden. Following this, Erich Honecker and his host faced questions from journalists. Erich Honecker commented on GDR-Swedish relations and on the Stockholm conference.

[Begin Honecker recording] I think that the international authority of Sweden and Swedish foreign policy are a weighty contribution to securing peace in the world. Contributing to this is the fact that the GDR and Sweden work closely together in order to increase the chance that world peace is preserved. We want the Stockholm conference to end with good results and we have laid the basis for this in the form of the Helsinki Final Act. I, too, am a signatory of the Helsinki Final Act. From our side one can expect every accomodation, but you know where the resistance and no readiness comes from, as in Bern. [end recording]

[Correspondent Albrecht Molle] I had the opportunity to interview Swedish Prime Minister Ingvar Carlsson briefly for GDR radio.

[Begin recording] [Molle] May I ask you perhaps briefly and in German to give an account of your talks with Mr Honecker?

[Carlsson in German] Yesterday we had 2 and 1/2 hours of discussions on bilateral and some international issues. The bilateral issues concentrated particularly on trade. We have an exchange of trade, but we believe that in both countries an increase in these contacts is possible. We now have a formal agreement to have such a development.

[Molle] Perhaps a few sentences about the international issues that were discussed?

[Carlsson] We discussed the Stockholm conference. The Swedish Government is very interested in ensuring that this conference is successful. We have only a few months left for work. I believe that both our governments agree that it is an important conference, and that we ought to have a proper final document.

[Molle] Prime Minister, will this dialogue between the GDR and Sweden be continued? In other words, have you received an invitation to visit the GDR and. if so, have you accepted it?

[Carlsson] Yes, I have received an invitiation and I have said yes. I can also tell you that our foreign trade minister, Hellstrom, will visit the Leipzig Fair at the end of Agusut. We have had a very constructive discussion about our trade cooperation and we have also discussed environmental questions, energy cooperation. These two bilateral questions were in my view the most important. We have discussed various areas, but I will not go into details here. In general, we are to broaden and deepen our cooperation, and we believe that we have good opportunities here because the GDR and Sweden are both industrialized countries and have technical competence. [end recording]

HONECKER VIEWS RELATIONS WITH SWEDEN, FRG

PM261141 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 24 Jun 86 p 13

[Interview with Erich Honecker, chairman of the GDR Council of State, by Christina Jutterstrom and Disa Hastad: "An Antifascist of the Old School"]

[Text] Tomorrow GDR party and state head Erich Honecker comes to Stockholm. He will hold talks with Prime Minister Ingvar Carlsson and lunch with the king and queen. His visit returns the visit to the GDR by Olof Palme 2 years ago.

DAGENS NYHETER Chief Editor Christina Jutterstrom and East European correspondent Disa Hastad interviewed him in East Berlin last week.

DAGENS NYHETER: The warm reception given to our late Prime Minister Olof Palme in Stralsund 2 years ago gave us Swedish journalists the impression that the old ties between our countries are still lively. What does this mean to the GDR?

Erich Honecker: That is a correct impression. The political, economic, cultural, and scientific ties between our peoples which are a result of the close contacts during the 17th and 18th centuries have left traces which have been preserved right up to our own times.

For us, keeping German-Swedish history alive also means placing the humanist values, all the artistic, spiritual, and scientific results achieved as a result of mutual efforts, at the service of our peoples so that we can understand each other and live well together. There have been many such achievements, especially since the din of the Thirty Years War died away.

It is against this background that we in the GDR are also celebrating the 200th anniversary of the death of the Stralsund-born chemist, Wilhelm Scheele, whose magnificent scientific achievements were so closely connected with Sweden.

DAGENS NYHETER: When were you last in Sweden?

Erich Honecker: Unfortunately it was in connection with a tragic occasion -- Olof Palme's funeral. Olof Palme and I got to know each other in Greifswald and Stralsund. Our conversations were warm and deep. I had the impression that they were also important to Olof Palme.

DAGENS NYHETER: Sweden now has agreements with many countries which means that visas are no longer required for its citizens to visit Bulgaria, Romania, and Hungary, for example. Is such an agreement desirable between Sweden and the GDR too?

Erich Honecker: Talks about this are being held at present. There is friendly traffic. People go to Sweden in connection with family reunifications.

DAGENS NYHETER: What arguments are there against an agreement to eliminate visas on your side?

Erich Honecker: For a long time we were a country under construction. Now we can tackle such issues as tourism. Here we must use the practices that apply between countries with different systems. But this is a process, and tourist traffic can be improved. The will is there, but there is also the currency question.

DAGENS NYHETER: What are the most important questions that you will be discussing with the Swedish Government during your visit to Sweden?

Erich Honecker: I am looking forward with great expectation to my talks with Prime Minister Ingvar Carlsson. They will cover the international situation, as well as bilateral questions. You understand of course that I do not want to make predictions about the talks.

Naturally, I ascribe special importance to the exchange of views on the current, most urgent questions -- arms limitation and disarmament, the continuation of the CSCE process, and the solution of regional conflicts.

As far as bilateral questions are concerned, we want to exchange ideas with the Swedish side in those areas in which there is in our view a mutual interest in deepening and further developing relations.

This covers political dialogue, commercial and industrial relations, and relations in the fields of environmental protection, communications, science and culture, school and health care systems, and others.

The GDR attaches great importance to cooperation in the Baltic region, particularly where agreements covering the saving of human life and cooperation in combating pollution in the Baltic are concerned, including the delineation of areas of responsibility.

Thus there are many different questions to discuss. The aim behind everything is to make a contribution to an improvement of the international climate through fruitful, indeed exemplary relations, in the spirit of peaceful coexistence.

DAGENS NYHETER: Is it possible that our two countries could work together for an environmental program, even an international program of this type?

Erich Honecker: Yes, since we have good lessons from such cooperation. The foundation for this is the government agreement between our two countries signed 10 years ago.

I also remember the multiplicity of joint activities which take place within the framework of the Baltic convention and the convention on long-range cross-border air pollution.

The GDR is prepared to continue to expand its existing contacts with Sweden and other countries because active environmental care is only possible today through international cooperation.

DAGENS NYHETER: What is your view of the peaceful use of nuclear power after the reactor accident at Chernobyl in the Soviet Union?

Erich Honecker: Nuclear power does play a certain role in our energy program. But only 3 percent of our total energy requirements are met by it at present. As in the past, the major part of our energy requirements -- 90 percent -- are met by coal.

Safety equipment and operating regulations in the GDR are of a high standard, and of course we will continue to pay a great deal of attention to these questions.

We support Mikhail Gorbachev's proposals for deepening international cooperation on the peaceful exploitation of nuclear energy, which, from the international viewpoint, is something we cannot do without in the short term.

We also support Gorbachev's initiative for convening an international conference under the aegis of the IAEA.

The reactor accident in Chernobyl has strengthened our conviction that we should move even more forcefully against the danger which emanates from the military misuse of nuclear energy.
